WASHINGTON COLUMN

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NEA)—Kansas Sen Arthur Capper's Agriculture Committee is expected to report favorably this week on a bill "to establish a national soil fertility policy."

First thing the bill would do is give the Tennessee Valley Authority $9 million to build an experimental plant at Mobile, Ala. to make triple superphosphate fertilizer by a new blast furnace process.

Then the Department of Agriculture would be empowered to take the 100,000 tons of fertilizer this plant would produce, buy another million tons or more from private industry, and give it all away free except for the freight cost.

Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson is again doing it on this lavish scale. But the idea of the bill is to conduct test demonstrations on 2 per cent of all the farms in every state in the Union.

All this would go on for five years. Then the test plant would have to be sold to the industry and the farmers who wanted triple superphosphate would have to buy it on the open market.

Now this looks like a nice fat subsidy for the fertilizer trust. It makes the government do a basic research job, it develops a lot of new customers and then it turns the business over to private enterprise.

Leading fertilizer manufacturers testified they feared that the government made a success of this experiment, it might tend towards nationalization or socialization of fertilizer resources, manufacture and distribution.

Original sponsor of this soil fertility bill is the American Farm Bureau Federation. Co-sponsor is the National Farmers' Union. This gives the bill support of big and little farmers, and it isn't often that they get together on anything.

The Farm Bureau's real inspiration for this idea comes from Tennessee Valley Authority experiments on fertilizers. In 1933 TVA started test demonstrations on 2 per cent of the farms in its area. Fertilizer use increased up to 400 per cent.

Then TVA developed an electric furnace method of producing phosphates. During the war TVA produced 60 per cent of the phosphorus used in munitions. In spite of all these benefits which the industry has gained, it still backs any extension of this type of research.

What really bothers farm experts is the need for re-enriching U. S. soil. Heavily drained by over-production in recent years, the fertility of American farmland is said to be running out.

TVA tests indicate that what is needed is the application of 75 pounds of triple superphosphate per acre per year to establish and maintain fertility on pastures and cropland. Present U. S. use averages only 14 pounds per acre per year.

In other words, what the country is said to need is an annual production of six million tons of triple superphosphate. What it is getting under the fertilizer industry's production of what it thinks it can sell is one million tons a year.

SPORTS

BY JOHN P. CARMICHAEL

(The writer, sports editor of the Chicago Daily News, is pinching today for Harry Grayson, who is on vacation.)

CHICAGO—(NEA)—For this month, at least, Chicago is capital of the sports world.

Not even little old New York, whence Harry Grayson presumably has fled to enjoy a vacation, can muster up four events such as (a) the All-Star game, (b) the Joe Louis-Bob Fawcett exhibition, (c) the Tony Zale-Rocky Graziano title fight July 16, and (d) the $100,000 Arlington Classic on July 26.

Now normally the eastern folks don't cotton much to the Classic, regarding it more or less as just a local extravaganza which never decides anything except who gets $78,000 or thereabouts.

But this year the Classic could just about determine the 3-year-old of the year. In other words, Jeff Pilot, just retired, won the Derby, Fawcett the Preakness and Phalanx the Belmont Stakes.

What more natural than Fawcett and Phalanx running it off in the Classic?

The All-Star game is baseball's biggest mid-summer show. Seats were sold out in six days. The home of the Cubs accommodates some 43,000 people, including standing room. Those few seats which scalpers were able to obtain went for as much as $25 a pair.

There's little question but what the Zale-Graziano fight stands as the fistic morsel of the year. Despite pleas to take the bout outside, the promoters decided to stage it in the Stadium which will accommodate 20,000.

Promoters Irv Schoenwald and Art Wirtz (the latter boss of the Stadium) insist they have made plans to air-cool the Stadium against the possible muggings of a typical July winter. Ringside seats at $30 tops are at a premium and individual checks totaling $8000 to $8000 will have to be returned for lack of adequate tickets.

