Escaped Convicts Commandeer Car

Well...
I Dunno,
But...

The following is typical of the life of an editor.
"Sad Typographical Error"
History records no sadder typographical error than that which occurred in a California mining newspaper edited by Bret Harte. Harte penned an obituary for the wife of a prominent citizen. "She was known far and wide," he wrote, "for her charity."
The printer set it: "She was known far and wide for her chastity." Harte, determined to make the compositor check back on his copy so he'd be less careless another time, marked a huge question mark in the margin of the proof.
The paper went to press and was mailed during the night. In the morning Harte found, to his horror, that his correction had been faithfully executed, that the printer followed copy and put a question mark after the sentence: "She was known far and wide for her chastity (?)"
Oh me, we know just how he felt.

Frank B. Rys, board marker at the Chicago Board of Trades, marks up 256.3 as Friday's low in May wheat, as the grain prices plunged down for the third straight day. Government regulations prohibit a price change of more than 10 points per day. Note Thursday's close, 266.3, at top of May column. (NEA Telephoto).

WTCC ANNOUNCES PLANS FOR WATER CONSERVATION

ABILENE, Feb. 7.—The West Texas Chamber of Commerce has gone down to the well with a bucket and has put action in all the talk about water. This is the belief of D. A. Bandeen, general manager of the organization, after an all-day meeting at Abilene, where its water resource development commission wrote a remedial program. This program is in the form of a declaration of policy which will provide for both service and underground water inventories heretofore undreamed of in the 104 million acres semiarid expanse that has only three running streams, excepting the Rio Grande.
Under this declaration of policy proponents of both underground and surface waters will unite in their efforts first to see that mankind has sufficient drinking water, and then to carry out the principle that agriculture is in fact an industry in West Texas and should be given preferential consideration on a parity with industry in water usage under a state law.
Looking ahead several years, members of the commission see an endeavor to halt rainfall where it hits the ground, creating not only a greater form of flood control, but also storing water in the areas where it is most needed, rather than letting it pass in a mad, soil eroding and destructive rush to the Gulf of Mexico.
This probably would result in scores of small dams built on water sheds all over the area; dams that will not only serve a purpose of impounding flood waters, but will provide water for domestic use, agriculture and industry, the commission members say. This program would be in lieu of larger dams that might be built under a flood control program and to furnish hydroelectric power.
To protect this principle, the commission adopted the following: "That use of surface water for hydroelectric power purposes be opposed unless wholly conforming with the state's present prior water rights law on surface waters."
The commission meeting in Abilene was presided over by Winfield Holbrook of Plainview, who was named chairman. Following the West Texas Chamber of Commerce referendum meeting in November, other members of the commission are James N. Allison; Midland publisher; vice chairman; W. O. Fortenberry, Lubbock land owner; Charles South, Coleman attorney and land owner, and C. E. Coombes, Stamford attorney and land owner. They represent both underground and surface water users, and while their views in the past have been divergent, they united ideas at the commission conference to afford protection for both rights.
The importance of this is recognized in the need of millions of gallons of water for irrigation in the High Plains country of West Texas, which has been called "the bread basket of the world."
The commission also asked the WTCC board to employ the services of an engineer an counselor to begin a study of the water possibilities, and went on record in favor of additional state and matching federal funds for the Board of Water Engineers "with the view of aiding and abetting water discoveries."

Consider Rush Extension Of Rent Controls

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans today were considering an emergency 30-day extension of the present rent law to keep controls on while they thrash out their differences over a new bill.
Chairman Charles W. Tobey, R., N. H., of the Senate banking committee said he was thinking "seriously" of such a move since drawing up the proposed rent bill during by a subcommittee.
After a stormy committee session, the bill was sent back to the subcommittee late yesterday for revision. The measure would have ended rent ceilings entirely in several major cities and permitted higher rents in others.
Sen. Harry P. Cain, R., Wash., will not present the subcommittee modified proposals until Feb. 16—only 13 days before the present law expires.
Tobey said it appeared likely that only temporary extension could keep the law alive. It was believed both Republican and Democratic leaders would urge senate action on a stop-gap measure.

