Lockney wins season finale, prepares for playoff

The Lockney Longhorns won their regular season finale over Olton, 32-20, 4-1 overall.

The Horns dominated the field with 352 total yards and 273 of those yards on the ground. "It was a very physical game," Coach Jim Clark said, "We got three key players hurt. We played with high intensity in some areas and hit them hard."

Horns Michael Monroe lit up the scoreboard first on a two yard run in the Friday to finish 4-1 in district play and 5- opening quarter. City discusses proposed closing of local JP office

Lockney Justice of the Peace, C.L. Mooney, appeared before the Lockney City Council on Thursday, November 9, to update the council on the possibility of the local J.P. office being closed.

Mooney told the aldermen that the Floyd County Commissioners Court had proposed closing the J.P. office in Lockney. "They have the power to do it," said Mooney, "but I don't think it would be good for Lockney.

"Some of the commissioners think it would save money, but I don't think it will. They will have to hire a full time secretary for the Floydada office to help with the extra case load.

"It would also create hardships for residents in and around Lockney. They would have to drive to Floydada to take care of any traffic tickets, and that would not be a savings to the taxpayer."

Mooney stated that there was a loss of revenue from fines because the tickets were being turned into the Floydada office instead of Lockney. "In 1986, I turned over $11,000 in fine revenue from our precincts (2 & 3). In 1987, it was over $13,000. In 1988 it has dropped to a little over $7,000 and will probably be about the same amount this year." Councilman Eddie Fortenberry then asked Mooney, "Why is DPS not bringing the tickets to you?"

"I don't know," replied Mooney. "They have not given me a reason. Maybe it is easier for them with the J.P. office right next to theirs in Floydada."

Councilman Ronnie Aston asked Mooney if the problem was that they were not patroling this end of the county, because he had not seen anyone on the back roads like he used to.

Mooney replied again that he did not know, but stated that if you went by the tickets that were turned in to him it could appear that "either they are not patroling. is part of the county or not writing

Councilman Kenneth Wofford stated that it appeared politically motivated to get Mooney out of office. "One-third of the county tax revenue comes out of precinct #2 alone, and that does not include precinct #3. We're entitled to part of these services and some of the same benefits that Floydada has."

The council members told Mooney that even though there was nothing they could do as city council members, they and other Lockney residents would come to the commissioners meeting to show their support for keeping the Lockney J.P. office open.

Police Chief Leonard Gilroy also appeared before the council to answer questions about the possible need for a radar gun and lowering the speed limits in the residential areas to 25 mph.

Councilman Gary Marr told the other aldermen that he had been approached by a resident asking the council to consider getting a radar gun and lowering the speed limits to help stop the speeding that goes on, on the back streets.

Councilman Marr stated that he knew a radar gun was a luxury, but he felt it should be brought before the council for discussion or action.

Chief Gilroy showed the councilmen a radar gun that is currently used in Floydada. "It costs $40.00-$60.00 a month on a lease purchase plan to have one of these. This one can be mounted on the dashboard and you can clock people's speed while you are moving. Cheaper models can be hand held while you are parked to catch speeders.

"It is also a good tool for preventing other crimes. You can use this radar gun as probable cause to stop someone for speeding and while you have them stopped you can check out other possible violations; such as: drinking, drugs, outstanding warrants, or no liability insurance."

Gilroy was asked by Councilman Aston, "How many speeding tickets does the city police write now?"

"None," said Gilroy. "We can't write speeding tickets, because we can't prove how fast they are going. If you can get behind someone on the highway, you have enough time to fall in behind them and clock their speed. You can't do that on residential streets between stop

In an effort to soothe the councilmen's fears of possible abuse, Gilroy said, "This radar gun is a deter-program didn't work out, you co return it."

After discussion among the councilmen, Alderman Aston made the motion to give the mayor the authority to negotiate a deal on a lease purchase plan that could be terminated. Alderman J.D. Copeland seconded the motion and all councilmen voted in favor of purchasing the radar gun.

Councilmen felt that with enforcement of the current speed limit on the residential streets, it would not be necessary to lower speed limits.

Dale Widener also appeared before the city council and presented them with copies of his cancelled checks covering his cost of the clean-up at his home,

Acting under the advise of city attorney, Paul Lyles, the council agreed to take the matter under advisement after checking with the city's insurance and Widener's insurance.

Dickie McCarty also appeared before the council and presented them with the cost of installing culverts in the north and east part of town. "It will cost $4,578 to install the culverts in our targeted areas. We will not put them where the water will not drain completely. We will only put them in intersections and other areas where it will do the most

The aldermen voted unanimously to install the culverts.

Councilman Aston told the other councilmen present that he had been asked to ask the city if they would consider renting the Community Center to the 4-H Club for free, because it is a nonprofit organization. "They are having a hard time finding a place to meet because there are so many kids involved in it and they can't find a place big enough to meet."

After much discussion, the councilmen decided to leave the ordinance like it was, since they would have to amend the ordinance and then would come under close scrutiny over who or what was a charitable organization.

