REDISTRICTING

It is clearly seen that the redistricting bill as finally passed is a purely political one. The time of becoming effective has been placed three years hence, which is a clear indication that the legislators now in office have looked well to their own interests in the formulating of this bill. By that time most of them will have gratified their political ambitions so far as being members of the State Legislature, and do not care one cent what becomes of the country after that time. Our Senator Bledsoe fought hard for the passage of the bill putting it into effect at an earlier date, but failed on account of too great odds against him. A good time for the voters to have a cleaning up of the representatives who fought for the amendment placing the redistricting date at three years hence, would be at the next election. The voters should know how every legislator stood on this question and see to it that he gets a just reward according to his vote. This is a question of right and wrong. The legislature has violated the constitution by not doing this work three years ago, and then to put it off for three years or more longer, is an additional crime, and criminals should not be members of the law-making body of Texas. Put men in who have the nerve to stand for the things that are right, regardless of the consequence, and the affairs of Texas will soon begin to show a wonderful improvement.—Lubbock Avalanche.

FOUR SHOTS FIRED INTO HOME OF HALL COUNTY PROSECUTOR

Memphis, Texas, Aug. 21.—The home of County Attorney William J. Bragg was fired into Wednesday night about midnight. Four steel clad bullets entered the living room rapping just above the bed where the occupants were asleep. They were fired in rapid succession from a fast running automobile.

The officers of Hall County have been very active of late and a general crusade against lawlessness is on in the country. The supposition is that opposition to law enforcement gave rise to this act. Several moonshine stills have been raided and more than thirty arrests made. Several petty thefts have taken place and with one still location raided several hundred feet of garden hose were found, all of which had been stolen from lawns in the city. The owners of the hose identified it and got it back.

PATTY PROMINENT IN DISTRICT TEACHERS' CONSOLIDATED INS.

W. E. Patty, superintendent of the Plainview schools, is prominently mentioned in the plans and programs of the Teachers' Consolidated Institute of the Panhandle and Plains counties to be conducted in Canyon September 5 to 9, inclusive.

Prof. Patty is named as chairman of the executive committee and a member of the employment bureau committee. He is on the program for the first day to respond to the address of welcome.—Plainview Herald.

Dr. Sutton Speaks in Chapel

Dr. W. S. Sutton, Dean of the School of Education of the University of Texas, delivered a series of two lectures at the chapel hour August 12-13. The subject of the lectures was the part of the colleges in world reconstruction. Dr. Sutton in the first lecture outlined briefly the social, political, and economic conditions existing today. The second lecture was devoted to the work of the colleges and higher education in general in solving the problems confronting us. The speaker emphasized the importance of the study of social science as a preparation for meeting the world crisis.—From The Prairie.

J. W. BRYAN ON "THE FARMER DIES LAST"

W. J. Bryan recently uttered these words that ought to be read by every city citizen as well as every farmer. His subject was, "The Farmer Dies Last." It follows:

"In a fight to the last the farmer will die last. If big business thinks it can bleed him without limit it had better consider his resources. When it comes to the pinch he can stand squeezing better than any other class. Food is the first necessity and he can feed himself. He can raise all that he and his family need, but if he raises no more than he needs the rest of the people will starve. The farmer's surplus supplies the world—suppose the surplus fails?

"The farmer can raise the material necessary to clothe himself and his family—wool, cotton and silk—but if he raises no more the rest of the people will go naked. It is the farmer's surplus material that clothes the world—suppose the surplus fails?

"The farmer can if necessary produce his own fuel. He can raise his own wood; he can burn corn cobs and oven corn if he must, but what will become of the railroads when the farmer neither buys nor sells?

"What will become of the packers when they have no meat to pack? And what will become of the grain gamblers when there is no marketed grain to gamble on? What will become of the little stores when the farmer ceases to trade? And what will the manufacturers do when the wholesalers go out of business? And what will the clerks in the stores, the workers in the mills and the railroad employes do when business stops? And what will the banks do when they can not grow rich lending the people's money? What will all the people do when nobody needs them? What? Go to work with their hands and bring a living from Mother Earth—that is the last resort as was the first.

"Will the middle men continue, to lord it over the producer of wealth, or will they learn that they must serve if they would live, and serve for a reasonable toll? The flower that blooms in beauty on the stem should not despise the roots that do their work in the dirt. The roots will live when the flowers fade—not only live, but furnish the substance for new flowers, season after season. So with the farmer, he lives near to Nature's heart, he draws the milk from Nature's breast, and Nature will protect the child. He will be the last to die in the struggle for existence. But why this conflict? Why not love and brotherhood and co-operation? Why not work together for the common weal? Why not justice to each and all?

My Old Swimmin' Hole

Winding its way drowsily, a small stream broadens its bed beneath a big elm tree, making an admirable place for swimming. On the south there is a vast growth of underbrush and saplings, which shade the pool on hot summer days. Further out the beauty of the scene is accentuated by a steep acclivity dotted with trees.