More Fighting Breaks Out In Kashmir Province

NEW DELHI — Renewed communal warfare broke out in Kashmir province today as followers of Mohandas K. Gandhi completed arrangements to scatter his ashes on the sacred waters of the Ganges river next Thursday.
An Indian government communique said Kashmiri Moslem forces, presumably from Pakistan, attacked government troops at four points around the important communications center of Srinagar in southern Kashmir.
The largest attack was made by 1,000 raiders, the government announced. The raiders were said to be armed with mortars and machine guns. All attacks were beaten back with heavy casualties and some prisoners were taken.
The renewed flareup of fighting in Kashmir came only a week after Gandhi was shot and killed by a Hindu extremist because he successfully advocated a program of peace between Hindus and Moslems.

Bobby Cross Wins In Tyler Golden Gloves Tourney

Bobby Cross, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Cross of Kilgore, formerly of Ranger, and grandson of V. V. Cooper, Sr., came out winner in Tyler's annual Golden Gloves tournament held this week.
Bobby was winner in the heavy weight division and will enter the gloves tournament in Fort Worth February 11.
Following is a sports writer's description of Bobby's first bout: Vicious right cross by big Bobby Cross, promising young Kilgore heavyweight, brought a surprise and abrupt ending to the opening night matches in the eighth annual Tyler Courier-Times-Telegraph Golden Gloves Tournament here Tuesday night.
The blond giant, former Kilgore High School football star, levered the boom on Overton's Jack Corrie in one minute and 20 seconds of the first round to score a clean-cut knockout.
Cross set up his opponent with a series of hard left jabs, and then finished across the clincher in the final minute of the round.

Two New Cold Waves Sweeping Down From North

Two separate cold waves were sweeping into the country early today, one west of the Rock mountain tains along the Pacific coast and the other to the east of the mountains in the north central states.
The cold air mass moving along the west coast came out of Alaska, carrying with it a heavy snow and rain storm. Forecasters said it threatened to engulf the citrus groves of Southern California.
The other cold wave came down from the Yukon. Already it was creeping into the Dakotas. The weather bureau said it would push temperatures down to five below zero at Chicago by tomorrow night.
The new frigid blasts from the north threatened to increase consumption of the nation's critically short supply of gas and fuel oil.

Bomber Crashes

HARRISON, Ark. — A B-25 Army bomber crashed into a mountainside near Jasper, Arkansas, last night and reportedly killed five crew members.
State police said the plane burst into flame. They placed a guard around it until the fire burned itself out.

South Governors Open Meeting

WAKULLA SPRINGS, Fla. — A potentially explosive conference of southern governors opened today with Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi due to plead for an organized south-wide revolt against President Truman's civil rights program.
Despite efforts of several southern chief executives here to dissuade him, Wright said he would offer as soon as possible after the conference opened a strong resolution calling for an all-south meeting to protest Mr. Truman's action.
The new frigid blasts from the north threatened to increase consumption of the nation's critically short supply of gas and fuel oil.

Airline To Use Non-Union Pilots

MIAMI — National Airlines planned today to resume operations with non-union pilots after firing 145 fliers whose strike has grounded the company's planes since Tuesday.
The drastic action was unprecedented in airline history, but the company said it had received sufficient qualified replacements to begin operations at any time.
No date was set for the first planes to take off with non-union pilots at the controls.

COVER TWO WOMEN, MAN TO FORCE WAY INTO AUTO

SANDY POINT, Tex.— Three escaped convicts at Darrington State Prison Farm today forced themselves into a car occupied by two women and a man after slugging a guard in the prison laundry.
The Harris county sheriff's department reported that the trio was armed with a .38 caliber pistol taken from the guard.
The convicts were part of a crew of seven working in the laundry when the break occurred. The escape took place at 8:45 A. M.
O. B. Ellis, general manager of the state prison system, said the four remaining convicts reported the break after they took the injured guard to prison officials. Ellis said the guard was not injured seriously.
For the past three months, the Darrington farm has been the scene of strife and escapes.
Shortly before Christmas, almost 400 youthful convicts staged a four-day hunger strike, and last month 11 convicts working in the fields escaped after they pulled a guard from his horse and took his gun.
Ellis has termed the farm "the no. 1 problem" in the state prison system.

6,888 QUALIFY AS VOTERS IN EASTLAND CO.

Eastland County this year will have a potential voting strength of 6,888 as compared with 4,378 five years ago. Of the 6,888 qualified voters this year, 6,758 of them paid poll taxes and 130 were exemptions. Four years ago 4,325 paid poll taxes and 53 were exemptions.