Mayor Dan Smith read a letter to the council from the Texas Department of Health, concerning items of non-compliance. "They came and inspected our ground level water tank and our water tower," said Smith. "They told us our ground level tank was OK, but now it must be equipped with a check valve. Dickie said that was no problem and he could install it."

"Next thing is - they want us to build a new water tower. They said ours does not have enough reserve storage capacity. It will take about a quarter of a million dollars to build a new one.

"If you all remember, two years ago they said ours was O.K."

During department reports Mayor Smith told the councilmen that a new We are also putting them in areas where structure was being erected by L.V. Harris in the southeast part of town. The building does not meet city building codes, nor has a building permit been obtained.

"Chief Gilroy has informed Harris that he cannot build this structure," said Smith. "We just have to wait and see what becomes of it now. It is something we should keep on top of."

The financial statement was reviewed by councilmen, all bills were paid and the previous minutes were read and approved.

Attending the council meeting were Mayor Smith, City Secretary Erma Lee Duckworth, Aldermen Aston, Marr, Copeland, Sam Fortenberry and Wofford. Also in attendance was City Attorney Paul Lyles, Dickie McCarty, Dale Widener, Chief Gilroy and The Beacon reporter.

Roseville, California (Pacific Region). Award judges cited John T., 55, and Maebelle, 52, for special recognition because of their "overflowing schedule of sharing their music with others in their community and as an outstanding example of how playing music together keeps their 'empty nest' filled with joy."

and the Robert Woodward family,

"With our family being grown and away from home now," says Maebelle Francis, "music surely fills our time to where there's no 'empty-nest syndrome.' We have a togetherness most older couples don't have, as we have one common goal, and that is to bring much joy to those less fortunate than us."

John and Maebelle play together at home almost every day and for community organizations and events about twice-a-week. The couple plays a variety of music, including country, pop, bluegrass, gospel and "mild-rock." Collectively, they and their three children (Lori, 33, Lesa, 30, and Dave, 28) play four instruments: piano, keyboard, guitar and harmonica.

ney Care Center on a regular basis. "We get much more out of music than we put into it. And when our kids and grandkids are home, we play and sing with them and it gives us all something to bond us as a family," says Maebelle Francis. "With music, you can let your inner emotions flow from you that you may not release with just talking."

The Francis' other interests and activities range from John's work with the local school board, farm organizations and his duties as a church deacon, to Maebelle's poetry, volunteer work at a local nursing home and her interest in fancy script writing for friends and special occasions.

"I've always liked music. I'm not a great musician, but I had enough in me to just keep trying," says John Francis. "Playing and singing with my wife and children is a great joy. We can do something together a lot of families can't. That means a lot to me."

Nominations for AMC's 1990 "Amateur Music Family of the Year" award are being accepted from now through August 31, 1990. Young Children and Drugs

Editor's Note -- This is the second in a series of articles on drugs and alcohol and how families are affected. These articles were furnished by the local Parent Teacher Association.

Children imitate the adults around them. Your children will feel good about themselves if YOU feel good about yourself. Positive role models will help your children gain healthy habits and attitudes. The examples you set will also help your children resist pressures to use alcohol and other drugs - pressures they receive from television shows and movies, commercials, and perhaps from their friends.

Try to lead a healthy lifestyle that your children will imitate. This includes:

* Exercise and good nutrition - Get regular exercise that you enjoy and will continue. Eat balanced meals and keep snacks and junk food to a minimum.

* Positive relationships - Maintain upportive, positive relationships with ur spouse, children, and friends.

* Stress - Learn to recognize stress and handle it in constructive ways.

* Minimal use of alcohol and other drugs - Avoid using drugs to relieve tension, stress, unhappiness and bore-

CHILDREN NEED SPECIAL TIME WITH PARENTS AND FAMILY

In their search for identity, children need to feel special as individuals. Help them feel special.

* Spend time with each child alone - It doesn't matter what you do, as long as it helps to renew the bond between

* Listen to what your children say -Help your children to talk with you freely, without fear of judgment or rep-

* Ask each child's opinion about family problems and decisions - Even five-year-olds have a lot to offer if you give them a chance.

* Do not talk down to your child -Although a parent is older than a child, you are equals as human beings and deserve mutual respect.

It is equally important to spend quality time together as a family. Family traditions, meals, and other activities are important. Keep TV time to a minimum, and make time for play, general discussion, and family business. Consider having family meetings to discuss plans, share feelings, and air grievances. Let each family member take turns being in charge of the meeting. Many family members get so wrapped up in their own outside projects and relationships that they take their family relationships for granted. Don't let this happen to you! Give family members the love and attention they need.

SET FIRM LIMITS WITH YOUR CHILDREN

Children need to be clear about what is expected of them and the consequences of acting otherwise. Firm, reasonable limits help children believe that their environment is dependable and secure. Limits also help them understand how their actions affect what happens to them.

Teach your children to set their own limits, as well. For you, this means a gradual release of the reins. Praise them when they have done something well. Explore how things can be improved. Above all, focus on their learning rather than on your frustrations with their stumbling.
