IF YOU THINK ALASKA IS SISSY COUNTRY SEE JACK LAMB'S PICTURE

If you think Alaska is an easy country to go through, you should talk to Jack Lamb, famous sportsman, who blazed new trails across 1200 miles of the rugged wilds last summer, and lived to tell the story. Lamb will appear in High School auditorium, Wednesday night, Oct. 7th with a two-hour show of the first technical motion picture ever brought out of the Alaskan interior.

Starting from a point 100 miles south of Fairbanks, Lamb's expedition left civilization behind and were out of contact with the world for more than two months. What they saw and how they lived during this hazardous expedition is reflected in the thousands of feet of film that ground through Lamb's cameras.

Not in a hundred years had anyone ventured back in the remote wilds of Alaska as did this expedition, and the explorers themselves bulged their eyes at what unfolded before them. They came upon wild game that had lived and died for generations and yet had never been seen. They came across coveys of wild birds that had no fear whatever of mankind, in fact they were so tame that Lamb actually picked them up.

For weeks they wandered along great rivers that had no names, casting their fishing lines into pools where countless fish ran in great black masses. Sometimes Lamb would catch 400 trout before noon, and mind you, some of these fish weighed up to 20 pounds.

But what awed Lamb the most was the stupendous beauty of the scenery. Lamb said he had always pictured Alaska as a cold, brutal place, but when summer comes—two months a year—and the bushes are so many hues, it is really a gorgeous country. The mountains are unbelievably high, sometimes disappearing in the clouds, and are always snow-capped with blue snow. The rivers, said Lamb, are like molten silver, running down to the sea through the colorful valleys, and offering pictures that no word can describe.

But the ground was hard to walk on, and made a man's joints ache day and night. In the day time the rivers would rush in raging torrents, and at night they would freeze up. The winds often blew 100 miles an hour, and came from huge ice fields covering thousands of square miles. These cold winds would almost play havoc with Lamb's tents, and often they had to tie them down with huge rocks to keep them from going up like a balloon.

But the greatest danger came from bears—yes, grizzly bears and black bears, and Kodiak bears that wander unmolested all over Alaska. These big fellows have been the rulers of Alaska for a thousand years, and they are in no mood to relinquish that title now.

So the hunter can die without half trying, and it is positively a gainst Alaskan law for any man to venture into the wilds alone. Too often such men have been torn apart by some vicious bear. So as Lamb's party went on and on across the virgin wastes, they came in contact with many of these huge brutes, and on several occasions came perilously near not being here to tell about it. But these pictures speak for themselves. Never has anyone ever before attempted to cover this beautiful but brutal country and photograph big game in its native haunts. This is the first outdoor picture ever given four-star rating and it has drawn thousands to every auditorium where it has been shown.

It will be shown in the High school auditorium in Ranger on Oct. 7th; Eastland, Oct. 8th; and Cisco Oct. 9th. Lamb will then carry the picture to Rising Star where it will be shown Saturday night. Every man, woman and child in this area should avail themselves of the rare opportunity to see this outstanding picture.

There will positively be only one show in each town. The show starts at 8:30 p. m. but due to the great crowds that turn out for this show, the doors will be open at 7 p. m. Be sure to come early if you want a seat.

Mrs. Neal Offers To Do Any Flying To Aid War Effort

AUSTIN, Tex. —Mrs. Scott Neal of Ranger, whose pilot husband has been "missing in action" for two months, has offered to do any flying that will help the nation's war effort.

Mary Waurine Hunter, chairman of the Austin chapter of the Texas Wing of Women Fliers, received today a letter from Mrs. Neal which read: "I am very interested in doing all the flying possible and if there is any other way that I can be of assistance to our country, I want to do it. I am now left alone as my husband has been missing in action two months today. He was an officer in the air corps and was first pilot on heavy bombers.

"Naturally I am even more interested in flying than ever before because I feel that I really have a job to do now so I may carry on where he left off. We both loved flying and I want so to do this, if it will be at all possible."

Mrs. Neal is now at March Field, Cal., where she is employed in the weather bureau office.

