Swimming pool opens

Summer is here and the Lockney swimming pool is open. Violet Cooper, manager of the city owned Lockney swimming pool, opened the facility on Saturday.

Improvements have been made to the pool including finishing the epoxy rock surface and painting.

The summer schedule calls for the pool to be open from 1:30 until 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2:00 until 5:00 p.m. on Sunday. The pool will be open from 6:30 until 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday to anyone who cannot come at other times.

Individuals may reserve the pool for nighttime parties and functions by contacting Mrs. Cooper at the pool. The price for a two hour party is $25.00

Admission charges remain the same as last year. Daily admission is $2.00 per person. A family pass may be available for $50.00 for up to five family members. An individual season pass is available for $20.00.

Mrs. Cooper asks that those interested in swimming lessons please call the swimming pool or Lesca Durham.

The phone number at the pool is 652-2574.

Lifeguards include Robin Bowden and Virginia Stapp. Both are certified lifeguards.

Discipline will be strictly enforced at the pool this year. According to Mayor Dan Smith the city council is 100% behind Mrs. Cooper in her efforts to maintain a healthy, safe atmosphere for swimmers of all ages.

Mrs. Cooper wishes to remind parents that children under 6 cannot be left at the pool without adult supervision.

Drug abuse is rising in rural areas says Bentsen

U.S. Senator Lloyd Bentsen said June 17, that crack cocaine abuse has spread in recent months from the large population centers of Texas to smaller cities and rural areas.

Bentsen released internal memos from the Drug Enforcement Administration — which were prepared for congressional committees but never utilized. He said they indicate the growing drug abuse problem in rural Texas is cause for serious concern.

Bentsen said the memos "showed that there was an enormous spread in the use of crack cocaine from the urban areas into the rural areas."

"But you can see the intensity of it and it's increasing. It's not just in Texas, it's in rural areas across America," Bentsen said.

"This is an extremely serious drug and most addictive. We have to face up to this and have to take it head on," Bentsen said. "And I'm going to do that."

Lockney school board discusses funding for the 1989-90 budget

The Lockney School Board met for their regular scheduled session, June 15, reviewing the 1989-90 school budget, discussing school maintenance, possible new air conditioning for the elementary school, and hired two new teachers for the 1989-90 school year.

A rough draft of a proposed budget was reviewed by the school members. According to Superintendent Dub Hallmark, "Our latest printout shows, that based on recent legislation passed, our share of new money (above current spending) is in the neighborhood of $124,000.

"The current legislation addressed the discrepancy between rich and poor school districts, which was the issue of a lawsuit filed against the Texas Education Agency called, Edgewood vs. Kirby. The lawsuit sought to close the disparity gap of the rich and poor districts.

"In this past legislative session, the legislators appropriated approximately 450 million 'new dollars' to be divided between those schools considered poor. Lockney's share is supposed to be $124,000.

"We are still short of money needed to operate. The next legislative session will have to focus more attention to the matter. The gap between rich and poor districts still exist."

According to Hallmark, the best figures available at this time shows the income available (from all sources) for the '89-90 school year is approximately $2,671,202. From that income the new budget will be drawn up. "We do not know the expenditures at this time," said Hallmark. "We are still working on next year's budget."

Hallmark also informed the members that the elementary schools heating and cooling system is getting so old that the upkeep is becoming expensive. The current system has been there for 24-25 years. The members listened to a representative from Quality Heating and Air Conditioning and his ideas on what could be done to replace the existing system. The representative was asked to write some specifications on what he felt needed to be done. The members will look at these and make any decisions later.

One of the ideas presented to the school board was for individual room units that could be controlled with individual thermostats. "We need something more efficient," said Hallmark. "We will look into something else with possibly a five year guarantee. It may benefit us to change."

Mayor Dan Smith came before the school board and explained the efforts that are being made to secure a minimum security prison in Floyd County.