St. Rita's Catholic School with the smallest enrollment of any of the schools in Ranger, contributed the largest amount of money to the March of Dimes.
A total of $31.50 was collected and turned over to the chairman closest to St. Rita's was Hodges Oak Park with $21.50.
Nice going for St. Rita's, one of Ranger's finest institutions.
Again the Jaycees appeal to the public to observe the "dim your lights" law in town as well as on the highways.
The recently enacted traffic code makes it an offense to fail to dim your lights when meeting cars and currently the Jaycees all over the state are conducting a campaign to enlighten the people on the law.
It is particularly bad in downtown streets. Aside from being blinded by bright car lights, drivers have added reflection of street and shop lights. Pedestrians as well as cars are endangered by undimmed lights in downtown districts.
Well, those Jaycees are at it again and Friday will open their big Tri-County Livestock show.

* WASHINGTON COLUMN

BY PETER EDSON

NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—Twelve hundred reporters, radio vanguarders, photographers and news magazine correspondents are now accredited to the congressional press galleries in Washington. Before the war the number was about 500.

This remarkable growth of the word industry gives just a slight idea of what is now the biggest business in Washington—trying to keep track of what the government is doing, then passing on the information to interested parties.

The number of accredited correspondents by no means tells the whole story. In addition to the regular news men and women for mass circulation media, there is an unrecorded number of unaccredited correspondents for special and technical reports, news-letters, inside dope sheets, forecasting and interpretive services of restricted circulation. Their subscribers may be members of one industry or trade association. They may be lawyers or businessmen, willing to pay a price for technical information on what the government has done or is about to do.

There is no information on how many of these special news services are in existence. A lot of new ones are born—and die—every year. "A Handbook of Commercial, Financial and Information Services," compiled by Columbia University Library in 1944, listed 577 current, 311 discontinued.

This represents just the private enterprise reporting on Washington doings. The government itself is no slouch as a publisher. A Government Printing Office catalogue lists nearly 100 "periodicals" published by government agencies.

All this specialized news reporting business, that has grown up in Washington, has been made necessary by the increasing complexity of government operations. Covering Congress, the White House and the cabinet departments is no longer adequate.

According to a tabulation by Sen. George Aiken's Committee on Executive Expenditures, the federal government now consists of 632 divisions, 447 offices, 139 branches, 118 sections, 79 bureaus, 55 boards, 54 departments, 22 commissions, 29 corporations, 23 administrations—and 503 other miscellaneous units.

What each of them does is of utmost importance to somebody. Decisions of the Supreme Court, opinions of the attorney general, regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Interstate Commerce Commission, National Labor Relations Board and all the other independent agencies are, of course, reported first as spot news by the regular newspaper wire services and special correspondents. Not all this gets in the papers.

That's what makes business good for all these unaccredited news services. Their journalistic white wings come along and mop up.

FAVORITE vehicle and commonest form for this type of specialized reporting is now the Washington news-letter. In the early days of American journalism, the news-letter from London or elsewhere was the standard form of reporting. With the advent of the telegraph, however, this form of correspondence died out.

It was revived in 1913 by a couple of Philadelphia newsmen, Harry Eaton and F. H. Whaley, who started the Whaley-Eaton Service from Washington. In 1923, W. M. Kiplinger got into the business with his Washington Letter, which perfected the style and the format now followed by many imitators—a four-page weekly letter of 2500 words, written in a highly condensed, short sentence, know-it-all style.

There are now at least 100 of these news-letters. A few, like Kiplinger and Whaley-Eaton, try to cover the whole Washington scene. A majority of the letters are now highly specialized—Aviation Daily, Labor Relations Reporter, U. S. Law Weekly, Food and Drug Law Service, Food Topics, Tax Letter, Telecommunications Service, Government Securities Fortnightly, Decisions of the ICC, and so on. The whole business lives and feeds on this great sprawling monster, which the federal government has become.

SPORTS

BY HARRY GRAYSON

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Joe Waterman mails a newspaper clipping of a piece written on the legendary Denicio Cabanella by Mason Ancker, who ran the sports desk of the Manila Times in the early 1920's.

"I've always told you he was the greatest fighter for his inches that ever lived," Waterman, the Pacific coast promoter, reminds you.

Waterman, the old sea-going man, saw the first of the remarkable Filipino fighters, and like everybody else who had that privilege will talk about him all night.

"CABANELLA was a slight lad not more than 19," reports Ancker. "A natural flyweight, he could and did punch with the devastating effect of a 135-mm. cannon.