RUSH AIR AND ARMY DEFENSE IN ARGENTINA

By EVERETT A. BAUMAN
United Press Staff Correspondent
BUENOS AIRES, (UP)—Long delayed defense preparations are being rushed by Argentina, following Brazil's declaration of belligerency, which brought the war to South America and to Argentina's frontiers. Brazil entered the war against Italy and Germany August 22.

In a series of swift steps, the Argentine War Ministry has laid the groundwork for greatly expanded military forces and had on-wide civilian defense against air Brazil's war entry, authorized the president to introduce military training for men of all ages and to conscript the entire population, regardless of age, sex or nationality, for Argentine Air Raid protection.

Immediate induction of 300,000 is provided by the legislation, while 40,000,000 pesos ($19,700,000) will be spent annually for anti-aircraft defense.

Meanwhile, military authorities have ordered that Buenos Aires, South America's largest city, undergo a trial air alarm and blackout for the first time in its history. Routine drills already have been held at Argentina's naval and military bases, but the capital—whose population density is of one per four square yards—has never heard an air siren.

Private organizations, carrying on a futile agitation for air-defense preparation during the past year, had obtained only half-hearted support from municipal authorities. Cellars capable for use as shelters were surveyed.

New Belgrano, luxurious suburb and site of the city waterworks, will be put through a full-dress anti-air rehearsal when President Ramon S. Castillo returns from his trip to Bolivia. Anti-aircraft batteries now are being spotted throughout the area, will put up a curtain of fire when Argentine army air units stage a mock defense of the waterworks.

Capitol citizens are being systematically enrolled in air-shelter groups and instructed in the art of blacking out. Col. Raul Gonzalez, head of the army anti-air defense units, has issued regulations calling for a "double blacking out" of lights. Lamp visibility must be limited to 150 feet, while sources of light escape also must be thoroughly shielded.

Householders with curbs, trees, fences or homes bordering upon streets are required to paint white road borders to help blackout driving.

The newspaper "La Razon", supporter of President Castillo's foreign policy of "prudent neutrality," explained why the new defense steps are necessary despite the government's efforts to remain at peace: "No matter how great our will to remain neutral," La Razon pointed out, "events of the past decade prove that pacifism may be worthless in the face of unforeseen developments in the international conflict. Only powerful defense will make this nation respected."

Governor Seeks A Qualified Man For Board Post

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—Governor Stevenson seems to be on the verge of appointing a member of the State Industrial Accident Board. He has requested an opinion from the attorney general about the qualifications of an appointee.

The governor must have had a bank officer in mind for the position for his inquiry was whether the officer of a bank, unnamed, would be eligible. The answer was "No."

Bank officers are not barred generally from holding state offices but the statute under which the Industrial Accident Board was set up specifies that one of the board members be a lawyer, one should be an employer of labor and one should be "employed in some business industry as a wage earner."

The lawyer member of the board is Chairman Otto Studer. The employer member is T. B. Hill, former wholesale flour dealer, and the employee member is H. Fred Martin, whose term expired Sept. 1.

ITALIAN PRESS SAD COLUMBUS FOUND AMERICA

By LIVINGSTON POMEROY
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C. (UP)—Columbus though a native Italian, is no longer a national hero in Italy.

With 11 of the 21 American Republics at war, the attitude in Italy is that Columbus should have remained at home and left the New World undiscovered.

Last year, even before the final break with the American countries, Italy launched a press campaign defaming Columbus on the anniversary of his epoch-making journey. Most of the fascist-controlled press published editorials attacking the policies of the American republics and generally labeling Columbus' discovery as a bad find. One cartoon which was widely published throughout Italy depicted a thin hungry-looking Italian looking up at a statue of Columbus and asking, "What made you do it, Christopher?"

The 450th anniversary of the discovery of America finds most of the Western Hemisphere, from Canada to Uruguay, either at war or not maintaining diplomatic relations with the Axis countries. During the first world war, nine American republics—Brazil, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, and the United States—declared war on Germany, while four others—Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay—broke off diplomatic relations with the Central Powers. Today only two American republics—Argentina and Chile—still maintain relations with the Axis, the others having either broken off relations or declared war.