He asked for the support of the Lockney School Board and requested that a resolution be drafted and signed by the board showing their support of the Floydada Development Boards efforts to locate a minimum security prison in Floyd County. The board members agreed to support the resolution.

Paul Glasson, the school board's appraisal district's representative, brought the members up to date on the appraisal district activities and the pending lawsuit against the appraisal district. A lawsuit has been filed against the appraisal district by Don Marble, concerning their opinion on the value of the Marble Brothers Gin and the resulting '87-'88 taxes that were levied against it. The lawsuit is pending and will be heard on July 5th.

The members voted to call for bids on the roof repair or replacement of school buildings roofs. All school roofs were damaged during the recent hail storms.

Hallmark also informed those present of the building maintenance that will be going on throughout the summer. "A couple of rooms will be repainted and the Home Ec. porch is in bad need of repair. It will need sandblasting and repainting."

Two new teachers were also hired by the school board. Tracy Long, of Plainview, was hired to teach in elementary school and John Ballew was hired to teach high school English. Ballew is currently living in Memphis, Tennessee, and is in the process of moving here.

Castro had been arrested on Nov. 19, 1988, for the burglary of the San Jose Catholic Church's residence, Sister Marilyn Dietz and Sister Margarita Jimenez, reside at the residence. They had returned home after evening mass, November 19, and walked in on Castro who was burglarizing the house. He was armed with an 8" knife and briefly scuffled with Sister Dietz.

After the Sisters talked Castro out of the knife, he fled on foot. He was arrested approximately three hours later.

HAVE A NICE WEEK!

Clifton Oliver celebrates a century

by NETA MARBLE

Clifton Oliver celebrated his 100th birthday on Tuesday, June 20, in Amarillo, where he now lives.

Oliver came to Floyd County in June 1901 with his parents, Frank N. and Mary Elizabeth Cogburn Oliver and brothers Ben, Frank and Coke. They moved to the plains from Oak Cliff, present day suburb of Dallas. Oliver was the first white baby born in the settlement of Oak Cliff. According to Oliver his dad wanted to name him Cliff after the settlement but his mother said that was something people fell off of or jumped off of so Clifton was as close as she would let him get.

Oliver states that the first thing he could remember was newspapers. His father worked as an apprentice at a newspaper in Florence, Alabama. He came west to Texas at 17. He worked at the Denton Review and for a time he published the Oak Cliff Sunday Weekly. Frank Oliver was one of the first traveling representatives for the State Fair of Texas. He was a member of the National Press Association and Texas Press Association.

The Lockney Beacon was founded on April 14, 1902 when Frank Oliver leased printing equipment and set up shop on Main Street in Lockney.

The printing equipment was an old George Washington hand press that was leased for $5.00 a month. It has been used to print the Lockney Ledger, which was the newspaper that preceded the Beacon.

Clifton Oliver, at 13, went to school for the half a day that they taught arithmetic and then he would come to work at the newspaper. He would set the type using little pieces of lead for every letter. He stated that he was a fast typesetter and that he set all the type for his dad. When that was done, he would have to prepare the printer by inking the rollers.

The Western Newspaper Union in Dallas sent their national news by stagecoach. The Union would print on one side of the paper and leave the other side blank for the printing of the local news. There were four blank pages to print. The blank side of the paper would be placed on the printer and one of the helpers would press the levers on the machine and roll the press. The other helper would then pull the copy out. After every copy Oliver had to take the roller back and re-ink it before starting over.

Frank Oliver had a goal of having every household in Lockney subscribing to the Beacon. His circulation ran from five to six hundred subscriptions. Subscription price was $1.00 per year. Often when someone could not afford a subscription he would make a trade for something they had.

THIS IS SOME RIG--Clifton Oliver may have been wishing that his salary at the newspaper office was larger as he shows off this 1908 Maxwell. Oliver celebrated his 100th birthday on Tuesday at his home in Amarillo. His father, Frank Oliver was the founder of the Lockney Beacon in 1902.

