WASHINGTON COLUMN

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NEA)—Nine displaced persons, liberated from D. P. camps in Europe and now in the United States as refugees, were brought together in a Washington hotel parlor the other afternoon.

Edson

Nobody cares that although the war has been over two years, there are still close to a million people in Europe's D. P. camps. They have no homes. Fearing political persecution, they can't go back where they came from.

As one of the nine phrased it, "We have been persecuted one year by the Soviet, three years by the Germans, and two years by UNRRA."

This mistrust of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation runs through all their stories. They are not ungrateful of the fact that UNRRA they would probably not be alive today.

ALL kinds of pressures have been put on these refugees to accept repatriation. In some camps the rations were cut to less than 1000 calories a day.

Others have accepted repatriation, tried it, then fled back to the comparative security of the D. P. camps. Their experiences have made those who stayed behind more determined than ever not to go back to the places they once called home.

They don't want UNRRA, they don't want IRO—the new International Refugee Organization which United Nations is now trying to set up. All they want is a place to go—any place where they can settle down in peace and begin again.

The nine refugees, who were introduced by dapper little Dr. David Martin of the Refugee Defense Committee which set up this conference, were a varied lot. Seven men and two women. Above the average, probably. Lawyers, professors, army officers. Well educated.

Two Yugoslavs, two Latvians, a Russian, a Ukrainian, a Lithuanian, an Estonian girl, a Polish Jewess. Sitting around the green felt-topped table in the hotel parlor they appeared relaxed.

Stepan Carja, clean-cut young Yugoslav army officer, told of three terms in Hitler's and Tito's concentration camps. His wife had been sentenced with him and his first child was born in camp.

Mine Kink, tall and slender Estonian girl who was educated as a lawyer, told of escapes from both Russian and German occupation. In one night 64,000 Estonians were rounded up for deportation to Siberia. She made her way to the American zone in Germany and a job with U. S. military government.

TINY, Russian-born law Prof. Andrey Dobrovol'sky told of his capture by the Germans and his escape to the American lines. But he did not want to return to Russia. He told of one camp where he had seen a woman throw herself out the window and two men hang themselves to escape repatriation.

Wladka Meid, who at 17 became a heroine of the Warsaw Ghetto, survives today because she does not look Jewish. Speaking perfect German, she fooled the Nazis, smuggling ammunition into the Ghetto for General Bor's futile uprising, smuggling out Jewish children to the safety of Christian families in the Polish underground.

Nobody cares about these things any more. UNRRA is about to go out of business. Everyone figured its job would be done by now.

SPORTS

BY HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Sports Editor

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Spencer J. Drayton is in the movies—and in eight minutes you get a pretty convincing idea of how his Thorndike Racing Protective Bureau works.

Spence Drayton is the star of an excellent RKO Pathe Sportscope, "Racing Sleuth." The ex-G-Man came to the turf a little-known figure. Some said he was treading pretty deep water.

Some years they have portrayed the pretty side of sports, and as such have done a somewhat superficial job. Some golf shorts have been first rate and a few good football battles have been made, but, as a rule, the sport is shown with its best foot forward.

"RACING SLEUTH" shows you the other side, too, and a lively story combines a mystery scenario with the thrills of big-league racing. Produced by Joe Walsh and written by Burton Benjamin, former NEA sports writer, it is neither superficial nor concocted. It offers a fast-moving documentary treatment of a dramatic sports accomplishment without the bogus Hollywood touch. It is the nearest thing to a genuine sports picture yet produced.

The motion picture industry ought to do more like it. "Racing Sleuth" is timely following the more recent, six score which plagued boxing, professional football, and college basketball. It well illustrates the war between sports and crime—and what racing is doing about it. Based on the famed Allpunch case of 1945, in which the vastly superior Sea Command was run in for a plater at Rockingham and $30,000 cleaned up, the picture shows through dramatic case history how the former FBI men met the challenge of racketeering thugs and checked an insidious plot. Blackmail and doctored horses figure in the investigation. It's real cops-and-robbers stuff. There are no professional actors, which eliminates the ham and improves it, because everybody is himself. Drayton Bureau men play themselves. So do the racketeering people. Two track employees, cast in the heavy roles, carry off their assignments well. One is Bill Passen, publicity aide at Hialeah Park, where the picture was made. He looks more like a tout than the last one that touted you off a winner. Jockey Ted Atkinson has a part. "Racing Sleuth" traces a TRPB investigation step by step. You quickly get the idea of endless questioning, a long and careful investigation, the weighing of evidence, and finally there is the bold solution.