"Cleaning up all opposition in the Manila area, Denicio was obviously ready to come to the States." His manager, Frank Churchill and Eddie Tate, thought he needed more of a build-up, however, so they took him to Australia, where, in fast order and by knockouts he became successively the fly, bantam, feather, lightweight and welter champion of the land Down Under.

"Just imagine, this Cabanella had never weighed more than 111 pounds in his life—wringing wet.

"Next on the agenda loomed the trip to the States—and a lot of money. Steamer tickets were reserved, publicity prepared.

"And then the managers made the greatest blunder of their lives.

"Strictly on their records, Denicio was overmatched when he was signed to fight Eugene Criqui in Sydney, March 19, 1921.

"It was too much to expect a flyweight to put up any sort of a battle with a top-notch and seasoned feather.

"But it was a slaughter, with reverse English.

"By the time the 13th ended Criqui looked worse than he did in his 15-round scrap with Johnny Dundee at the Polo Grounds more than two years later.

"Denicio had floored the Frenchman 14 times—count 'em—14.

"The famous silver-plated jawbone was knocked loose from its moorings, was being sent shuffling across the bloody visage of M. Criqui from right to left and left to right with sickening regularity.

"When the 13th ended, Criqui sank on his stool, beaten, dispirited, discouraged.

"For in all this time he literally had been unable to lay a glove on the dancing apparition from Luzon.

"When the bell rang for the 14th, Denicio bounded to the center of the ring as fresh as a daisy.

"Criqui looked at his handlers, shook his head. Instead of throwing in the towel, those hard-boiled gentlemen pulled the chair from under the dumfounded French veteran and pushed him to the slaughter.

"Wearily Criqui raised his arms. "Denicio moved in for the kill. "Denicio Cabanella paused a split second on tiptoe, robbed his eyes once—and fell over dead!"

OFFICE Nurse

By Adelaide Humphries
 © by Adelaide Humphries; Distributed by NEA SERVICE, INC.

THE STORY: Janice Hilary, pretty, efficient young nurse to popular and handsome society doctor Eric Holbrook, runs his office for him. When little Betty Jane Cove, the other nurse suggests to spinster Miss Willows, one of the doctor's two secretaries, that Miss Hilary will never leave. Not unless something unforeseen occurs. It's a pity, a terrible pity. Janice Hilary returns home on this particular day to find her surprise visitor. It is Ben Archer, a childhood friend, back after three years overseas. Ben still appears to be in love with Janice, although she has never given him any encouragement. He does not approve of her being a career girl.

TONIGHT Miss Willows was having an orgy. She was going through some of her treasures. She was enjoying a nostalgic pleasure few collectors of the rarest prizes seldom entertained. For tonight, alone in her little flat, she was looking over some of the mementoes of the years spent in Dr. Holbrook's employ.

There were cards and ribbons saved from every gift the doctor had given her. And there had been a gift upon every occasion; flowers or candy until Janice Hilary had started purchasing every gift Dr. Holbrook gave, even the ones that went to his wife. Janice always chose something not only fitting but miraculously just what one wanted.

I wonder, Miss Willows thought, repacking a box of handkerchiefs which Janice had selected and which were far too fine to carry and risk losing. I wonder if the doctor's wife minds that his office nurse purchases the gifts her husband gives her. Birthday and Christmas and anniversary presents, and only recently all the new airplane luggage, when Mrs. Holbrook had decided, suddenly, to fly to France.

"So it's France this time, is it?" Miss Willows had said, setting her any living relative who could have been important enough to cause her to leave Dr. Holbrook. No one, nothing, could be that important. That had been what she had meant when she had told Betty Jane that Miss Hilary would never quit. No one who worked for the doctor ever wanted to leave.

"It's a pity—a terrible pity," she had said, not knowing what had made her say it.

Still, it was. For if Janice Hilary stayed on with Dr. Holbrook, as of course she would, she would never be able to leave. Even if some young man, as Betty Jane had suggested, should urge her to. And Miss Willows no longer resented or disapproved of Janice Hilary. She had become, indeed, very fond of the young nurse during these past four years of close association.

MAYBE, Miss Willows decided, I ought to say something to her.

What could she say? See here, Janice, unless you watch your step you'll walk the same chalk mark I follow. The same straight line to doom: to adore and serve—almost worship—a man who could never return even a degree of that devotion. Or, who should he ever want to do such a thing, would not dare. Or if he dared, still he could offer nothing more than for the woman to go on tending and caring for him.

