NAZI OCCUPIED COUNTRIES MAY GET INDUSTRIES

WASHINGTON (UP)—German industrialization of occupied countries to serve the Nazi war machine can in some instances result in permanent industrial expansion...

Among countries which may reap certain industrial gains from German occupation is Norway, where aluminum production and water power have been greatly expanded by the Nazis...

Poland, too where the Nazis have forced expansion of the textile industry, largely along synthetic lines, will probably continue to have a large textile production after the war, he said.

On the other hand, Austria, where the Germans have tried to develop iron and steel production, cannot possibly compete with other iron and steel production countries in peacetime...

Use Depends on Damage

The internationally-known economist said that lasting benefits which could result from Nazi industrialization vary widely from country to country and that many war industries cannot possibly be converted to peacetime production...

Where destruction is extensive, it will be a long time before countries can build industries to pre-war levels, Domeratzky said. He estimated that it would take Russia five years to rebuild the Ukraine and other industrial sections devastated by the Nazis...

Germany's Course Domeratzky said that Germany may turn to agriculture rather than industrial expansion after the war when wartime industries will be abandoned...

Domeratzky said that it would be a long time after the war, perhaps three or four years, before the U. S. can "catch up" with its normal export trade because most European countries would not have enough money to buy anything but essentials...

Most European countries will not be able to afford any American luxuries, such as automobiles, radios, and refrigerators for several years after the war, but they will want industrial equipment, raw materials, and food, he said.

Michigan State Sets Up 2-Year Basic Training

EAST LANSING, Mich.—(UP)—All freshmen students entering Michigan State College next fall will be required to enroll in the new "basic" college, a two-year educational program, devised to broaden the college student's cultural background.

The two-year curriculum is composed of seven comprehensive core courses, of which the student must complete five. The courses are written and spoken English, biological science, physical science, social science, effective living, origin and development of civilization, and literature and fine arts.

Besides taking at least five of the course, the student may elect other subjects to qualify for advanced study in his specialized field during his junior and senior years on the MSC campus.

Dr. John A. Hannah, president, believes that "basic" education will give students an opportunity to explore broad areas, will aid them in the discovery of their own interests and aptitudes, and will equip them better to assume their responsibilities as individuals and as citizens of a democracy.

Despite the added two-year "college," it will take the customary five years to complete work for a Veterinary Science degree, and four years for degrees in the other schools, namely engineering, home economics, agriculture, science and arts, and business and public service.

In explaining the basic college, President Hannah stated all students who have completed one quarter prior to September of this year will be permitted to continue their college education on the present basis.

ALLIES REPORT NAZI ATTACKS IN NORMANDY ARE REPULSED

LONDON—Flying Fortress smashed at four German air fields in France and Belgium today and Berlin said powerful formations of American bombers battled thru stiff resistance to attack the Vienna area and Balkan targets.

The Allies are keeping the initiative on every part of the front where fighting is going on. The Allies now hold all the ground they have won since D-Day except a small triangle about two miles long around Villers-Bocage and another roughly four miles long around Troark.

ALLIED SUP. HQ. London (UP)—British armored forces steadily expanding a firmly held salient between the Orne and Odon rivers despite intensifying German counter attacks have driven from the southwest to within three miles of Caen, it was announced today.

British armored forces have advanced to within a half mile of one of the key airfields surrounding the base of Caen. The British have also broadened the tip of the beachhead southwest of Caen to nearly three miles, after beating down counter blows by fresh enemy troops.

The high command of German admits that British forces have been able to widen their breach in the Nazi lines southwest of Caen. NAZI OCCUPIED COUNTRIES MAY GET INDUSTRIES

WASHINGTON (UP)—German industrialization of occupied countries to serve the Nazi war machine can in some instances result in permanent industrial expansion thus enriching these countries in peacetime—provided the industries are not destroyed during the war.

Among countries which may reap certain industrial gains from German occupation is Norway, where aluminum production and water power have been greatly expanded by the Nazis, and will probably remain permanently expanded, according to Dr. Louis Domeratzky, chief of the European unit, bureau of foreign and domestic commerce.

Poland, too, where the Nazis have forced expansion of the textile industry, largely along synthetic lines, will probably continue to have a large textile production after the war, he said.

On the other hand, Austria, where the Germans have tried to develop iron and steel production, cannot possibly compete with other iron and steel production countries in peacetime, and the industry cannot last there, Domeratzky asserted.