So, if Columbus were to make his journey again, in 1942, he would have to run through both the United Nations and the Axis blockades. He also would find the world disagreeing about him, who he was, where he came from, what he discovered and what became of him.

According to Professor Luis Ulloa, director of the Peruvian National Library, at Lima, Columbus made his first voyage to the Western Hemisphere with Danish escorts. Professor Ulloa maintains that they sailed to the new world via Iceland, Greenland, Labrador and Newfoundland. The general belief, however, still is that the famous navigator sailed from Spain and first sighted the island of Guanahani—San Salvador—in the Bahamas, October 12, 1492.

Both Spain and the Dominican Republic claim that Columbus' remains lie within their borders. The Spaniards say his tomb is in the Cathedral of Seville and the Dominicans say he lies in the Cathedral at Santo Domingo.

A few years ago, the Italians entered the discussion and asserted that he was neither in Seville nor Santo Domingo, but that actually Columbus was buried in his native town of Genoa. They even brought forth documents to prove it.

With the entry of the American republics into the war, however, Italy dropped her claims and the Rome newspaper, "La Tevere," carried an editorial stating that Columbus was of Jewish descent and that Italians had no reason to be proud of either home or his discovery—the New World.

AUSTIN, Oct. 6.—The 35-mile-an-hour speed limit on Texas roads will be enforced by a double penalty.

By the expedient of including the entire state in a 35-mile speed zone, the State Highway Department has made it possible for state police to arrest those driving over 35 miles an hour, although the state maximum is 60 miles.

Mark McGee, State Rationing Officer, announced also that those convicted of speeding will go on a black list, ineligible for replacing tires or tubes.

For Better, or Worse

Like it or not, American business ain't what it used to be. And probably never will be again. Unquestionably there are both good and bad in that fact. The very men who have engineered the changes regret some of the results. The bittered diards concede certain benefits.

Even more rapidly under the lash of total war the voice of management is becoming fainter along the industrial front. Except for the broadest matters of policy, stockholders and managers now have little to say about how their business shall be run.

It used to be that a man or a group decided to go into a promising business would raise the money, acquire the plant, hire workmen and a competitive market, manufacture their product, sell in a competitive market, and pocket the profits.

Now, assuming that priorities would permit inauguration of a new enterprise, only the first two of the steps are under control of the entrepreneurs.

Having their capital and their plant, they must hire workers under the rules of whatever union controls their field. If there happen to be two unions battling over jurisdiction, there is likely to be trouble right away.

The unions, with government backing, decide who can be hired, how much shall be paid, how many hours shall be worked and under what conditions.

If the workmen aren't capable, or are lazy or insolent, that is the employer's hard luck. He can't fire them. Tomorrow, or the next day, in all probability, the men won't even be able to quit if the labor freezing program is carried out.

When the product is ready for market, its top price is fixed. Suppose costs have moved up. Nothing can be done but write the loss into the books in red ink.

If there are profits, along come corporation taxes, the surtax, and the variety of other taxes, and there go the profits. If there are losses, that is everybody's hard luck.

Some of the laws and regulations that take management away from ownership are vitally necessary wartime measures. Some others are unquestionably beneficial social restrictions.

Perhaps you do not like the new setup. Perhaps you look hopefully toward happier times.

However you feel, you might just as well accept the situation. It's here, and in large part to stay.

Most people have about recovered from the effects of their vacation daze.

A trip for all Americans: the country that is up and doing is never down and done.

Tips on How to— Improve Your Lighting

Place Lamps Closer

The illustration above shows the right and wrong way to place a reading light by an easy chair. If you shorten the distance between you and the lamp one-half, you increase by four times the amount of light on your book or paper. In other places that light is needed, put the lamp as close as practical for better illumination.

Dedistricting Need Is Stated By Its Advocates

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—There has been much agitation for legislation redistricting on the general proposition that there have been such population changes since the present districts were set up that a fresh distribution is needed.

J. B. Callicote of Austin, however, has gone into the matter more thoroughly. The last apportionment was made in 1921 and is based upon the 1920 census. Callicote compared population figures for 1920 and 1940 and found Tom Green, Lubbock and other counties are suffering gross lack of representation.