Miss Willows did not know how she could be so certain that these could never be more than those stale crumbs for any woman who she did. She knew it with almost as much certainty as she knew that Janice Hilary would not be able to resign from her position unless the unforeseen made her resignation necessary.

Mrs. Holbrook was not the sort of wife who got—or gave—a divorce. And Janice, being a nice girl, was not the sort to have anything to do with a man who could not offer her marriage.

Dear me! Miss Willows thought, I ought not to think such things—could offend Dr. Holbrook and Janice. It wasn't as though either of them were in love with the other.

mouth in a prim line of disapproval when Janice had confided the destination of their employer's wife's most recent trip. "Gadling all over the globe. You'd think a wife would stay by her husband's side at least part of the time. But each season seems to call for some special place—Florida, Bar Harbor, Bermuda, Saratoga, Lake Placid—and now France."

"Mrs. Holbrook has some property in France," Janice had reminded her. "It's only natural that she should want to go see about it now that the war's over."

"I should think she could pay somebody to do that for her," Miss Willows had remained unconvinced. "With all her money. All the fine houses she owns everywhere. She oughtn't to leave the doctor so much and so long. The poor man cannot have much of a home life. And a man as busy as he certainly needs that. But Mrs. Holbrook—"

"Do you know, I've never seen Mrs. Holbrook," Janice had interrupted. "She is as beautiful as her portrait!"

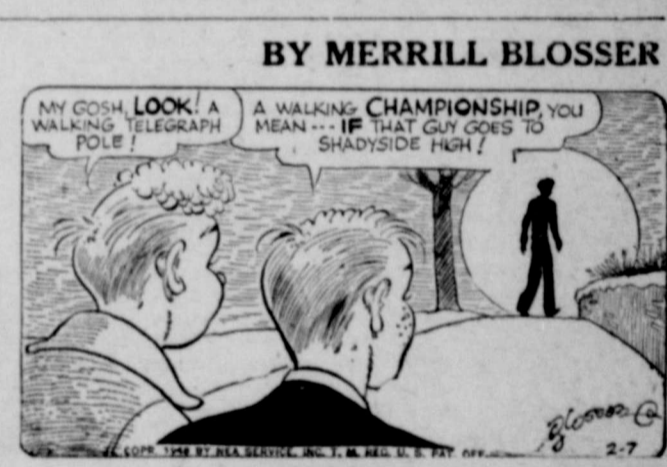

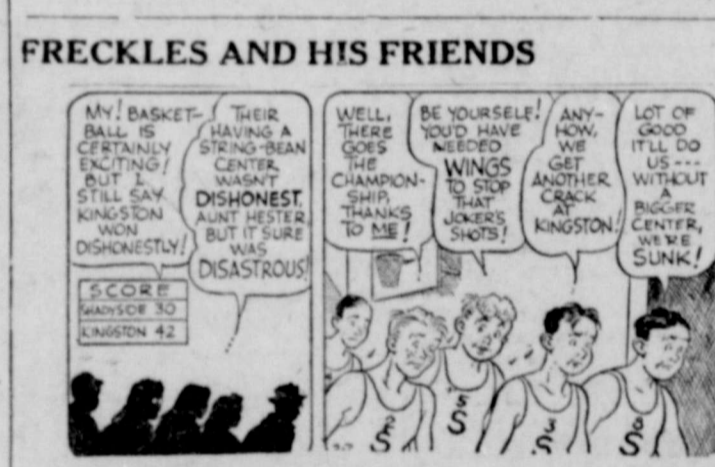

"She's beautiful, all right," Miss Willows had not sounded, however, as though she approved of the kind of beauty the doctor's wife possessed any more than she approved of her habits.

"It's too bad," Janice had said, "that they haven't any children."

"She wouldn't want children," Miss Willows had sniffed. "She couldn't take that much time out from her travels and entertaining. Besides, it might spoil her lovely figure."

No, Miss Willows made no secret of the fact that she thoroughly disapproved of Mrs. Holbrook.