Use Depends on Damage The internationally-known economist said that lasting benefits which could result from Nazi industrialization vary widely from country to country and that many war industries cannot possibly be converted to peacetime production. In all cases, peacetime use of industries built up by Germany will depend on the wartime havoc wrought on them, which cannot now be estimated, he added.

Where destruction is extensive, it will be a long time before countries can build industries to pre-war levels, Domeratzky said.

He estimated that it would take Russia five years to rebuild the Ukraine and other industrial sections devastated by the Nazis, adding that the speed with which the Ukraine is rebuilt will depend largely upon the aid which Russia may want or get from other countries in reconstruction.

France, Domeratzky said, is less industrialized now than before the war and Italy will emerge from the war less industrialized than before, partly because of the enormous destruction there and partly because the Fascist regime artificially built up industries there for political and war purposes which are not economically sound for the country.

Germany's Course Domeratzky said that Germany may turn to agriculture rather than industrial expansion after the war when wartime industries will be abandoned—but what happens in Germany will depend on the extent of destruction during the war, on the peace terms and on the question of postwar markets for German products.

Domeratzky said that it would be a long time after the war, perhaps three or four years, before the U. S. can "catch up" with its normal export trade because most European countries would not have enough money to buy any thing but essentials, while the pent-up demand at home would produce such a booming domestic market that American industry would be pretty well occupied serving home markets in early post-war years without looking to the export trade.

Most European countries will not be able to afford any American luxuries, such as automobiles, radios, and refrigerators for several years after the war, but they will want industrial equipment, raw materials, and food, he said. Some of the neutrals, however, as Sweden and Switzerland, "who have been making money during the war," may be in the market immediately for American automobiles and other luxury products he added.

BOND SALES ARE $40,000 AT BIG RALLY

According to W. F. Creager, Ranger chairman for the War Finance, about $40,000 worth of War Bonds was sold at the rally held here Thursday afternoon and for which a unit of the Stars Over Texas was present.

This amount still leaves Ranger below the quota and Creager stated that only about half of the Series E quota of bonds has been sold. This means that more individuals will have to purchase bonds if the quota is to be met.

The rally Thursday afternoon was well attended and the work of the visiting artists including the band of the 254th Infantry from Camp Wolter, under the direction of Warrant Officer John J. McKimney, was deeply appreciated by the people of Ranger.

Climaxing the events of the day a Bond Premiere, "Follow The Boys," was presented at the Arcadia Theatre Thursday evening at 9 o'clock. Admission to the premiere was through the purchase of bonds and a large crowd was present for the event. Proceeding the premiere, members of the dance orchestra from Camp Wolter sang a concert in front of the theatre.

Cans Of Beer Roll Off Lines For Servicemen

MILWAUKEE (UP)—Even though beer is scarce in now cannot find it in the Yanks overseas, it isn't so hidden that they mistake it for something else.

The cans are covered with a rustproof olive drab paint and the lettering on them is black. The reason for this new military deception is that when cans are thrown away, no gleam from natural metal will reveal positions of American troops.

Now with government authorization for use of metal, the cans are rolling down beer lines. In Milwaukee they're rolling at the rate of 600 cans a minute or 864,000 cans a day.

Another new method of getting beer to the armed forces was found in the "one trip bottles, 50 per cent lighter and one-third shorter than the usual size. It has been reported that a total of 49,343,000 of these were sent from various breweries in the States to offshore bases in February this year. The cans stand more handling without breaking.

A letter from Sgt. F. J. Favre, Pittsburgh, Pa., to a Milwaukee brewery proves that the Yanks over there still get their bottle of beer—or maybe can of beer now—and like it. He writes:

"Not even in the most imaginative sense of the word could I be called a 'beer hound.' However, I feel it my duty to write and express my appreciation of your product. More than any one thing it has been our 'moral keeper'—civilization was until I drank several bottles of your beer one night and it's rough back wonderful memories."

The basic college plan was prepared by a faculty committee headed by Prof. Howard C. Pather, new dean of the two-year college. A feature of the basic college is that Professor Pather is a two year terminal program for those students who have no desire to continue their college education. It provides for comprehensive examination in five of the core courses and other regular college subjects.

Despite the added two-year "college," it will take the customary five years to complete work for a Veterinary Science degree, and four years for degrees in the other schools, namely engineering, home economics, agriculture, science and arts, and business and public service. In these schools, according to the various deans, some subjects must necessarily be omitted and emphasis placed on different subjects and the requirements changed.