Zale should be the favorite. He's the champion and he's a Gary, Ind. boy, which makes him part of Greater Chicago. He looks as lean and fit as he ever did and has started outdoor drills at Marigold Gardens on Chicago's north side. For $6.50 a fan can get a seat in the Stadium balcony.

THE Louis-Fawcett go was scheduled for the benefit of Nate Lewis, the veteran matchmaker, who is confined with a serious illness following a stroke in Florida last winter.

Fawcett receives $1000 for his efforts in a four-round affair. He is a strongly-built, hard-hitting light-heavy who has had plenty of experience and piled up quite a few triumphs here during the winter, including two straight knockouts wins over Johnny Colan.

July is a pretty busy sports month for Chicago. Hotel reservations have been wiped out and incoming trains and planes booked to capacity.

With the All-Star game and the Zale-Graziano fight less than 10 days apart and Lewis making his lone appearance of the outdoor season, visiting scribes can come early and stay late.

'Hey, C'mon! Finish That Corral! Time's Awastin'!

DEATH of a DOLL

By Hilda Lawrence

THE STORY: Ruth Miller, a salesgirl at Blackman's department store, has been looking forward to moving into an attractive residence club for girls. But the evening she arrives, she sees something in the lobby that terrifies her. She decides to leave next day. But next day she is forced to attend the weekly tea-party afternoon tea. Bag-doll costumes are distributed for a party. Scared stiff by now, she finally returns to her room, packs her suitcase, decides to escape via the fire escape. Before she can do so, the housekeeper calls her, requests that she stay with a sick girl for a couple of hours. Against her will, Ruth does so.

though her door was less than three yards away, she ran. By this time she was frantic, and she walked the floor until she was calm enough to plan again. The fire escape had been a bad idea in the first place. Dangerous. The main entrance was still hopeless; at 10:30 the lobby and the lounge would be occupied.

I'll go in the morning, she thought, as early as 6. I'll put the blue in my suitcase, and if anybody says anything I'll say I'm taking it to the cleaner's. They'll all see me spill the tea. Then I'll go to Blackman's for one day only, so if anybody checks on me I'll be there, and I'll look natural. As if I meant to come back here tomorrow night.

AT 11 o'clock she was thirsty, so thirsty that thinking about the cold water in the bathroom was almost unbearable. Shining nickel taps, beaded with cold moisture. Was it safe to go out in the hall at 11? She wet her dry lips and figured her chances in the hall. She was in a blind alley, a dead end. Packrooms to the right, fire door to the left. Beyond the fire door, the stairs and elevator. If someone came down the hall on the other side of the door, would she hear the steps in time? Then, as she visualized the hall and saw the door, the bath, and the packrooms, she saw something else. The telephone. Black, shining, beautiful. The telephone!

There were millions of people at the other end of the telephone. The whole world was at the other end. Paris, London, New York, San Francisco, Chicago.

She gasped. Chicago! She threw a triumphant look about her. Chicago!

Miss Plummer's voice was sleepy, but she didn't sound surprised.

"Miss Plummer," she whispered, "Miss Plummer, this is Ruth Miller. I've got to make a very important call. It's long distance, Miss Plummer, but do I have to pay for it right away?"

Miss Plummer said the call could be charged, and there was a new interest in her voice. "Go right ahead, dear," she said.

"It's to a Mr. Norman Crawford, person to person, please. In Chicago. I don't know the number or the address, but he's very prominent in Chicago and I know you can find him. A Mr. Norman Crawford in Chicago, the one who used to know a Ruth Miller."

SHE leaned against the wall, one hand still on the door. Mr. Crawford would know what to do. He was the one who'd given her the money and told her to go away. He'd remember. He'd realize how hard it was to get a voice that was New York, a voice that was Chicago. Behind them was a sound of humming. She called it singing, she called it a singing wire. It was like music.

A new sound joined the other. A low grinding sound like a metal wheel turning.