She had not approved of Janice Hilary, either, when the young nurse had first come to take the place of the nurse who had left because her mother was ill. Agatha Willows had no mother, nor

OFFICE Nurse

By Adelaide Humphries

THE STORY: Janice Hilary, pretty, efficient young nurse to popular and handsome society doctor Eric Hillman, runs his office for him. Which little Betty Blue does, the other nurse, suggests to spinsterish Miss Willow, one of the doctor's two secretaries, that Miss Hilary might get married and leave. Miss Willow reacts. Not unless something happens occurs. It's a pity, a pity. The doctor's secretary returns home on this particular day to find a surprising visitor. It is Ben Archer, who has been overseas three years.

Janice would have taken her hand away if he had not held it so firmly. "I'm terribly glad you're home, Ben."

She was glad, yet this surprise had come too abruptly for her to make of altogether the mood that had found her when she stepped into the house.

"You sound overwhelmed." His nice, generous mouth made another moue at this. He was not a handsome young man, but he was the accepted standard of what the average healthy, normal young American male should look like: six-foot-two, broad-shouldered, slim-hipped; clothes worn casually, almost sloppily, yet with a certain jauntness; sandy hair with one cowlick that would not take orders, ears and mouth a bit too large, nose slightly crooked from a childhood contact with a baseball, and eyes that were blue and direct and honest.

"I am overwhelmed. That's just it," Janice did withdraw her hand now, not making it noticeable, she hoped. Oh, dear, he hadn't changed! And she had been so in hope that he would. Three long years. So many, many miles apart. And with her letters so carefully friendly and never anything more, and not so many of them as time passed on, until during these past few months they had ceased entirely. Yet here he was, in her mother's kitchen, same as ever.

"Of course she is!" Her mother said now, helping her out, as she always did. "I was overwhelmed, too. You could have knocked me flat with a flick of your wrist when I opened the door and there stood Ben. And he does look the same, if a bit taller and bigger. I kept wishing you'd be just the same; Ben—if you knew how I wished it!"

She turned away now to lead them into the kitchen, perhaps so that they would not see how much his being the same meant to her. For Ben Archer was almost a son to the Hilarys. He had lived in their neighborhood from the time he had been a boy until his father died and the Archers' brown brick house was torn down.

Miss Hilary knew why Ben had continued to return to the neighborhood and to the Hilary house throughout the years; why they had been the last house he had come to before he had enlisted and the first upon his return and discharge.

Janice, of course, knew too. And the knowledge, instead of being the comfort it should have been, was a deep regret. For she now saw Ben, after an absence that should have brought the one change she had hoped for, completely unchanged.

He did look bigger, though, as her mother had remarked, and just as nice. He had the same straightforward trim and alert, laughing eyes. Why couldn't she have loved him as he claimed he loved her? She did love him. But she was not in love with him. And therein lay a world of difference which she had never been able to make him comprehend.

"Your mother's been telling me all about you, Jan," Ben was saying. "The successful young career woman. I suppose that's why you became so busy you could no longer write, even to an old pal."

"You're not such a wow as a correspondent yourself, young man," Janice managed to retort. "I can only make an X for my name." He gave her his wide grin. "And I was kind of busy myself, at times." He became magnanimous. "But I forgive you, my dove. On condition that you make up for your sad neglect now that I'm home again."

She owed it to him, Janice knew, yet how could she make it up when the neglect had been deliberate?

"How about starting in tonight?" Ben was suggesting in his easy way. His eyes, resting on her, still held that hungry look, as though it would take much fasting to appease a starved appetite.

"I'm afraid I'm too tired tonight—" Janice began. But her mother, who had busied herself these last few moments at the electric range, turned to say: "You're having dinner with us, Ben. That's understood."

"I warn you, Miss Hilary, you'll be sorry you invited me!" Ben said, his blue eyes twinkling. "You won't have enough meat left for a meatball, let alone hash."

"Go along with you. If you don't eat us out of house and home I'll be angry," Mrs. Hilary laughed at him. Then, banishing her own both with a wave of her apron, "Run along upstairs, you two. I can finish up better without an audience. The table's all set, Janice dear. And I think I hear your sister coming in. You can spring our surprise on her now."

And you'll get a surprise of your own, Ben, when you see how grown-up our Albie is."

"That I want to see," Ben declared. "No one can convince me that the harum-scarum has evolved into a fine young lady. In a way, it would make me kind of sad, seems I'm running into too many changes already."

His eyes accused Janice, their direct glance telling her that he was not sure he approved the differences he had found in her. Then he caught her hand, pulling her along with him.

Japanese Editor Tells His People They've Failed

TOKYO (UP)—The Japanese face "ranks second or third ugliest among the races of the world," according to the Tokyo magazine Van.