In explaining the basic college, President Hannah stated all students who have completed one quarter prior to September of this year will be permitted to continue their college education on the present basis.

Dr. Hannah said that greater emphasis would be placed upon counseling services to all students at the beginning of the new educational program next fall.

INSIDE WASHINGTON

A Tale of an Admiral, a Where is Mme. De Gaulle? Cake and a Cockroach

By HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist

WASHINGTON—The United States Navy is doing a superb job of conveying and fighting in this war. But it once had a dark moment, when recalled in these tragic days.

Admiral David F. Sellers, once commandant of the United States Naval Academy, and one of the most popular officers in the Navy, told me about the "dark moment." He explained that it had been planned as a moment of sweetness and light. However—well, here's the story. The famous Admiral George Dewey, who directed the United States fleet during the Spanish-American war, was being given a party, a special party complete with reception committee, music, handsome little speeches and the presentation of small tokens of esteem and affection.

One of the captains of his command came forward at a pre-arranged moment, bowed, paused and as an aide handed him a large elegant-looking bag, said:

"Sir, when you dined with us on our ship recently you were good enough to praise the coconut cake we served with the dessert. The ship's cook, having been told of your pleasure, asked permission to make you a similar cake. Here it is, sir. And I have the honor to present it to you."

The captain opened the bag. Turned back its lid. And there the coconut cake was. Shining with its beautiful white icing covering. On the beautiful white icing was something big and that moved slightly. A plump, black cockroach. That's what it was.

With a slight wiggle the animal waved its antennae and scurried to cover down the side of the box where the coconut was thickest. Admiral Dewey did not blink an uneasy eye. Nor hesitate for a second. "Thank you," it's a splendid cake, captain," he said. "I hope you will convey my deep appreciation to your cook."

"Thank you, sir. I'm glad you like it," said the captain. "I shall take the cake away until you are ready to leave, sir."

And that was all. The dark moment had been met with courage and exquisite tact.

OF COURSE IT'S NOT TRUE that the baby which the stork will soon place on the doorstep of the Minister of Finland and Mme. Procopie will be named Joseph Stalin Procopie as a peace-making gesture between Finland and Russia.

Nor will the little one be called Josephine Stalin Procopie. This is merely a silly rumor that got started somehow.

THE NEWSPAPERS AND THE RADIO are again echoing the name of "De Gaulle." It's "De Gaulle" being recognized by Poland, Belgium, Luxembourg and Czechoslovakia. And "De Gaulle" coming to the United States. And "De Gaulle" approving (or not approving) the new French money to be issued to the troops of invasion in France.

It occurred to me that so active and busy a fellow as the French general must have a wife somewhere. It is the French custom, you know for a Frenchman to get himself a wife before he gets himself a career.

Frequently it is the French wife who is really responsible for the French husband's success. (You've seen those sharp-eyed French wives sitting at the cafe's desk in French restaurants while Monsieur smiles at the patrons and recommends a goose with a special dressing.)

General De Gaulle's wife. A sound, provincial woman who stays at home in the country and rarely meets the outside world. Would there be any chance of Mme. De Gaulle coming to Washington if her husband did arrive on that visit to Mr. Roosevelt? I inquired of the Right Authority. Could she be persuaded to be a world traveler in the Eleanor Roosevelt-Mme. Chiang Kai-shek-Mrs. Winston Churchill manner?

"Ah non," I was told quickly. "That would be impossible. Mme. De Gaulle lives very quietly. She has raised a charming family—two sons, in the war, and a daughter. But she could not ever hold a press conference as so many of your distinguished American ladies do. To be sure she has opinions but she does not speak them out loud for the world to hear."

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

"SEE! MALLORY exclaimed to her maid. 'Montecito did mean something to me.'"

Prism gave a low whistle; her eyes were round as those of a Hallowe'en owl. "I'll say! Think of them being here in this very building! Why, they could be right next door, even." A savage wrath spread over her face. "When we go in to start in on them baboons, Miss Mallory? What we waitin' for?"

"For my knees to stop knocking together." She got out of bed and slipped into the robe her maid was holding. "Every time I'm feeling fairly happy, something reminds me of those two cold-faced crooks and my heart starts doing a boom-boom."

"Mine's tickin' overtime, too. Not so much for fear, Miss Mallory, as it is for action. What we waitin' for?" she asked again.

"I want to talk to Richard Blythe first."