ALL DRESSED UP AND NO PLACE TO GO

THINGS ON THE FEMININE SIDE

By Dorothy Collins
NBC Fashion Editor

Give the sun a break, gals, says big athletic Warder Donovan. That's what bathing suits are for—at least from a man's point of view.

Women take off as many clothes as possible," says NBC's singing star, "when they go to the beach and that is fine. Then they ruin the whole works by hiding behind sun glasses, wrapping themselves like mummies in beach robes, and sitting under concealing umbrellas. It's discouraging."

Beach accessories aren't the only things that discourage young Mr. Donovan, who sang one of the leads in this season's Broadway production "Toplighty of Notre Dame."

"Why," he wailed, "do flat chested girls wear those unbecoming two-piece bathing suits. It only points out a fact they should try and hide."

Like many another ex-GI, he remembers and likes the scanty beachwear he saw in Southern France. But there is still his inevitable warning: "A gal's gotta have the figure for it."

Those French suits were bare and low," he remarked, "and they were all in bright colors." One of the things that "kills" Mr. Donovan is to see black suits on the beach. He also refuses to be tranquil about women wearing gaudy jewelry on the beach. He thought the reason women did it was because they were afraid their friends wouldn't recognize them without it.

Q—What is a basilisk?
A—A harmless lizard about eight inches long. In the Middle Ages it was believed that if a basilisk looked you in the eye you would die on the spot.

A new post-war passenger and cargo service to the Mediterranean is being inaugurated by the M.S. Sobieski of the Gdynia American Line, the reconitioned troop ship sailing from New York and calling at Cannes and Genoa.

BARBS

AN Ohio judge banned children from his divorce court because he thought it gave them a poor outlook on life. For this reason the kids shouldn't be allowed to go home.

The biggest noise in the business world is smart enough to keep quiet about it. A Florida man was pinched for touring on a golf course in his auto. There's a right way and a wrong way to drive on the fairway.

And now the Mrs. can spring housecleaning on the Mr. Regardless of how many dates a girl has there usually is room for one more.

OUT OUR WAY

By J. R. Williams

Q—Did Steily swing left or right in April parliamentary elections?
A—Mostly Socialists and Communists were elected, evoking predictions that Italy will go the same way in October.

Q—What is Franco's attitude toward Don Juan, pretender to the Spanish throne?
A—Since Franco's attempts for an understanding failed, he is restricting political activities of Don Juan's supporters.

Q—When did Palestine become a British mandate?
A—In 1922, as a result of World War I settlement. Prior to that Palestine was a part of the Ottoman Empire.

Q—Where is Assouan Dam?
A—Across the Nile in Upper Egypt. It was completed in 1933.

The school children from this community who ride to Cisco on

And in expressing her gratification, Patsy Denton stated that not only were the roads smoother, but the road crew had cut back many of the overhanging limbs from trees along the road that had been scraping the bus windows.

The pupils on the Long Branch bus are jolly bunch of well-behaved children and it is a treat to be with them occasionally, study their interesting faces note some of their playful pranks and hear them join in some of the popular or sacred songs. John Edward Dudley, as driver of the school bus, has been careful and cheerful in his service and has won the praise of many of the 40 or 50 pupils.

Want to Run a "Collective" Farm?

Was reading the other day about the "collective" farms they have in certain countries. It seems the folks who run them have plenty of help... good hours... and the best equipment.

We're willing to work hard, but we like to farm the land our own way, put our own value on the crops, and relax as we like—if only with a temperate, companionable glass of beer.

Sounds pretty nice—till you learn that the "farmer" doesn't own his land, or even farm it, in any sense. He takes orders from the state; produces whatever they want him to produce, at prices they set. Even his off-hours are spent according to state regulations. No, that would never go here.