The magazine didn't bother to name its candidates for the No. 1 and No. 2 positions.

It was more concerned with out-doing its competitors in the currently popular literary sport here of debunking every element of Japanese life which until Y-J Day fitted into Nipponese propaganda on the "Japanese super-race."

"Who are the Japanese?" the editor asked. "You could have answered this question satisfactorily up to 1946 by saying they are 'the Stainless People of the Land of the Gods' or 'the Sovereigns of Greater East Asia.'"

"Such conceptions now have been thrown into the wastebasket of the eternal past, together with the old constitution and military shoulder straps."

Today, the magazine informed its readers, it would be more accurate to call the Japanese "the Stainless People of the Land of Poverty" or "the Pariahs of Greater East Asia."

What's more, the Japanese people today "are the filthy people of the world, with 99 per cent of them blighted by parasites and of the world, with 99 per cent of tuberculosis bacilli," the editor told his fellow countrymen.

"Neither superficial repentance, nor the nursing of the absurd idea that they are 'the descendants of the Sun God,' will do to dispel the fleas and lice and suddenly transform the pariahs into a well behaved people," he counseled.

Diet Important In Epilepsy Cases

ROCHESTER, Minn. (UP)—A Mayo clinic pediatrician claims that diet, and not drugs, is the most important single factor in treating children suffering from epileptic convulsions.

Dr. Haddock M. Keith conducted a survey in which epileptic patients were divided into three groups—diet, drug, and drug and diet. The diet and diet drug groups either recovered or improved.

He said one out of every 200 persons in the United States suffers from epileptic disturbances.

Nebraska fed, clothed, housed, and provided medical care and some recreation for the inmates and patients of state institutions in 1947 at an average cost of $10.50 a week.

Oversize Tank Makes River Crossing

ST. LOUIS (UP)—The story about a man who built a boat too big to get out of his basement is no longer funny to officials of a St. Louis boiler factory.

The company completed a steel tank 50 feet long and 15 feet in diameter. Then they found it was too large to pass over any of the bridges crossing the Mississippi River to the Illinois plant where it was to be installed.

After a conference of engineers, two solutions were proposed. They moved the tank by truck to the river's edge and loaded it aboard a barge, which carried it across.

If that had failed, the engineers had planned to seal the tank and float it over.

Stiff Sentence Imposed By Prisoner On Self

ASTORIA, Ore. (UP)—James Hansen pleaded not guilty to a charge of drunkenness.

Municipal Judge Robert Anderson heard the evidence. So did Hansen. Both found it staggering, if you were in my place?" the judge asked.

Now what would you do Mr. Hansen.

"I'd find the prisoner guilty," said the defendant.

"What sentence would you impose?" his honor asked. Hansen pondered, then replied:

"Fifteen dollars fine and 20 days."

"I concur in the sentence," said Judge Anderson.

The Nature of Jesus

Scripture: John 6:35-40; Colossians 1:9-20

THE nature of Jesus was defined in His mission and message. He was a messenger of God, come to save men. But many messengers of God have been ministers of salvation, and the New Testament assigns to Jesus an unique and special place in the revelation of God.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews expresses the fact of the Incarnation with great clearness and emphasis, bringing out strongly both the divine and the human nature of Jesus, which the Incarnation means—that is, divine nature revealed in the flesh, in an earthly life.

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, says the writer (Hebrews 1:1-2), "spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also He made the worlds." The writer goes on, in terms that are very like those concerning the Incarnate Word in the prologue to the Gospel of John, to assert and describe the glory of the divine Son of God.

Then, in Chapter 2 of the Epistle, he tells how the Divine Son, "so much better than the angels," took upon Him human nature, and "was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor, that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

Garden Lore

By Ethel Brooks Gilmore

Oberon and Titania, King and Queen of the Fairies lived far, far away, in Fairy land.

They had many beautiful flowers in their garden, but one evening as they walked down to their palace fountain, they noticed that they would visit the garden of Phoebe, the moon goddess.

When they came to the garden gate, Janus the guardian of all gates and gates said, "Who comes?" Oberon answered, "Oberon, King of the Titania Fairies and Queen Titania." "And you are welcome," replied Janus. They went from flower to flower inhaling the fragrance, and remarking on their colors. As they came close to the garden wall, they saw a snow white Moon Flower vine, climbing higher and higher, with its blossoms looking up at the moon. They swung up into the vine, smelled the sweet perfume and sipped nectar from the flowers. Oberon said, "Let us be away now, before the Moon goddess sees us."