At one time he ran a watermelon contest. The prize for the largest watermelon brought in was a subscription to the Beacon. The largest melon weighed 123 pounds.

Mary Elizabeth Oliver died in 1903 and is buried in Lockney. In 1906 Frank Oliver turned the Beacon over to his older son and he and Clifton moved to Dawson County and he remarried. A few years later he moved his family to Spur in Dickens County where he lived until he died in 1927. He is buried in Lockney by his wife and son Ben. His survivors included his wife Emma; sons, Frank, Coke and Clifton; and daughters Marie Kelly, Pauline Moyers, and Estelle Hindman.

In 1908 Clifton Oliver moved to Plainview and worked at the Plainview Daily Herald. He helped a brother set up the first linotype machines there. From there he moved to Clovis, New Mexico, and worked for the Clovis News.

In Clovis he went to see a minstrel show and saw the first trap drum set he had ever seen. He saved his money and sent off $69.00 for a snare and bass drum set with a pedal for the bass.

He joined up with Otto Lieber's Orchestra and wore a fancy white uniform. They often played at the silent movie theatres. He toured some with vaudeville shows and was a charter member of the Khiva Shrine Band and was in on the organization of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Amarillo.

During the time that Oliver was in Clovis, 1912, he went to work for the Santa Fe Railroad in the stove department. In 1914 he was transferred to Amarillo and the next year he married Laura Pearle Hudson. They had two sons Clifton Jr. and John. Mrs. Oliver died in 1978. They have one grandson, Tom.

In 1929 Oliver was appointed chief clerk and later purchasing agent and storekeeper for the Santa Fe Railroad Western Lines in Amarillo where he worked until his retirement in 1958. Oliver worked for the railroad for 46 years.

He said that the money spent for operating maintenance and supplies expanded 100% during the time he worked for the railroad. This Panhandle County beats any county for resources and the Santa Fe pitched in to develop these resources.

Legal hotline for Texas seniors now in service

The Legal Hotline for Older Texans is a service to anyone in Texas who is at least 60 years old. The toll-free hotline is staffed by attorneys licensed in Texas with 2 or more years experience.

More than 800 cases have been handled since the hotline became operational in May. Many of those who call are home-bound or in nursing homes and have no way of getting to a lawyer's office.

Callers receive free legal advice on a variety of topics such as Medicare appeals, access to public benefits such as food stamps, information about nursing home rights and help in drawing up wills.

When a situation requires more than a phone call can solve, the caller will be referred to an agency or another attorney who can help.

The hotline is supported by a grant from the American Association of Re-

Caprock Canyons, a back country experience

People have been camping beneath the rugged walls of Caprock Canyons in the southern Texas Panhandle for at least 10,000 years. Indians of the ancient Folsom culture once gathered in bison hunting camps on lands where campers now cluster in tents, pop-up campers, motor homes and RV trailers. Ironically, some brands of recreational vehicles are made by and named for Indian tribes.

Caprock Canyons State Park offers a special invitation for summer campers this year. From June 1 through Aug. 31, mid-week camping fees for sites with water and electricity are reduced by $2. The lower camping rates apply from Sunday evening to Thursday evening. Regular fees are charged on Friday and Saturday nights.

Ages ago, Folsom hunters came to the canyons following the thundering bison herds, killing and butchering them with stone-tipped darts and spears. Living a nomadic life, these people of the southwestern plains left the litter of the hunt when they moved on, stone points and bones.

But sometimes they left behind more than accidental clutter. A prehistoric campsite found in the park near Lake Theo contained a bison skull resting on top of a pillar of long bones. Archeologists speculate that it was a ceremonial tribute to the spirit of the bison.

The bison-skull tribute has been reconstructed for display in the center of the park's interpretive exhibit. Sheltered from the weather, the exhibit is adjacent to an amphitheater and contains paintings depicting the geology and early human history of Caprock Canyons. Other exhibits along the roads provide additional information on specific geologic features in the park.