SERIAL STORY OF BRIGHTNESS GONE

BY HOLLY WATTERSON

COPYRIGHT, 1942, NEA SERVICE, INC.

THE STORY: At a commencement dance 18-year-old Candace Beck falls in love with Martin Curby, a medical-school friend of her cousin, Peter Franzer. The three go to the Franzer home where Candace, an orphan, has been reared by Peter's father, Bruce, and Candace's Aunt Belle, Bruce's second wife. Peter and Candace are jealous of his friend. He brings up an excuse to take Martin and Candace to the next morning. Candace is furious until a letter comes from Martin in a few days, asking if he may call.

CANDACE PROPOSES CHAPTER V

MARTIN'S letter was perfect. Candace decided. She rushed home and locked herself in her room, there to read and reread its contents through the long afternoon. She left it only once, to go down to the kitchen for a talk with Mrs. Hobbs; and after a conference during which she felt it necessary to explain shyly not once but several times that the expected guest was Peter's friend, she felt sure of a dinner fit for Martin.

She had now only to invite him. That would be the natural thing to do, invite him for dinner, since in that country there were few places for public dining. But she must make the reason clear, in a way of course, she must not let him think her too eager. In relief she was now swinging the other way and was wishing she might punish him a little for those days he had made her wait.

She told herself she would have liked to wait a day or so before answering his letter, but decided against that as being discourteous; she refused to acknowledge a fear that if she did he might get it too late and might not then be able to come on Sunday after all.

She spent the evening composing a note that in primness and formality equaled his own. When it was finally sealed and ready she thought she was being very brave when instead of dashing immediately she decided to wait until morning to post it.

They met primly, too. Martin trying to live out his fiction that he had just "happened" to be in the neighborhood—even though the train on which he arrived was virtually an express out of New York—Candace hers, that it was as Peter's friend that she was extending to him the hospitality of Tuckaway's LAMB, three saas little in the atmosphere that would help to break them down into a more normal attitude.

The big dining room, intended for large groups, seemed empty with only two people in it; and Mrs. Hobbs, the importance of the occasion having been impressed on her, had placed them at either end of the long table so that each was as though marooned on a tiny island of propriety, conversing forlornly across a frozen sea of white.

In daydreaming forward to this occasion she had imagined herself and Martin exchanging light banter, herself a fascinating hostess and Martin an impossible blend of suavity and boyish charm; the reality was bitterly disappointing. She felt very young and gauche, and Martin was an embarrassed youth who ate absent-mindedly in silence, or who frowned and cleared his throat as though about to say something portentous and then ended up as likely as not with an inane remark on the weather. She was relieved when the meal was over and they could leave the table.

BUT the whole afternoon stretched ahead, a yawning gap that had to be filled. It was so hot a day that the cool north terrace beckoned invitingly, but that would mean trying to make conversation and the thought of that in her tongue-tied state was appalling. Golf was out of the question since that meant green fees and she didn't want Martin to have to spend the money; but tennis?

They had their own courts, and there was sure to be an extra racket of Peter's somewhere about and a pair of his shorts or slacks. The alacrity with which Martin accepted left her feeling unhappily that he too had been dreading their afternoon alone together; the occasion was scarcely living up to her romantic dream of it.

Out on the courts, away from the anxious solicitude of Mrs. Hobbs and the empty oppressiveness of the house, things were better. They grew hot and their clothes clung damply to their sweating skins, but their frozen self-consciousness too had melted. One ball that had been knocked over the wire netting into the woods eluded capture. "It has to be just about here," Candace insisted, "I lined it up with the maple tree and that old stump."

Having retrieved the others, Martin had come over to help find this one. The ground where they stood was covered with a creeper and they were swishing the vines gently back and forth with the heads of their rackets. They both saw the ball, they both stooped at once; their heads met violently, and their hands—and though their heads pulled immediately apart in natural reaction their hands clung. Martin's other arm went about her shoulders and he bent his head, half laughing, to kiss her forehead where he had bumped it. It was her mouth, however, that his lips somehow met. He strained her to him abruptly and she clung. Her arms crept about his neck.