Soon they were back in their own garden, and Queen Titania spoke to Oberon saying, "Let us make a little flower and mark it with a star like the Moon Flower." This flower will be one to please Eos, the goddess of dawn. Oberon and Titania went to work with their fairy paint brushes and created the Morning Glory, in many colors and all bearing the sign of the morning star.

If you wake up early, you will see tiny hummingbirds and bees sipping honey from the Morning Glories, then you will remember Oberon and Titania, King and Queen of the Fairies.

This original fairy tale is dedicated to all the wee children of Ranger, and to my grandchildren, Clement A. Boule III, of Abilene, Nancy Geraldine and Thomas G. Gilmore of Venice, California.

HAGAN'S HARDY ROSES

West Texas Grasses For West Texas Gardens
West Texas who have planted roses grown in a section subject to long, wet periods know how unsatisfactory these plants are for our long, dry West Texas seasons. They have grown and matured too rapidly—stems are soft and pithy—they just don't have the wood. Our Hagan's Hardy Roses are sturdy, 2-year-old bushes; have been cultured and grown in West Texas—their growth has never been forced, either by Nature or artificially—they are sturdy, hardy plants with heavy wood, making for vigorous growth and prolific blooms, large in size, rich in color and lasting in quality.

The problem of growing roses in wet climates that will do well in more arid regions has baffled the most acute scientists. Only plants developed under the climatic conditions of West Texas will do well in West Texas. One planting will substantiate our claim to unquestioned superiority for Hagan's Hardy Roses and you will agree they are the best at any price. Twelve years of scientific research have produced these hardy West Texas strains of which we show forty beautiful varieties. You are cordially invited to visit our nurseries at Mineral Wells, Texas, or write for our beautiful full-color literature on Hagan's Hardy Roses.

"Spirit" is the subject of the Lesson - Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, February 8.

The Golden Text is: "We are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you" (Romans 8:9).

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson - Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God; thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness" (Psalms 143:10).

The Lesson - Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Spirit is the only substance, the invisible and indivisible infinite God" (page 335).

"Heartsease"

By Elsie Glenn

Snowbound
When I was a little girl, one of the most beloved toys I owned was a bright red sled. Where I lived it snowed only once or twice a year and there weren't any real hills, but when it did snow, I was out with a whoop and a holler with my red sled.

The only unhappiness I really encountered was the humiliating fact that I had to wear long, white cotton underwear and I was always afraid someone would see it.

But I went flying down the little hill, anyway.

Since I've grown up, I've found how easy it is to slide . . . downhill . . . whether I owned a red sled or not. There are all sorts of inviting hills in my life now . . . so slick and easy to slide down. Hills of laziness . . . hills of the line of least resistance . . . hills one can slide down . . . losing only one's personal integrity, ambition, decency.

And the snow falls so much more and thicker in adulthood than in childhood. It makes it so much easier to slide.

Do you own a red sled?

Do you like to slide . . . downhill?

They tell me nothing waits at the bottom of the hill but darkness and coldness and a vast, terrible nothingness.

My red sled is so pretty and shiny . . . and the hill is slick with falling snow!

He Offers His Hand Trades Prize Steer For College Education

After reading about the plight of Ursula Bauer, German girl who must become an American citizen, probably by marrying an American, to claim $19 million inheritance, John T. Martin, 22, Memphis, Tenn., wrote her a letter. He extolled the Memphis climate, Cotton Carnival, magnolias, river bluffs, cleanliness and beauty. "I tried to be subtle," he explained, adding that he made it clear he was not averse to marriage. (NEA Telephoto).

My feet crunch through the lovely snow.

Reluctantly, I turn and leave the hill, dragging my sled behind me. And sometimes my tears fall upon the snow . . . as I walk away.

Well I Dunno . . .

Eisenhower Relinquishes Reins To Bradley

WASHINGTON—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower turns over his post as Army Chief of Staff today to Gen. Omar N. Bradley, his "good right arm" in the crucial battles of World War II.

President Truman and most of the top civil and military leaders of the nation were to gather in the Pentagon building for the ceremony. Eisenhower, who has been chief of staff since November, 1945, said he just wants to find a quiet cabin where he can rest until May. He reports then to Columbia University where he will take office as president on June 7.