Lying along the gypsum and red sandstone escarpment, 13,000 acres of parkland entice wayfarers with the possibility of backcountry hikes. Tributaries of the Little Red River have cut deep into the escarpment's edge, and hikers can follow a trail which connects canyons eroded by the North Prong and South Prong of the river.

Horse owners may ride their mounts along an equestrian trail to a campground in the rugged lowlands below Haynes Ridge. Primitive camping areas provide for basic sanitation, but hikers and horse riders must bring in their own water. Since open campfires are not allowed, backpacking stoves are recommended.

Trekking up the canyons past cottonwood and juniper trees, the hiker emerges on the Southern High Plains at Haynes Ridge. Picnicking on the ridge, with a commanding view of the park, is even more memorable when wildlife residents come unexpectedly into the scene. Jackrabbits, cottontail rabbits, foxes, mule deer, badgers and ground squirrels feed in the daylight hours.

Aoudad sheep from mountainous areas of North Africa, introduced into the canyons in 1957, are prospering. They are easily spooked but can be seen occasionally on ridge tops and sheer

Farm Situation in Floyd County

By C. Mark Brown
Extension Agent-Entomology

GENERAL SITUATION

Intense thunderstorms roared through the area on the evening of June 12. Rainfall recordings were 1.25" in Floydada and 1.66" in Crosbyton. Some hail was also reported. Fields are just beginning to dry out enough to allow for sandfighting and re-planting operations to continue. Night-time and early morning temperatures have been cool this week.

COTTON

Although heat unit accumulation was very favorable in April, these heat units have really lagged in May and June. This factor in combination with wet weather and hail damage has caused much of our cotton to become sick, particularly in the Floyd County area. Last week, we observed stands that were completely lost to a combination of hail damage, wet weather blight, and seedling disease. We really need some warm open weather at this point.

Cotton ranges in growth from pre-emergence to pinhead square. Most fields are still being monitored for thrips; however, thrips numbers recorded this week have been light in the fields we are checking.

We did detect some fleahoppers in cotton this week. The fleahopper infestation was found in May 5 cotton, just beginning to produce pinhead squares and in fields infested with silverleaf nightshade (whiteweed), which is an important alternate host. Square set ranged from 97 to 100%. Fleahopper numbers ranged from 2.5 to 10 per 100 terminals. Fleahoppers were numerous in the whiteweed as well. Lance leaf sage (mintweed) is another alternate host for the fleahopper. Our general threshold for fleahopper control is when 25-30 fleahoppers are found per 100 terminals combined with less than 75% square set during the first three weeks of squaring. During the first week of squaring, you should shoot for 90% square set, and shoot for 85% square set in the second week. I must admit that fleahopper control decisions are difficult because fleahopper damage seems rather unpredictable. Factors affecting damage include condition of alternate hosts, condition of cotton, number of squares per plant, and possibly weather. Therefore field conditions such as those previously described (few squares per plant, fleahoppers present in the cotton, fleahoppers numerous in whiteweed infestations within the field) make me very nervous. If these field conditions describe your cotton, you should monitor square set in your fields very closely (every 3 days or so). Remember that a pinhead square is, as the name implies, only the size of a pinhead. The first pinhead square will probably be found in close association with the 6th or 7th true leaf as that leaf is emerging from the terminal of the plant. A blasted square appears brown or black and is easily knocked off the plant. If a square is missing, you will find a small scar at the fruiting site that looks similar to a pruning wound on a tree. % square set = number of healthy squares present + total number of fruiting sites x 100. The total number of fruiting sites includes the number of healthy squares, blasted squares, and scars counted. Count your square set on at least 10-15 randomly selected plants at each of about 4 sites in the field. Understanding square set is difficult. For more detailed information, contact me or better yet, attend one of our scout training meetings or turnrow meetings.