From where I sit, collective farming may produce results. But the American way—freedom to work and relax as we see fit—is what makes this country a great place to live. So let's not change it!

'Old-Fashioned'

Because Redfeather (Mrs. Donald White), a Blackfoot Indian, wore the shorts she displays above, John Duke, her landlord, locked her out of her Chicago apartment, she claimed in court. Judge took one look, thought of modern beach shorts and said, "Those are old-fashioned." He dismissed her disorderly conduct charge against Duke who promised not to lock her out again.

Dallas Gets Told Off About Its Airport

DALLAS, Tex. (UP)—Dallas' Love Field airport isn't the worst in the United States—it's second to Chicago. That blistering charge was made by Dudley M. Steele, member of the American Association of Airport Executives, during a stopover here.

City officials were quick to answer the charge pointing out that the "messed up" appearance of Love Field was due to construction work under way there.

Steele once lived here. He now is manager of Lockheed's air terminal at Burbank, Calif. He charged city politics kept a first-rate city with a fifth-rate airport. Steele was critical of the city's successful demand that air lines pay higher landing fees. Proper management is the answer, he asserted.

BERLIN (UP)—Past the guards at the gray stone building in Berlin is the room of the big circular table. Sitting there are the four men.

The big, somewhat portly Russian is bushily white-haired. Around the table from him is a dark, square-jawed Frenchman, sitting beside an American who smiles with a wide show of teeth. The other is a thin Englishman, long, immaculately dressed.

Holding sway amid fields of rubble, these men are the rulers of Berlin.

Outside their stone building called the Allied Kommandatura, the sunlight in the spring day of Berlin, strikes across blocks of jumbled debris, and warns the 3,500,000 German inhabitants of the capital who have survived war and the winters.

Military traffic moves across the four zones of the "quadrilateral" city, stores are open, people move in the streets.

Berlin, despite its pummeled condition, still is one of the big cities of the world, and these four men—military governors—are in absolute command.

Russian, American, Englishman, Frenchman—the four are as unlike as the mayors of New York, London, Paris and Moscow. Each is influenced by what he personally believes or what his government orders. Each has his own ideas for a German government.

To the ruined city, to act as military governor, the Soviet Union has sent one of its war-time commanders, Maj. Gen. Alexander Kotikov, who was in action at Leningrad. The United States has followed suit with its hard-hitting leader of the 102nd "Osark" Division, the straight-talking Maj. Gen. Frank A. Keating.

France sent Gen. Jean Ganeval perhaps the ablest diplomat of them all. Britain named her career-soldier, Maj. Gen. E. F. Nares.

These men can make or break Berlin. They write its laws as they see fit. They censor the German central administration whenever they think it necessary. They rule an all German disputes which the Germans cannot settle among themselves.

At times more than a few of the Kommandatura discussions have been heated. Relations between the powers seemed to hang by a thread, and a break seemed inevitable. Yet there always has been some saving factor.

After one debate, when the tempers of all were on edge, Kotikov seized his hat and started to march stiffly from his conference room. Keating jabbed his riding crop into the Russian general's midriff section, saying "c'est la guerre?"

The tension was broken and all smiled. They parted friends.

Keating draws much respect from Kotikov and the Soviet authorities. The Russians like him also because he never quibbles. When he makes a statement he does it openly, frankly and gets immediately to the point.

Kotikov's tactics are different. The Russian is a trained and skillful diplomat as well as a soldier. His talk has more of the timed phraseology of diplomacy.

When conflicts arise, Keating usually is paired with Nares. The British general is the American's closest ally in the Kommandatura arguments. He is tallest of them all, reserved, shrewd in his commitments.

Of the four, the governor with perhaps the best understanding of the German people is Ganeval. Giving the impression of being a born diplomat, he has complete knowledge of parliamentary procedures, and he has a clever way

RETURN ENGAGEMENT

THE STORY: After a lifetime of dealing the world, the great actress Sophie van Eyck comes home to the little Maine coast town where she was born.

SOPHIE remembered the instant she became conscious that waking today was different from waking yesterday, but it was another instant before she knew why.

