Russians Release Three Americans

Well... I Dunno, But...

When we suggested this morning that something to write about was rather scarce a helpful friend suggested that we write about the weather.

That item is certainly making news, all right, but what we think about it wouldn't do to print. We do know that Sunday was the hottest August 22 since we've had a weather bureau. In 1946 it was 91 and in 1947 it was 85 and Sunday saw the mercury climb to 105.

The populace is really dragging, too, with everybody complaining about the heat.

And the last rain of any consequence was on July 27, close on to a month ago.

We're sure that if conversation could produce a change in the weather it would be forthcoming immediately.

Area... OIL News

The lobby of the Connell Hotel Sunday night looked almost like a convention of East Texas oil men, here an account of the revival of drilling activities now in full swing in this territory.

Among those on hand were W. B. Johnson, "Bud" Loomis, H. R. Glossup, Bluford Stuecheim and "Eugie" Wampler, all of Longview, and Blaine Dunbar, of Tyler.

George Beighley back from a vacation in his native West Virginia, tells us that nights up there were delightful with temperatures in the lower 50s. Oh, for a few nights like that.

Read the other day where scientists are experimenting with a new drug which it is hoped will be a cure for polio and other virus diseases.

The drug is called phenosulfazole and is expected to rate with sulfa and penicillin in importance. The official story about the experiment will appear in the next issue of Science Illustrated.

That will certainly be good news if the drug proves to be what it is expected to be.

Heard a new version about birthdays this morning. A young lady remarked that she hated birthdays. "If they're somebody's else, they cost too much and if they're your own, your getting too old."

So maybe that's why some people quit having birthdays.

Our good luck penny collection has reached the grand total of five, but they don't seem to be having much effect on our fortunes. Still carrying that rabbits foot, too. Anybody got any more suggestions about charms for improving fortunes?

AIR FORCE GIVEN MORE AUTHORITY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23, (UP)—The Air Force was given greater control over strategic air warfare at a week end conference of the joint chiefs of staff, Defense Secretary James Forrestal announced today.

The joint chiefs of staff gave the air force the authority to decide what weapons it needs to carry out strategic air warfare.

This decision apparently gave the air force the right to decide whether the navy's new 65,000-ton carrier shall be built in quantity and used for strategic bombing.

The joint chiefs of staff met in that the air force must take into account "the contributions which may be made by forces from other services."

The joint chiefs of staff met in secrecy at the War College at Newport, R. I., over the week end.

The 65,000-ton carrier is considered by many experts to be a major contribution to strategic air warfare. Until bombers capable of flying from here to another continent and returning can be produced, navy experts believe the 65,000-ton carrier may prove the best method of carrying atom bomb attacks to the heart of an enemy's homeland.

WASHINGTON COLUMN

Lobby-Led Bosses in Congress Killed Adequate Housing Bill

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—If you want to know who's boss around here, the answer is easy. It's the House of Representatives Republican leadership. That was proved conclusively by the housing legislation passed during the special session of Congress.

The supposedly potent Senate leadership of Vandenberg, Taft, Wherry and company knuckled under completely to the House dictatorship. Instead of the Senate handling down the ultimatum and saying, "Pass this bill the way we want it—with slum clearance, low-rent public housing, aid to farm housing and veterans' home-steads"—it was the House leadership that called the turn with the mandate of, "Pass the housing bill the way we want it—without these features—or you'll get no new housing legislation at all this session."

Specifically, the House leadership that was able to defy not only the Senate but also the Republican platform and the housing policy of GOP candidate Thomas E. Dewey as well consisted of: Speaker Joe Martin of Massachusetts, majority floor leader Charlie Halleck of Indiana, Rules Committee chairman Leo Allen of Illinois.

This little group was aided by busy Wisconsin Sen. Joe McCarthy, who floor-managed the fight for the House leaders on the Senate side. You have to give him credit for having done a job.

When the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill was passed by the Senate last April, McCarthy took the lead in trying to knock out the slum clearance and public housing provisions. Senator Taft was then championing the T-E-W bill, and he gave McCarthy a terrible licking in forcing its passage.

But the GOP leadership simply refused to allow the House members a chance to vote on this bill as it passed the Senate. It was finally approved by the House Banking and Currency Committee, but Leo Allen's Rules Committee bottled it up. All the House members were allowed to consider was an extremely feeble substitute housing bill whipped up by chairman Jesse Wolcott of the Banking and Currency Committee.

This was passed by the House, but Sen. Allen J. Ellender of Louisiana, co-author of the T-E-W bill, blocked a move for a conference between the two houses to iron out differences. The result was no housing legislation at all in the regular session.

When Congress was called back in special session and asked to give the T-E-W bill priority second only to anti-inflation, McCarthy got busy again and sought revenge for his past defeat. His first success was persuading Senator Taft to reverse himself and abandon slum clearance and public housing provisions of the T-E-W bill.