That's interference on the line, she thought. It's got to stop or I won't be able to hear. I've got to hear. "Miss Plummer?" she said.

"There's something on the line." Then she remembered how clear Miss Plummer's voice had been, even while the grinding sound went on.

That meant the sound was outside the telephone.

She fought paralysis and turned her head. The heavy fire door was opening slowly, inching open as she watched. Then it stopped.

She flung herself into her room and locked the door.

Under The Dome At Austin

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—Mrs. Stephen F. Austin II is only $18 away today from owning a valuable three-acre tract on Mustang Island because she dug into some old musty papers recently.

Mrs. Austin, a San Antonian and apparently no relation to the Father of Texas from what land office officials can gather, found a receipt that her uncle, J. E. Fitzsimmons, had paid in full back in December, 1909, for the tract on the island off the Texas coast.

With her newly-found property, the land office says, Mrs. Austin can build into a profitable venture for the vacation traffic anything from a hot-dog stand to a full-fledged tourist resort.

It was just a lapse of memory that caused the land to lie unclaimed for 38 years, because Mrs.

Austin had known of the transaction her uncle had made—but had stuck the receipt away and had forgotten about it.

The three-one-acre tracts had cost Fitzsimmons only $2 an acre, but the last office estimates they are now worth about $100-$200 an acre.

Now all Mrs. Austin must do is pay $15 for a patent—a certification signed by the governor that she has rightful claim and that a survey has been filed in the land office—and $3 to record the document.

The land office adds that similar inquiries are received regularly at the rate of about three a month. However, few of them are as authentic as Mrs. Austin's, as less than one-third stand the test of checking the files.

An elderly woman in Mississippi, however, isn't going to get any land even though muster roll records of the Texas Revolution proved her claim that her grandfather was a doctor who treated Sam Houston at the Battle of San Jacinto.

The aged woman claimed she is entitled to a land grant under the two state constitutions which preceded adoption of the present constitution in 1876.

But the land office told her—as they tell 100,000 persons a year who claim land from the state on the basis that their predecessors fought in the Texas Revolution against Mexico—that the state has no more land to give.

All the land now is set aside for the public school fund, even the approximately 38,000,000 acres of submerged land claimed by the state in a law passed by the 50th legislature this year extending Texas' boundary out to the edge of the continental shelf.

The Mississippi woman's claim, as in many other similar cases, land officials said, also was not granted because her grandfather had not exercised his right to a land grant as provided following the Texas Revolution by the legislature.

The land office adds that many claims were not exercised by veterans of the Revolution because they came to Texas merely "for the scrap" and returned to their homes in Tennessee and Kentucky and the Eastern settled country after the fight was over.

Some veterans also were trapped in epidemics of disease while returning home and never were heard from again.

The land office cited the case of Harvey Cox, who fought with Fanning at Goliad.

Returning to his home in the East Cox went by way of New Orleans, where a typhus epidemic killed hundreds just shortly after Texas won its independence in 1836. Cox died in the plague-swept New Orleans.

Four measures affecting libraries in Texas were passed by the 50th legislature. Greatest effect probably will come from an act that permits county commissioners' courts to set aside from the general tax fund, each year not more than 10 cents on $100 valuation for free county libraries. The money may be used for securing sites and making permanent improvements such as a library building or for maintenance of the library. Now there are but 37 tax-supported county libraries in the state.

Another of the new laws permits the custodians of public records to lend to the library of any state-supported college such parts of their archive and records as have become mainly of historical value.

The other two acts deal with microfilms. One permits the state library and historical commission to establish a records division with authority to make microfilm copies of newspapers, records and historical documents for the state departments and institutions, and also for city and county libraries. The copies for the state departments will be made free of charge and those for city and county libraries at cost.

Commissioners' courts are also authorized by an act of the session to microfilm records. When duplicates of public records are made, the originals may be destroyed provided notice is given to the state librarian. If the state librarian decides the records are needed for the state library they will be transferred to it or to one of the state supported colleges.