Last year, producers in eastern Crosby and Floyd counties were greatly concerned with the boll weevil. Traps are monitored each year in the Rolling Plains and along the Caprock to determine weevil numbers and evaluate the Plains Cotton Growers-USDA Boll Weevil Suppression Program. Boll weevils require cotton squares to feed on within about two weeks of their emergence from overwintering habitat or they will not survive. Therefore, emergence before June 15 in the Rolling Plains area is considered as suicidal. During this last week of trap monitoring the average number of weevils per trap increased pretty dramatically. We seemed to have another flush of weevil emergence. Monitoring will continue. Since we have reached the effective emergence date we will have to keep an eye on this situation.

CORN AND SORGHUM

Emergence and flight activity of Southwestern corn borers has begun in the South Plains area. This means that egg laying of the 1st generation is occurring now. Producers with corn in close proximity to last year's corn stubble that was either plowed late or not destroyed during the winter months should pay particular attention to corn fields for the presence of SWCB eggs or larval feeding. SWCB's feeding in the whorl can be confused with other whorl feeding pests. The best way to identify corn borer infestations is to pull and unroll infested whorls, until the pest is found. SWCB larvae are cream-colored with dark brown dots on each segment. Since eggs are laid in masses, more than one larva can normally be found per whorl. In contrast, corn earworm eggs are laid singly. I saw very few unplowed stubble fields this year; but if you have a significant infestation of 1st generation SWCB's, I would appreciate a call. Pest activity in grain sorghum is currently very light in the fields we are monitoring.

SCOUTING PROGRAM

The Crosby-Floyd scouting program is off to a fair start, but weather has hampered our operations just like everyone else's. We have lost quite a bit of acreage due to the weather, and we still have room for more acreage enrollment. This acreage amount is important since we are basically operating on a break-even budget this year. If you might be interested in enrolling some acreage, please give me a call at 675-2426.

Soybean oil is winning war

Health-conscious consumers are more often turning food packages over to read the fine print in ingredients. They are returning items to the grocery shelf that leave any doubt as to the nature of vegetable oils used.

Many of the dining public will ask for margarine instead of butter. They will also ask that fried or sauteed dishes be prepared in unsaturated vegetable oil.

In recent months, a number of baking companies have responded to consumer health concerns by turning from saturated palm oil and coconut oil to unsaturated vegetable oil alternatives, like soybean oil. The latest was the cookie and cracker giant Keebler Co. Others include Pepperidge Farm Inc., Kellogg Co., and Sunshine Biscuits.

For bakers' purposes, there is little difference between the taste of performance of saturated oils, and unsaturated oils. Companies would use the lowest cost ingredient, usually palm oil, palm kernel oil or coconut oil. Whatever was used, it was listed as "vegetable oil" on the label.

The relationship of saturated fats in the diet to high blood cholesterol levels, well-publicized by reports of the U.S. surgeon general and American Heart Association, has provided health groups the ammunition to call food companies to account for the contents of their products.

A not-so-silent partner in the campaign has been the American Soybean Association (ASA). The ASA launched the drive nearly two years ago, supporting a measure before Congress calling for the Food and Drug Administration to require the distinction between saturated and unsaturated oils or fats in food labeling.

Since then, food companies have taken the unsaturated vegetable oil pledge, realizing that whatever increase in ingredient cost they incurred would be more than offset by the positive publicity of assuring consumers of the wholesomeness of their products.

Weather plays havoc with crops

Hail storms tore up large parts of the cotton crops in West Texas that had survived the drought.

The severe unpredictability of the weather makes farming an especially high-risk enterprise in Texas this year. Many farmers have lost their entire crop to weather, and many others have lost almost that much.

Some would say that it's all a part of the agriculture business, and it is.

But I have a bit of experience in ranching and farming — it's how I was brought up. And I know that sometimes the risks are just too high. Sometimes the government must step in and help those farmers knocked out of the box by Mother Nature.

