Pentagon Has Global Strategy In Spite of Armchair Generals

BY PETER EDSON NEA Washington Correspon

WASHINGTON-(NEA)-General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower has a cute saying to the effect that military science is one of the two oldest professions in the world in which the amateur is always considered better than the professional. Ike used to quote is whenever civilian officials from Washington or other capitals owed up at his European headquarters to tell him how to run the Hard sledding in Korea and the proposals to send U. S. troops to d Europe have produced another civilian crop of military experts. rug store generals, curb stone colonels, barber shop chiefs of staff

Drug store generals, curb stone colonels, barber shop chiefs of staff and the three C's—congressmen, columnists and commentators—all know just how the war should be won.

In spite of all this voluntary assistance, the boys in the Pentagon seem to have worked out a global strategy that makes sense. Secretary of Defense Marshall unveiled a good deal more of this than he would have preferred to as a general, in his testimony before Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees.

What the United States has been trying to do in Europe under NATO—the North Atlantic Treaty Organization—has been subject to a great deal of misunderstanding if not deliberate misinterpretation. The six American divisions which General Marshall plans to have in Europe do not constitute any threat to Soviet Russia. It will be only 10 per cent of the defense force which Western Europe itself will build.

AS Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts brought out in his AS Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts brought out in his questioning of General Marshall, to launch an offensive against Russia's 175 divisions in eastern Europe would take perhaps 300 allied divisions. That would seem to take care of the argument that sending additional U. S. troops to Europe might provoke Russia into a war.

One other important factor in this defense planning is that the United States will depend greatly on air and sea power. One of the main congressional criticisms against the NATO defense plan has been that the United States should build up air and sea power, leaving ground force development to the Europeans. Yet air and sea do play an important part in U. S. defense plans for Europe.

Fortunately, the United States has not had to disclose its air and sea power dispositions in Europe to the extent that ground force dispositions have been revealed to quiet congressional criticisms. There have been announcements of B-29 bomber bases established in England. More recently there have been public announcements of negotiations for air base rights in North Africa.

THE use of this air and sea power-particularly naval aviationin hammering the flanks of any Russian aggression against Western Europe is a most important military consideration. Furthermore, air and sea power can be quickly reinforced from the United States in case actual warfare breaks out.

Ground forces on the other hand take time to assemble and to move. One division actually in Europe would be worth several divisions held in the United States, even if fully trained and at the dock ready

The all-important added factor is that troops on the ground in Europe will contribute greatly to European morale and European will to resist aggression if it comes.

The whole NATO defense plan is built on the contention that a Russian offensive against Western Europe could be held because its power would be greatly blunted as it advanced.

The importance of holding Western Europe with American aid is that this is really America's first line of defense if war is to be kept away from American shores. As General Marshall declared, if Europe falls into Russian hands, it will open this country to an immediate to us most strange that a man should buy his coffin ahead of time and take grim satisare as strange in our American refusal to think about death at all. The old adage "as sure as death and taxes" should have put us in the frame of mind to look forward to our own death and to make some preparation for it. Too many of us, however, are like the proverbial ostrich; we dig our heads down into the sand and assume that while death will overtake everybody else, by some strange shift of good fortune, it will never knock at our door. We are "toolish virgins" as Jesus called the people who made no provision for the coming of The Great Day, because the hour was uncertain.

ONE of the SIMPLEST STORIES ever told is the one told by Jesus to the Disciples on how to be saved. . how to be ready for death. He made it so simple that even a "little child" can understand. Let us not take lightly the responsibility of telling simple story! May we be conformed to right; subject to, and influenced by the moral laws of the Supreme.

L'ACE TO FACE let's face the fact of death and its certainty for ourselves. Then make plans that take death into account. See to it that we have arranged our minds and our souls for the promotion that we expect, from earth to Heaven. See to it that our families have been adequately provided for; let us face the fact fearlessly. May we be resolute and more determined to keep telling the Simple Story of bow to live and what to live for so that we may know how to die. Come with me to Church.

We Like To Talk About Abstractsbecause making abstracts has been our business for many years. And it is an interesting subject. Every day people come to us with their title problems. Some cases are tragic. Take the example of the couple who have spent their all for a home to find out later they have no title. Most title problems are simple and the abstracts helps to make them simple. So before buying real estate of any kind have the title examined.