The argument was that unless this was done there would be no housing legislation at all, because the House leaders would not budge from their opposition to the T-E-W bill. Taft fell for this line.

It is important to note here that the House never had the opportunity to vote for or against the T-E-W bill.

Senator Taft declared on the floor that he was not abandoning his fight for slum clearance and public housing. He said he would bring up both measures next year. But housing officials concede that having no bill killed, they have little chance for future revival. Their only hope would be as make-work measures, brought up in time of depression to give a shot in the arm to a lagging construction industry.

Enough federal aid for building many low-rental housing projects. What has happened, therefore, is a complete victory for the real estate and building industry lobbies in Washington. They have been fighting public housing for years. Their strategy has been to separate the public housing provisions from other housing legislation they did want, then defeat the public housing. In this effort they had the aid of generationmen who followed the McCarthy and Wolcott lead, and who played into the lobby's hands at all times.

THE SCOREBOARD

Americans by the Boatful Watched London's Olympics

BY HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Sports Editor

LONDON—(NEA)—There were so many Americans in London for the Olympic Games you suspected you were in Stapleton, Staten Island, and that they were coming over by the ferry boatful. . . Al Suplein, the Cleveland hockey baron and ink man, got his bang out of Jones Dillard winning the 100.

Los Angeles attorney Neil S. McCarthy's Australia-bred Shannon II won the $100,000 Hollywood Gold Cup while he was on the boat. Paul Helms Jr., rooted for the southern California contingent. . . His banking father contributed $10,000 to the American Olympic fund, and now the athletes' bread from Los Angeles free, gratis and for nothing.

Gene Tunney and Eddie Egan didn't care much about the Games. The former champion and the New York boxing commission chairman flew home the day they started. . . The Lesneviches and maharaja Joe Vella departed the following day. . . Eddie Borden, the one-time New York boxing writer and manager who books horses here, went to New York for the course of the Games. . . Too many old-acquaintances turning to him for hotel accommodations he could not arrange.

DR. PAUL MARTIN renewing acquaintances. . . Now a surgeon in Lausanne, on Lake Geneva, the reddish-haired Dr. Martin competed for Switzerland in the 800 and 1500 meters in five consecutive Olympics over a stretch of 18 years. . . In 1920-24-28-32-36. . . Dr. Martin was 35 in Berlin, but might have added another did not the war come along. . . He ran a dead heat with Great Britain's Lowe in the 800 in '24. . . While an assistant surgeon in New York during the winter of 1930-31, and representing the New York Athletic Club, he won the American 1000-yard indoor championship at Madison Square Garden one night and the Canadian 1000 meters in Toronto the next.

Athletic directors Bob Kiphuth of Yale, Al Masters of Stanford and Bill Hunter of Southern California. . . Kiphuth already relating tall tales of Herman Hickman, the One-Man Crowd and new Eli football coach. . . Masters eyeing Big Bob Mathias, the Tulare decathlon star and Boy Wonder of the World, as Dean Cromwell calls him. . . Mathias, only 17, plays football, too. He's headed for Stanford after Kiphuth. You hear here that this will have to be a good year for Southern California football or Jeff Cravath's last.

Ralph C. Craig, an alternate in the international six-meter, or Litoria, class of yachting, was the oldest American competitor in the Games. . . As a Michigan graduate, Craig won both sprints in Stockholm in 1912. . . He was richly entitled to carry the flag in the opening day ceremonies, a Pageant of Peace, for a welcome change.

XXXIV
JESSICA was cold, nervous and unstrung as she left the hospital and hurried toward a bus. When she stopped at Doris' cottage to pick up Betsy, Doris informed her that Tom had come to fetch Betsy home.

Had anything happened? Doris did not know. Just that Tom seemed perturbed and said that he thought it time for Betsy to have her supper and go to bed.

In concern over just how to explain her prolonged absence, Jessica almost forgot the disturbing events of the afternoon. As she entered the house she heard Betsy's voice in the kitchen and, tossing aside her hat and without removing her coat, she hurried down the hall.

The kitchen door stood open. She saw Betsy seated in her high chair finishing a bowl of cereal while Tom sat by and encouraged her to eat her supper. They were quite unaware of her presence, the blond-haired baby and the big man she resembled so closely, the same stubborn chin, the same gray-blue eyes.

Like Lucy's, thought Jessica, and suddenly her thoughts flew back to that moment when she had looked into eyes so similar and wondered if the girl whose face was disguised with bandages could be Lucy.

How could she tell Tom? He was burdened now with the care of a helpless mother.

She could not tell him now, thought Jessica, and hurried forward to be met indifferently by Betsy, who lavished all her attention upon her father.

