There Are So Many If's

The news pages have been filled, of late, with so many apparently conflicting stories about rubber, all from apparently informed sources, that the subject should not be laid aside without considering further some important angles.

There is one sure way to steer a safe course through the bewildering mass of contradictory reports. That is to keep in mind what we have been insisting for months, from time to time—

Rubber is a problem only of time and critical materials. Apply this simple yardstick to every rubber story, and most of the contradictions vanish.

That is true of all the many processes for making synthetics. Some are better than others. Some are cheaper. Some are quicker. But all involve the use of raw materials of which we do not have enough. And all involve considerable period of time.

We shall use some or several of these processes. But we have no right to use them beyond the amount absolutely necessary to win the war.

Apply the same yardstick to the sensational story carried by one group of newspapers recently, to the effect that the rubber industry concedes that there is no necessary shortage—that with 165,000 tons of scrap and 300 tons of virgin rubber, the industry can provide 75 per cent of normal pre-war mileage.

There is just enough truth in the story to make it dangerous. It is one of those statistical projections based upon the hypothesis question, worthless unless all details of the hypothesis are sound.

The industry was asked how many civilian tires could be produced if this, if that and if a lot of other things. Its answer depends upon all of those if's. But the if's weren't publicized—only the tentative and very shaky conclusion.

If motorists will drive at 35 or 40 miles an hour... Take a run today on a main highway at that speed, and note what proportion of cars going your way make you appear to be going backward.

If there is no pleasure in driving... Well, what is all the shouting about anyway?

And especially, if the industry is given 3000 tons of virgin rubber... Not much is it? But without that 3000 tons we expect to run 5000 tons short of the rubber absolutely necessary, before the end of 1943 to keep the war going.

Forget all the other if's. Do you have the gall, with our fighting men falling short of their needs by 5000 tons of rubber, to demand that an additional 300 tons be diverted so that we may drive to bridge, to the movies, to golf or to the beach?

Disposal of Salt Water In East Texas Field, Long A Problem, Is Now Solved

By GORDON K. SHEARER United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI)—Because of the interest in pipe line proposals rights has been lost temporarily of another major phase of oil industry in Texas.

This is the handling of salt water in the East Texas oil field. Not many months ago disposal of the salt water was one of the big problems of the industry.

Now it is announced that formation of the Salt Water Disposal Company has been completed and the non-profit organization to handle salt water is an "actuality."

Salt water disposal has been handled by some of the large companies on their principal leases for some time. The difficulty was that the successful disposal of the salt water required participation of all, and small operators could not finance or operate individual disposal systems on small leases.

Under the plan that has been put into effect one big company handles the whole proposition and the small and the big operator contribute to its cost according to size.

The salt water is produced along with oil. For many years it was run off into stream beds or left to seep into the ground at convenient places. Soon fish began to disappear from the streams, cattle began to refuse to drink the water and finally Beaumont, and other large communities became alarmed that their domestic water supplies might be ruined.

Numerous suits were filed to prevent pollution either by salt water or oil refuse.

The salt water disposal plan calls for return of the salt water to the Woodbine sand, where it will not only be disposed of as a nuisance but will become useful in helping maintain the oil reservoir pressure and thus proving the natural flow of the oil wells.

Bryan W. Payne of Tyler, who has been active in formation of the disposal company, estimates that maintaining the pressure in East Texas will result in recovery of from 200,000,000 to 800,000,000 barrels of additional oil. That seems a wide variation, but its maximum and minimum are no greater in proportion than varying estimates that have been made by experts on the reserves of the field.

Payne said that the first salt water disposal well in the East Texas field began operation in June, 1938. It operated on a small scale.

Now there are 45 such wells and in June they returned over 2,000,000 barrels of water to the Woodbine sand, or a daily average of 75,700 barrels a day.

The effect of returning salt water to the Woodbine sand becomes apparent when the geology of East Texas is considered. The Woodbine sand strata has its outcrop, or place where it reaches the surface, in North Texas around Dallas and Fort Worth. Rainfall in that area reaches the Woodbine strata and follows it into East Texas, there forcing out the oil deposits.

soon but it is first necessary to secure a project rating that will make it possible to obtain all the materials necessary to carry on the work.

Actual field work will start soon but it is first necessary to secure a project rating that will make it possible to obtain all the materials necessary to carry on the work.

NEW YORK—Two heart-breaking putting slugs by Lord Byron Nelson in the Tam O'Shanter Open in Chicago lead us to believe the term "golf-automaton" should be relegated to the archives.