Last year — in response to drastic drought conditions across the midwestern and southern states — I joined my colleagues in supporting a disaster relief package for U.S. farmers.

One good feature of that package was that it didn't add anything to the budget deficit. It was a classic case of supply and demand. As the drought decreased the supply of farm products, the prices on those products rose. This meant less federal money was needed for crop subsidies than had been budgeted. Part of these savings were used to help drought-stricken farmers in 1988. These farmers still suffered major financial losses, but in many cases the disaster relief at least allowed them to hang on for another year.

Last year the aid was targeted at farmers who had lost their spring crops. This year it's winter crops that are being hit hard.

In the Senate, we've already taken a first step to help. I was recently joined by several of my colleagues in proposing bipartisan legislation.

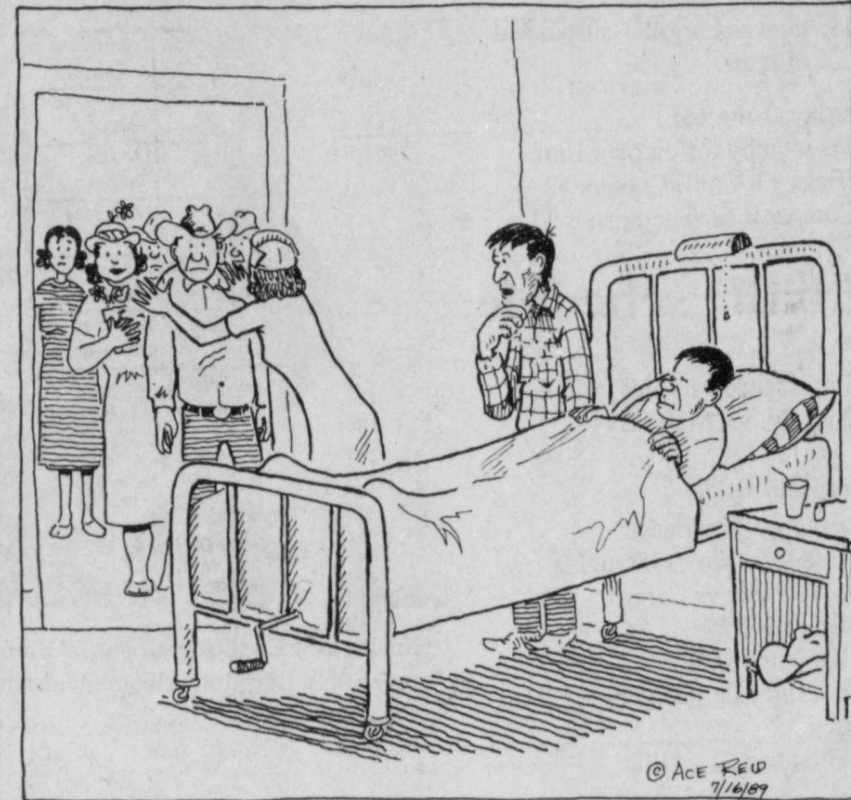

This legislation is almost identical to last year's drought assistance package. It will provide Texas producers of wheat and other winter crops—victimized by drought, freeze and other natural calamities—with the same assistance given to farmers who lost their spring-planted crops last year. And it accomplishes its goals in a way that will not increase the budget deficit.

Agriculture is important to our state, both as a source of food and for exports which pump up our economy and create jobs and incomes throughout the state. Too much is at stake to force our farmers to stand alone in the face of unusually bad weather.

Study shows declining school tax base

The property tax base of Texas school districts dropped by 3.37 percent in value from its 1987 levels, according to the State Property Tax Board (SPTB). The agency's 1988 Property Value Study estimates the taxable value in the state's 1,056 school districts was $646.1 billion as of January 1, 1988.

Ron Patterson, the SPTB's executive director, noted that 1988 was the third straight year in which the value of the school district tax base declined. "School districts have lost over $56 billion; in taxable value since 1985," he said.