Tom asked no questions. If he wondered where she had been or what had caused her delay, he gave no indication. He encouraged Betsy to drink her milk and then lifted her down from the table. "Have you had your dinner?" he asked Jessica.

She slid out of her coat and started toward the door. "No. Neither have I."

FOOD—that was a topic she and Tom could discuss safely, she thought with scorn. What they would eat, and Betsy—two subjects that caused no breaking down of the barrier between them which grew higher every day she remained here. Irritably she flung the coat across a chair in the hall and returned to the kitchen. She tied on an apron, opened the refrigerator and studied its contents. Guiltily she remembered that she had rushed off intending to pick up something downtown, a steak or chops. She turned to Tom who was on his way toward the door carrying Betsy.

"Eggs?" she suggested.

"Anything will do," he said indifferently.

His manner hinted that he thought her incapable of skillful planning. Maybe he remembered Genevieve's skill in cooking, she thought, as she went about collecting material for a salad. When Tom offered to put Betsy to bed and stated that he could look in on his mother meanwhile, she said crossly, "Very well."

She heard Betsy's low chuckle as they mounted the stairs. The bedroom door above closed upon them. She was tired and disturbed as she set the table with two places. Always before Betsy had been present to share the meal. Often Tom ate after she and the baby had finished. This would be the first time she and Tom had sat together like any ordinary married couple to share a meal.

This was her opportunity to talk to Tom about Lucy.

SHE considered ways to approach the subject as she bustled about frying potatoes, carefully browning them as she had seen Tom's mother do, anxiously beating the frying pan for the eggs and measuring coffee.

Should she say directly, Tom, I visited the hospital this afternoon and saw your sister Lucy?

How could she make that bald statement?

He would hate her.

She didn't want Tom to hate her. She didn't want to become involved in any emotional situation with him right now. She was too unnerved tonight after her interview with David.

She thought of David. David would demand that she leave this house—soon.

How could she?

Tom came down the stairs and entered the kitchen carrying the evening paper. He set down and began to read the headlines.

Jessica brought the plate of hot food and put it down before him. He dropped the paper and smiled.

"This looks good. I didn't know you could cook."

"I can't," confessed Jessica. "Just eggs and coffee. Simple things."

"I like simple things," she thought. She liked elegance with her meals, silver and fine linen and soft-footed service. Not eating in the kitchen. Not forgetting to remove her apron. This was reducing eating to mere existence. This was the Blake pattern, she remembered—that and saving. She would have none of it in the future. Her life would be different.

Tom ate nearby. His movements were neat, she liked that about him. For a big man he was graceful. He walked with his head well up. He was proud. His hands were big, gentle, she remembered; and thrust the thought from her.

She drank her coffee and played with the food on her plate.

If she lacked courage to discuss Lucy, she must seize the opportunity to talk to Tom about David. She was a coward. The words stuck in her throat. How did you tell a man that you no longer loved him?

Its Crash Alerted Airfield

Crewmen at the Mustin Field Base, in Philadelphia, saw a plane approach for a landing. Crash crews raced to the scene, when it wobbled slightly as it circled. The plane crashed, but no one was hurt—it turned out to be this model plane, which Chief Petty Officer Joseph Oudrechen holds. The Navy was slightly embarrassed.

Women's Hats Will Be Feminine Experts Decree In Fall Fashions

By James D. Schacter
United Press Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO (UP)—American women will be more feminine in this fall's hat styles, Chicago millinery experts believe.

Exhibitors at the Millinery Displays Association's national fall show said the industry was combating current female "hatlessness" by featuring small headpieces designed to blend with suits and dresses.

Mrs. Fern Wilson, president of the Millinery Merchants Executive Association, said "little hats definitely are coming back."
"Women who now go bareheaded will wear hats that are part of their costume, but they won't be aware of them because the hats are so small and comfortable," she said.

"It takes 20 years off a woman's appearance to have some, but not oil, of her hair show," Mrs. Wilson added.

One designer said this year's hats were coordinated with hair styles more than in the past. The current short bobbed haircut favorite has resulted in a great demand for small, snug tailored hats, she said. They fit closely on the head, unhampered by high hairdos.

Designers agreed that an important development is the hat that fits the head, in contrast to the half-hats and large bowly types that have been popular with elaborate hair styles. New models called "bobettes" are especially designed to be worn with bobbed hair.

Displays said the tailored types were almost as well fitting as men's hats.

"Women with large heads will be able to find hats that fit them for the first time in years," an exhibitor said.

New models also included shell carlots, visor berets, sailors, and pill boxes—all designed to be worn with short bobbed hair.

Black continued to lead the color parade, but new shades included cloud white, smoke gray.

continental green, and coffee tan. Another exhibitor said that heavily ornamented hats were "a thing of the past."

"Women wore so much junk on their heads during and after the war that they just got tired of carting it all around," she said.