THE only excusable error for the machine-like Nelson was the eight-footer-for-a-grand on the 18th. He had birdied the 9th, scored an eagle on the 10th and knocked in his tee shot for an ace on the 11th.

CHICAGO was the scene of some lovely prima-donna tantrums by the golf elite. A labor stoppage was threatened when May ordered participants to wear numbers on their backs.

WE are not conversant with the limits of human dignity, and we appreciate how humiliating it must be for a paid performer in a field as vital as sports to wear a number. Yet, it seems only fair to remind the lads that Whirlaway has won $454,366 wearing a number.

Full activity of the salt water disposal organization has not yet been felt.

CHAPTER XII

BOVE the rush of wind Hunter Dent yelled again at Red Ballard, "Idiot, what's the idea?" Red kept going. She shouted back at him, "Taking you back to jail!"

"Those twins are the killers, Sheriff!" In a moment Red came out, and right after her the red-faced officer. "Come on, Hunter!" the girl said, and handed Hunter into her roadster while the sheriff jumped into his big official car.

When Red raced up to the airport they saw the Ghibarto boys getting ready to go aboard. Sheriff Anderson stepped up. Red and Hunter ran through the gate.

"Sorry, gentlemen," Sheriff Anderson said, "but I have to detain you."

The exotic young men shed all their debonaire sophistication. One of them reached for his revolver. Anderson had expected something like that. A huge, fast worker, he knocked the twin down. Passengers were excited, and a child screamed. Hunter had moved in. When the other twin looked as if he would resist arrest Hunter landed a clean lick right back of the beautiful youth's ear. He went down with his brother. Anderson put the bracelets on the two dazed fellows and soon was going back to town with them.

When Junior Ballard was able to make a statement, he corroborated pretty much Hunter's hypothesis. When the details were all cleared up it was fairly well established that the Ghibartos shot the bank messenger, and had tried to kill Junior but had missed him twice, and the shot that caught him was at a distance down the street, beyond the paving, where Junior had his car parked and waiting.

STRICKLAND BALLARD came out to the estate. It was a sunny autumn day. The men stood and looked over the farmlands.

talked in a desultory way about plans for the next year.

"I'm raising your salary five hundred dollars," Ballard said. He eyed the young manager. All at once the sporting blood in him began to circulate. He broke into a laugh. "I'm fixing to come across, Dent. I restore to you your strain of corn. I have promised some through advertising, but I'll either pay you for the seed grain, or withdraw the offer and work it out some way with the customers. As for your horse, that, too, belongs to you. That is, unless you wish to make a gift of the animal to Bella, but if I were you, I'd not do that unless you kept a halter on the whole matter. Finally, sir, I am going to beg your pardon. I beg your most humble pardon. Dent, I've been through a lot these last few days, and I've done some thinking as I went along. I've made a few resolutions."

Hunter looked at the man. He was doing a better job than Hunter had dreamed. "For instance?"

"I've decided to ease up on the pill business and work at the daddy job a little better. To my mind you have been a true sport, Hunter. You've even worked at my job, trying to rear my children as best you can; and I have to take my hat off to you in your determination to protect Junior. You're a better man than I am, sir."

Hunter was red with both pleasure and embarrassment. Triumph in the face of true sportsmanship is never the thing one dreams of in burning rage and desire for revenge.

He and Ballard shook hands, and the man went and got into his waiting limousine and was whisked back to town.

Hunter went slowly to the office. There he telephoned Squire Doolittle. "I have a little chore for you, Judge," he said. "You'll be there in about thirty minutes? Okay." He hung up, went down, and backed out his car. He hunted around for Red. He found her on the front porch. "Hello," he grinned. "How about a ride?"

"You taking me for a ride?" "Something of the sort. Wait here till I bring my car."

"Mine's right out here. How about just going with me?" "You might not want to go where I'm going."

"Where's that?" "Doolittle's store."

"Sure," she laughed. "I was going there, too."

They went and got into her car and soon they were going along a gently rolling country road through an azure day.

"Am I riding firefly in the horse show, Hunter?"

"I'll tell you yes or no in about fifteen minutes."

She gave him a questioning look, and then laughed with odd merriment. "Then it will be yes. What'll you wager?"

"Let me see," he mused. "What do I have to put on the barrel-head?"

"Yoursself?"

"Okay, I'll bet me against you."

THEY came to the little rustic store. Squire Doolittle, with one suspender, sat on the porch waiting. Red and Hunter got out and ran up the steps.

"Well, Judge," Hunter said, "here we are."

Squire Doolittle laughed the mellow laugh of an old man who still remembers the habits of the young heart. He looked from one to the other of them.