The state library appropriation for the next two years to begin Sept. 1, was increased in the departmental appropriation bill. The state library got a 60 per cent boost for the first year and 70 per cent for the second. These raises will provide $77,324 and $80,724

They Can't Sour His Milk of Human Kindness

Barrage of Flying Rocks Fail To Halt This Thief

OGDEN, Utah (UP) — A. C. Johnson of the Riverdale Lumber Co. did his best to stop a fleeing robber by using the only weapon he had—rocks. Johnson discovered the man just leaving after having rifled the cash register. He picked up a handful of rocks and started throwing.

The robber ran for his car, got in and roared away. Said Johnson, "I took his windshield out and just missed his head, but he got away."

Estates Going Cheap But There's Catch

By Ole J. Nordland, United Press Staff Correspondent EL CENTRO, Cal. (UP) — The California real estate boom has landed 'way out in the desert, Evelyn Westerfield, Imperial County recorder, revealed.

Middle westerners, mainly, are buying two-and-a-half acres of unbridled California sunshine for $50, eight unseen and heat unfelt, yet.

For in northeastern Imperial County (not to be confused with rich, productive Imperial Valley) 120 degrees is not even considered a mean temperature.

While there is no argument that the sun shines bright on the Chocolate Mountains, where the late Gen. George S. Patton's men trained for African warfare, there is great doubt that the entire area could grow a wart on a small toad, the recorder said.

Many buyers walk into her office and ask, "Where's the road to my property?" They refuse to believe here when she tells them there is none.

The county assessor doesn't even take the trouble to assess most of the land for taxes, the recorder revealed.

Since Jan. 22, 1943, one land company alone recorded sales of 163 tracts, most of them of from five to 10 acres, in land where distance is measured by miles to the next water hole, baked by a desert sun, where even the roads Gen. Patton's men built for maneuvers are now impassable.

The recorder hopes the buyers get $50 worth of "good dreaming" about the hunk of sunshine they are buying, she said, for "that's about the only satisfaction they'll get."

COAST DAMS CALLED THREAT TO SALMON

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (UP)—Columbia River salmon, known the world over, are doomed to extinction by the great dams rising in the Pacific Northwest, fishery interests told a federal hearing here.

Proposed new dams across the Lower Snake and Columbia Rivers would block off the salmon's wondrous migration to their spawning grounds, witnesses testified before the Columbia Basin Interagency Committee hearing. Commercial and sport fishermen advocated a 10-year moratorium on downriver dam construction while the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service tried to relocate the major portion of the salmon run below the sites of the new dams.

Value of the present fish ladders at Bonneville Dam, 40 miles up the Columbia from Portland, Ore., was debated at length by witnesses. Proponents of more dams pointed out a record number of fish had passed Bonneville this spring by leaping from pool to pool up the graduated ladder.

But fishing interests charged there were "significant losses" in both upstream and downstream migrants at Bonneville, reflected in decreased commercial catches at Astoria, Ore.

Dr. Paul Needham, Oregon game commission biologist, warned, "The evidence seems to point to the fact we can't have salmon and high dams, too."

Arnie J. Suomela, Oregon master fish warden, said salmon have only a certain amount of stored energy to sustain them on their long upstream battle to their spawning grounds. He prophesied losses would be accelerated at each successive dam the fish had to surmount.

Members of Columbia River Indian tribes, whose forefathers had fished the same waters for untold centuries, also turned out, some in business suits and others in braided hair and colorful tribal costumes, to oppose any new dams.

The Indians called on the government to live up to treaties signed in 1855 guaranteeing the Indians' right to fish the river. Even today, salmon provides as much as 70 per cent of the Indians' diet.

Proponents of the dam construction program stressed the need of cheap hydroelectric power and cheap river navigation to the "inevitable growth" of the Pacific Northwest. They claimed overfishing, and not the dams, had curtailed the salmon catch over recent years, and said a 15-year moratorium on commercial fishing—in-