"THEY sat at the foot of the maple, Martin still holding her firmly, possessively, she with her head resting on his shoulder. She asked happily, "Martin? You didn't really just 'happen to be in the neighborhood,' did you?"

Martin laughed. "Not much," he admitted. "I had to practically sandbag a few people to get the day off to get out here."

"So long!" he repeated, amazed. "Why, I wrote so soon it was hardly decent."

"Oh, Martin, decent after the way I hinted to you! 'I won't even budge from this place!' I said. What was that but a hint I'd be waiting for a letter?"

Martin drew her closer, he buried his face in her hair. "Sweetest," he said softly, "my sweetest."

Abruptly his mood changed; he grew bitter. "I have a hell of a nerve," he said, "coming here, behaving like this! You ought to tell me to get out of here, you ought to send me packing—"

Candace asked fearfully, "Why? Why, Martin?" as though half expecting him to admit a wife and several children hidden somewhere; and when he said savagely, "Why? A guy like me, with not a penny to his name, daring to be in love with a girl like you!" She sighed with relief.

"Martin, as if anything like that could matter!" She looked thoughtful. "I've been thinking, Martin. I'll go into training, I'll get to be a nurse, maybe I can even manage to get into the same hospital where you'll be interning. And then afterward, after we're married, I can be your office nurse, I can be of some help to you, I can share your interests—"

Martin said grandly, "That won't be necessary, I'm going to be a fashionable physician and make a mint of money. I'll have squads of office nurses, and you'll have maids by the dozen—"

But though he spoke lightly he was inexpressibly touched and stirred. Brought up in a hard school that had taught him wariness of people and their motives, the manner in which Candace had shown her utter trust in him, disdaining coquetry, he found deeply moving. He drew her fiercely close and kissed her. He had not believed he would ever feel so deeply about anything.

(To Be Continued)

For instance, he cited the 119th Representative District. The district includes Cochran, Crosby, Dawson, Gaines, Hockley, Lubbock, Lynn, Terry and Yoakum counties and was so sparsely settled in 1920 that the combined population of all of them in 1920 was about 30,000. The 1930 census shows 130,204 people in the district. Lubbock county, alone, has more people now than the whole district had when it was created.

Callicote contrasts Lubbock county with Bastrop county, which has a district to itself with 21,610 people.

After taking out the population of Harris, Dallas and Bexar counties, which are entitled to seven that are permitted in addition. He computed that a fair redistricting would provide one representative for each 49,000 people.

Under present district boundaries, 28 counties with less than 49,000 population have a representative unshared with other counties.

Callicote said these counties with excess representation are: Cass, Panoia, Nacogdoches, Houston, Lavaca, Washington, Shelby, Wood, Red River, Hopkins, Cooke, Montague, Wise, Denton, Van Zandt, Henderson, Freestone, Freestone, Limestone, Falls, Robertson, Milam, Fayette, Gonzales, DeWitt, Johnson, Parker, Eastland and Bastrop.

If his computations are correct, Nevada county would be entitled to two members of the House of Representatives. Other counties which he cites are entitled to additional representation on a population basis:

Jefferson county, now with two members and a floterial member shared with another county, he says, is entitled to three and a floater; Galveston county, with one member and a floater, is entitled to two itself; Harris and Bexar, with five each, are entitled to seven each; Dallas, with five and a floater, is entitled to seven for itself alone; Tarrant, with four and a floater, is entitled to five and a floater; El Paso with two and a floater, is entitled to three for itself, and Cameron, with one, is entitled to two.

Callicote has investigated the legal side of the matter, also. He asserts that if the Democratic Committee in the deprived counties would nominate representatives in accord with the new census, they could enforce their rights in court. So far the past legislatures have balked at the provision for redistricting after each decennial census as directive rather than compulsory.

$7.05 A Ton Bid On Scrap Metal

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—Twenty tons of scrap metal gathered at District 14 warehouse of the Texas Highway Department was auctioned this week. Highest bid was $7.05 a ton. The scrap consisted largely of discarded road machinery, a small quantity of guard rail and some worn-out batteries. Rail of the abandoned street or line that formerly circled the state capital were torn up this week to go to the war drive for scrap metal. So far, the iron fence enclosing the 25-acre plot remains in place.
