Norway Surprises the World By Standing Up to Russia BY DOUGLAS LARSEN

NEA Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON-(NEA)-One of the few encouraging reports from Europe is the surprising reaction of Norway to the current, tense Russian situation.
Norway and the other Scandinavian countries are right back in the

P Norway and the other Scandinavian countries are right back in the precarious position they were in at the start of the World War II, when they were calling it the war of nerves. In fact Norway is in an even more dangerous spot than it was then. Grabbing that country would mean more to Russia, strategically, in the event of a war now than it did to Germany during World War II.

Of the non-satellite countries of Europe, Norway consistently has had the best and most above-board relations with the Soviet government since the war. When the Russians drove across the northern boundary liberating the Norwegians from the Germans, the Red troops were extremely kind to the people they were setting free. In their were extremely kind to the people they were setting free. In their retreat the Germans burned homes and destroyed everything they could, in their wake. The first act of the Russian soldiers was to provide food and shelter for the burned-out Norwegians. Russian troops even slept in the snow to give starving Norwegians their tents.

Buring the occupation the Norwegian Communists did heroic work in the underground. Since the war Norway's trade with Russia has flexibled with the Norwegian cetting west that of substantial processes the starting of the start urished with the Norwegians getting a great deal of wheat in exchange for whale oil.

Helped by those factors, communism in Norway managed to find firm political footing. In the parliamentary election of 1945 the Reds won 11 out of 150 seats. Communism was in business and increasing, especially in many Norwegian intellectual circles. Money was coming from Moscow to finance propaganda and to help the cause generally but the Norwegians didn't show unusual concern over that fact.

BUT then came the Red coup in Czechoslovakia. And the death of BUT then came the Red coup in Czechoslovakia. And the death of Jan Masaryk more than anything dramatized to the Norwegians the rules of the game which Moscow played. Quick events put Norway right in the middle of the trouble between the U. S. and Russia.

Moscow began charging Norway and Sweden with planning to give air bases to America. And all sorts of rumors and reports spread about Soviet paratroopers being ready to take Norway.

If the Moscow plan was to intimidate the Norwegians and bolster the Communists in that country, however, it misfired completely. The recent activities of the Russians have had the opposite effect. After all the Norwegians have been through in recent years and in light of past good relations with Russia the Norwegians could have been criticized by no one for at least sitting mum and just waiting to see what happened.

But instead Norway's Prime Minister Einar Gerhardsen took the lad in Scandinavia in condemning the Russian grab of Czechoslovakia. The made it crystal clear to Stalin that the honeymoon was over and that if there was any threat to Norwegian freedom, the people of his country wouldn't hesitate to fight.

THE next big expression of Norwegian sentiment was the public

THE next big expression of Norwegian sentiment was the public announcement, by persons all over the country who had been active workers in the party, that they had dropped their Communist affiliation. They were the most respectable element in the Norwegian Communist party, school teachers, local government officials, etc.

That is the way the situation stands today. So far the Russians have made no official suggestion for Norway to enter into any defense agreements, probably because they know what the answer would be. But the danger of Norway's stand is obvious to the world.

In the meantime Norway is keeping up its outspoken criticism of the activities of its giant Red neighbor. In the U. S. Norwegian Amhassador William Munth de Morgenstierne is hidding for U. S.