"Huh!" snorted Prism. "The invisible man. Why you got to pay any attention to him? Is he bigger than me?"

The girl picked up a glass of orange juice from a tray on her dressing table. It hid her smile. "He isn't as big," she said a few seconds later. "But that isn't the point, Prism. We have to use strategy."

"What's that?"

"It's being capable of outwitting the other fellow."

"Sounds o. k.," granted the maid, "if they don't outwit first." She frowned. "What if that invisible man stays invisible for two or three weeks like that woman said? What then? That's a mighty long time to dilly-dally. Me, I'd rather get goin' with the 'forage' myself."

"I guess you mean foray, Prism." She sat down on the dressing table bench and lifted a silver lid from a dish of scrambled eggs. "No, we'll try to hold out until Richard Blythe gets back in town. Meanwhile we'll be very careful. I'll not show myself without either you or Armando. And if I do run into the men I'll be dumb as I planned to be when I saw them, again. A slight shudder shook her. "Of course I'd prefer not to see them until I have talked with Richard Blythe."

"Seems you're mighty sold on a guy not to know more than just sit 'cross from him in the air-ship. What makes you think he's so wonderful?"

Mallory realized her servant was envious. "I'd not go so far as to say I think he's wonderful. I simply feel he is dependable. Something about him made me feel that way."

"Oh, you said your 'tuition'?" Prism tossed her head. She poured a cup of tea for her mistress, then set down the pot with a bang. "O. K., Miss Mallory, we're gonna try strategy. And if that don't work, next we're gonna try heft."

At 4 o'clock Mallory greeted the two newspaper friends of Tod Patrick with a sociable, but terse, "Hello, boys. I'll try to give you what information you want quick. I'm going out for a ride." Armando stood nearby, resplendent in his new shirt, grinning above the awful necktie. "What do you want to drink?" the girl added.

One newspaper man just stood silent. The other looked amused and dropped to the arm of the davenport. "You sound like speednuts New York, Miss Baker. Relax. We don't do things that way down here. You are to come with us to meet other reporters. You are invited for coffee."

A look of stupefaction spread over Mallory Baker's face. "I'll say you do thing differently down here. Imagine reporters playing host." Then she frowned. "But coffee?"

"Yeh, you're right. But you'll learn to like it, I'm Latham. My pal is Roberts. Shall we go?"

Roberts spoke for the first time. "You'll learn not to mind it, he means. The coffee, I mean."

Latham said, "Don't mind him, Miss Baker. He can't talk, but he can write. Come on. We have a taxi waiting."

"All right," replied the singer. She took the hat that Prism was holding for her, a little pouf of white violets, exactly like the collar on the black velvet cocktail frock. In the mirror the girl's eyes caught the unhappiness on Armando's face. "No, gentlemen, let's go in my car. I have my own driver, you see. A wonderful, wonderful driver." She watched the boy's gloom sail away into a renewed belief that life was worth living.

Prism handed her mistress a pair of white gloves and an onyx compact. "Boy, is you body-guarded!" she whispered complacently.

Roberts sat in front with Armando; the talkative Latham sat in back with the singer. His talk annoyed her. It was a continuous and laudatory discussion of Tod Patrick. "And I can't even let out a squawk," complained the girl to herself.

She was glad when they reached their destination, a cafe that surprised her by being very large, instead of a small, colorful one like those along the highway. It was about half full and filling rapidly with couples and groups. Apparently the coffee hour was important.

Mallory had expected to be shoved into a booth with Latham and Roberts and the Mexican man to be served a cup of coffee, to refuse a cigarette—no one ever learned not to bother to offer her one—then answer the usual questions put to her by members of the press.

Instead, she was escorted to a round table, a tremendous one, surrounded by many persons. First she was introduced to a lovely Mexican girl.

"Our interpreter," said Latham, quickly, adding in answer to Mallory's startled look of inquiry, "Benares Enclos and Elsonga do not speak English." Immediately she was shaking hands with those two reporters, sombre appearing men with too much dignity. They smiled thinly and sat down again. Different from the gay type of newspaperman she previously had encountered, she decided quickly before more introductions.

With the exception of Manuella, the interpreter, Mallory was the only girl. The men ranged from an elderly Army officer to the young man at her right. She let their names rattle in her head, knowing she could never remember them, and because she was puzzled over this odd reception, she just leaned back and smiled and waited.