"W-well, now, folks," he drawled. "I've got a dockymint in one of my hip pockets. Lemme see now."

He took out a large envelope from his right pocket. "This here is a wedding license what I bought just as you directed me to, Hunter. It's a fast rate license and it'll do the job."

He reached into his other pocket and brought out another envelope. Now he grinned at Bella Ballard.

"Miss Red, I done just exactly what I told you I'd do. I went to the co't house t' other day, when you said you was laying a bet, and bought this pair of license to marry you by. They seem to be fast class prime marriage license. One is writ out to Bella Ballard and Hunter Dent, and the other is writ out to Hunter Dent and Bella Ballard. Whichever one I use to marry you two by, the other loses his barrelhead. Which shall it be?"

Red looked at Hunter; Hunter looked at Red.

"Ah!" they both said at the same time.

"You'll have to get Sam, or Mrs. Doolittle to witness," Hunter suggested.

"I'll go to the house and fetch the little lady."

Squire Doolittle moved off to get his three hundred pound wife. Hunter and Red collapsed into each other's arms.

"I win!" Hunter said.

"No, I win," Red half-laughed and half-weep.

They stood a moment there in the bland afternoon and kissed. Then Squire and Mrs. Doolittle came. In a few moments Red said, "I do," and Hunter Dent said, "I do."

Hunter, as they drove back to the estate, hadn't ever seen the day so gay in autumn, or the brown land so kindly under a sky in the fall.

Men Who Know Foreign Countries Are Being Sought

The Department of Commerce has undertaken a nationwide survey to locate business, professional and other persons who possess special knowledge of foreign countries, according to Thomas U. Parcel, District Manager of the Department of Commerce Office in Houston, Texas.

Mr. Parcel stated that questionnaires are being sent to thousands of business concerns, including all of whose names appear on the Exporters' Index, as well as to professional societies, medical associations, museums and similar organizations, including missionary societies.

Data obtained in the survey will comprise a source file for the use of all agencies of the government. Great need exists for a file of this nature. Persons replying to the questionnaire will be classified as to profession or business and geographic knowledge.

For example, when a war or other agency desires to get in contact with a citizen familiar with the growing or production of a particular commodity in a given foreign country or possession, the Field Service of the Department of Commerce, which is directing the survey, will be able immediately to furnish the name and address of one or more persons having that specialized information, together with some history of the individual or individuals concerned.

Discussing the survey, Wayne C. Taylor, Under Secretary of Commerce, said:

"Your government need any specialized or unusual information you may have of the commodities used or produced abroad, and economic, industrial, social conditions in foreign countries. This form is being sent to business, professional and scientific people, to educators, missionaries, social workers, and to any others (except the casual tourist) who may possess the information needed."

The questionnaire is not an offer of employment, since no positions are open in connection with

NEW YORK—A welcome communique from Andy Anderson, sports editor of the Houston Press:

"Thought you might be interested in what Houston sports editors are doing about selling War Bonds. We have a sports activities committee in connection with the War Bond sale. We believe that any sport should have some reason to exist these days and times. So we are staging War Bond tournaments in each sport."

"First, we cooked up a gag for the opening of the baseball season. It sold $18,500 in Bonds. Next, we staged a bowling tournament. Result: $70,000. Next, a service men's softball tournament—$186,000 in Bonds.

"Now comes an outdoor motor boat regatta, a junior league baseball tournament, a senior league tournament, a golf tournament, a pecker fishin' contest, a football program that is a dilly and an all-service men's boxing show, just to mention a few.

"BEEN trying to sell Secretary Morgenthau on the idea, but some of his hired hands don't like it. We are a cinch to sell a cool million in Bonds in Houston. Now, if you multiply that by hundreds of other cities, you can see what it would mean. After all, there isn't much use in guys playing golf, fishin' and what not unless they are in some way helping the war effort.

"I'm chairman of the committee. We have a master plan of every event we stage. There isn't a cent of expense. Any group of sports writers in the country can do the same thing. We have taken the bugs out of all the tournaments we've staged. Not only that, but our committee stands ready to work up a plan on any sport. Here's one for you: We have a pool tournament going that already has sold $10,000 in Bonds, and pool halls are ILLEGAL in Texas.

"In letters to Washington, I told them we didn't want any jobs. In fact, we even went so far as to offer to raise the money needed to operate on a national basis from rich guys down here. All we want Washington to do is to give us the green light officially, and we'll not only sell Bonds but keep a lot of sports alive and give them a reason for existing as well."

Harry Grayson, NEA Service Sports Editor, is on vacation.