"My dear Sophie: Since you so much wish it, I should consider myself churlish indeed not to accept your offer of a home in the spirit of kindness which, I am certain, prompted your thinking of me. I was aware, of course, that you had come to America, having read the interview with you in Variety.

"Godfrey." It was exactly like him, extraordinarily like him; pompous, without warmth, a little descending and with its dignity just slightly marred by clichés—"wind up my affairs." Surely, at least they could not now, thought Sophie, be affairs of the heart.

RETURN ENGAGEMENT

THE STORY: After a lifetime of dealing the world, the great actress Sophie van Eyck comes home to the little Maine coast town where she was born.

MIS FLAHERTY opened her notebook, cleared her throat, and sat on a small stool near the dais on which Sophie was enthroned.

"If you please, Mademoiselle," said Marcel, "not in that place. You are enchantingly beautiful, but it is Madame van Eyck I wish to immortalize in paint."

"I beg your pardon," said Miss Flaherty, not at all offended. Sir Charles placed a chair for her behind Marcel, so that she had to lean forward and peer around the easel in order to see Sophie.

"Anything you think will interest your readers," Sophie said graciously. "But nothing, please, about my escape from France! Shortly before the Germans came my dear husband died, so it was a very sad time for me. It is better to talk about it. It is better forgotten, n'est-ce pas, Marcel?"

"Certainly, Mademoiselle Flaherty," said Marcel with an exaggerated bow. "You spoke of your husband's death, Madame," said Miss Flaherty. "Isn't this—Monsieur your husband?"

Portrait of an Elder Statesman

It was Marcel's sharp ears which heard the timid knocking at the door. The artist threw up his arms in irritation and Sophie broke her pose.

"What is it?" she called. It was Bridget. "A young lady to see you, Madame. She says she's a reporter."

"Quick, Sir Charles," commanded Madame, "hide my mending basket! And take my glasses. It would be dreadful to have it known that I darn your socks."

The girl who entered with businesslike briskness was stocky, bespectacled and not over 18 years of age. She evinced no sign of shyness in the presence of the great lady as she transferred her pad and pencil to her left hand to extend her right in greeting.

A little taken aback, Sophie responded with outstretched hand and said kindly, "Come, child, that's right, you've nothing to be afraid of." She was not used to people who were at their ease before she put them there.

"How do you do," the girl said politely to Marcel. Sir Charles, acknowledging his introduction, also said, "How do you do."

She turned and noticed him in surprise. "Oh, I thought you were the butler Mr. Hathaway told me about. Excuse me."

"But he is the butler," Sophie cried. "The greatest butler in the history of the English stage."

"In my day," said Sir Charles with dignity, "I have been butler to all the best families in the drama."

"My name is Elsie Flaherty," the girl said, unimpressed. "I'm from the high school in Goose Neck. I won the contest to be the one to interview you during the summer for the fall issue of The Scimitar. That's our magazine."

"Sit down, Miss Flaherty," said Sophie, "sit down." She threw her head back into the Pose and waited with pleasure for the questions she had not heard for so long.

"But we were very happy, Miss Flaherty. Mr. Bernheim was the kindest, most considerate of husbands. He built a little studio for Marcel at the foot of our garden in Antibes."

MISS FLAHERTY cleared her throat and said in a businesslike tone, "Madame van Eyck, I had no idea, I kind of thought, well, you see, I want my article about you to be different. Everyone knows you were a famous actress, but how many people know about Sophie van Eyck the woman I'd like to write something human about you, something that shows you're just like other people, underneath."

Sophie's fine dark eyes widened in indignation. She drew herself erect and said in her most impressive contralto, "But, my dear, I am NOT like other people! I am van Eyck."

"Oh, of course, I understand that," Miss Flaherty said reasonably. "I know how great you were, in your day. My father was telling me he saw you in Boston in 1910. That was long before I was born, of course."

Sir Charles allowed his aquiline nose to wrinkle slightly with a suggestion of scorn. "Impossible," he said. "The 1910 season was spent in London. A whole year. It was Ipsen. Hedda—Nora—"