Coffee was placed before her, a strong, bitter brew in a demi-tasse cup. In spite of its unfamiliar and unpleasant taste, Mallory was glad to drink it. It gave her something to do while she tried to determine why all the extra guests were sitting in on the interview. Her stay in the capital city had been too short to teach her that friends of friends joined any party that looked interesting and became a part of the conviviality.

While she sipped her caustically strong coffee, Mallory found herself grateful to Prism for having insisted on the black velvet dress. Manuella wore a light-weight wool dress, just right for the semi-tropical afternoon, with a smart black hat back of her towering pompadour, Mexican silver jewelry and a silver fox scarf. Her face, beneath its heavy powder, was that olive tint so luminous that it sometimes seems more pale than the skin of a blonde. Her lips, deeply scarlet, heightened the paleness. Her eyes were something not easy to describe; it would be as useless as trying to describe the beauty of the sun. And her voice was like a deep-toned bell.

Manuella, begrudged Mallory, was quite a gal. She was asking questions of the singer now, translating those of the Mexican reporters into English, receiving Mallory's answers, putting those back into swift Spanish. Mallory knew now why the Mexican girl was along. Latham and Roberts could have handled the translations, but theirs would have been halting. Naturally, Manuella's Spanish was not halting. Nor was her English; it fairly winged from her mouth.

The questions were not the inane "How do you like Mexico, Miss Baker?" type. They were so technical that the singer felt as if she were taking an examination, one that she must not fail. Inwardly, a slangy remark amused her. She was being "put on the spot." It seemed the Mexican reporters hoped to disconcert her. They purposely were sporting their own knowledge, using it to hint to the great Mallory Baker that she need not get on any high horse with them.

There was one redeeming feature to the situation, the man at Mallory's right, even though she had had no time for him. She took time now. The smile she gave him was loaded with sweetness. Intentionally.

He smiled back. "More coffee?" His English was slow, Latin-accented. "Cave-tay," he had offered her. The affable nod with which she accepted delighted him. "I am Charlie," he said.

"Oh!" Mallory said softly. "Carlos."

The man's tone was fervent. "How beauty you say my name." Mallory did not answer aloud. "Charlie—Carlos—I didn't know it until now. But you are the reason I came down here."

A sign in front of a confectionary in the little city of Blanco reads:

"18314 San Pedro Avenue. Could it be that the city limits of San Antonio—(San Pedro is a street in that city)—are striving to become as all inclusive as the city limits of Los Angeles?"

"The Dog House" is the name of an establishment in the Alamo City. You can buy food for your dog there.

Do you remember that a while back there was a great hue and cry for a special session of the legislature to "do something" about the deficit in the State's general fund and that this writer opposed a special session on the subject because, partly, it would cost several hundred thousand dollars of the taxpayer's money, and mainly, because the deficit would wipe itself out in a short time?

Well, did you read in the papers the other day where the deficit has been cut $21,000,000 during the past year and is now only $821,000 and would be wiped out entirely in a few months?

The hill country was radiant with wild flowers after the rains when this observer made a bus trip through that region recently. Between Marble Falls and Burnet there were yellow flowers with a black center; others with pink petals that faded until the tips were lemon colored; then there were slim stalks with yucca-like blooms; tiny white flowers, and there were tall stems that were tipped with crimson blossoms, and even the cactus had yellow blooms. What with the hills and trees and winding highway and rivers and valleys and the browsing flock of goats and sheep, that really is a delightful section.

An Irishman, newly-arrived in the United States, wanted to buy a clock and the salesman showed him a cuckoo clock, something Pat had never seen before. "How asked," "I would't want that one" Pat answered. "It's enough trouble windin' up a clock without havin' to feed a bird."

A true incident (when this writer was police reporter in Memphis, Tennessee): A negro about to board a train for the penitentiary comforted his wife with, "Don't cry, honey; I'll serve dis 14 years in a jiffy an' be back wid you."

Speaking not long ago before the Panhandle-Plains Historical Association annual dinner, this chronicler remarked: "History is not the exclusive property of the Ph.D.'s—much less of the writer of that most unread and unreadable production of the human brain; the master's thesis."

When Major Kilgore starts talking about the "Squaw" it's plain without asking that he's talking about his airplane, a B-24 D Liberator that carried him safely through flak-filled skies on some of the toughest missions of the African campaign.

Major Kilgore, stationed at Randolph Field in charge of AAF Training Command Provost Marshals in an eleven-state area, complains that he doesn't "get together" with the "Squaw" any more.