To the north is a mesquite flat, interspersed with cacti and red-colored flowers. Fields of waving corn and glistening cotton form the background.

Up the stream a group of cattle, knee deep in water, one drowsily chewing her cud. Down the brook everything is lost in the midst of a heavily wooded flat.

Everything is quiet, except for an occasional note of a mocking bird in the lofty elm tree. In fact, the solitude of the noon day is almost as oppressing as the rays of the July sun.

These elements of beauty, I observed unconsciously as I lazily approached the brook. But when I had undressed, all natural scenery had lost its charm, for soon I was swimming around in the cool glassy water, watching the lapping of the waves at the bank of the stream—what a wonderful experiment.—C. H. J.

The Exterior of a Haunted House

The decayed old house, hidden among its untended trees, living and dead, was a byword for dreariness. For more than a quarter of a century no one had entered this house, secure in a thickly wooded hollow, where the trees had been allowed to grow wild, and there were big dead boughs across the grass grown track which had once been a drive. This place looked like the last few acres of some great forest. The entrance was guarded by two decayed gateposts.

The house was an appalling ghost of a building, exceedingly tall and ugly. It would have been wickedly ugly, if its gray-white face had not been masked a little by the elms that laid their boughs across the windows, and the long weather-stains that made it look as if it had been weeping until it could weep no more. At the side of the door, a cumbersome bell-pull slumbered after many years of service and across this door, heavy iron bars were fulfilling a useless mission.—From The Prairie.

A Letter to the People

Esteemed Friends:
The summer has flitted by, gone so soon I can hardly realize that the time has come when I must return to Fort Worth and resume my obligations there.

For twenty years I have been tuning pianos in the west, and needless to say my visit to Canyon is worth much more to me, and aside from the financial consideration I am glad always to return. Indeed, I look forward to the grand old summer in the west, for it is then that I can mingle with some of the finest and most hospitable people on earth. I have no words that will express my appreciation for your patronage and for the numerous kindnesses extended to me in Canyon. First I would thank the ladies at the telephone exchange for their unpaid assistance to me in reaching my customers. Often I do not recall a number, but the young lady at the board is never too busy to connect me by merely mentioning the name I wish to speak to. Thanks, many thanks, The Wileys at the American hotel; well I just cannot put into words my appreciation for their attentions and for the comforts extended me while with them; the Misses Wileys were never too occupied to stop and read a letter, or do any thing in fact, that would render any assistance. Thanks to each of the family.

Now just a word along the general line. It has often been said that without the Normal, Canyon would not amount to anything. This is a mistake. Your paper compares favorably with any weekly in the land, and your music teachers are equal to our teachers at home. I shall return next summer.—C. Daughtry.

Mrs. Hill Entertains Graduating Class

Friday evening Mrs. Hill entertained the graduating classes and the faculty at Cousins Hall. A delightful program was rendered to a large number of guests. The program consisted of musical numbers and readings by Misses Brigham, Clark, and Phillips, Mr. Clark and Mrs. Sheffy.

Historical Society Gives Program

Realizing something of the importance of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society to the people of this section of the country, the members of the Second Year Normal Class gave a program which enabled them to understand better the work of that society. There were toasts to the scouts and pioneers and to the buffalo, who is doubly dear to us because he is the college mascot. Several of the poems that were written years ago in this section created a very decided atmosphere of the pioneer days. The nature and scope of the work was discussed, and Mr. Sheffy urged each one to help create an interest in the work where ever he went, and invited everyone to visit the "zoo" which the society has started.

TWENTY-FIVE MEN ENROLLED FOR FOOTBALL TRAINING CAMP

Twenty-five men have enrolled for the intensive course in football to begin the first of September, according to Prof. D. A. Shirley, chairman of the Athletic Committee. The men will encamp somewhere on the canyon, where they will be thoroughly worked out under the direction of Coach Burton. The work will include not only thorough coaching in football, but cross country running and other forms of intensive physical training calculated to put the prospective players in first class physical condition by the opening of the season.

Last year the Normal Colleges were seriously handicapped during the early part of the season by reason of the late opening of school and the consequent lack of training of their men in comparison with those of the other colleges which opened some weeks earlier. All expenses of those whose applications for entrance are favorably acted upon will be born by the institution. Prospective students who desire to make application for this training should communicate with D. A. Shirley, Canyon, Texas.

The Teacher—Public Servant

During the debate on the University budget on the floor of the House of Representatives on July 29, Mr. John Davis of Dallas strongly supported the policy of reduction in salaries as carried in the Bonham amendment to the Appropriation Bill and, among other things, said that when a man chooses a profession of any kind, such as law, medicine, or teaching he turns his back on wealth and gives himself over to the public service; that the lawyer who becomes rich either does so through activities outside his profession or through the prostitution of his profession.

Now we hold no brief for the University of Texas and do not care to enter into a discussion of the merits of the contest that was waged over the budget of that institution. But the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Dallas is so mistakenly founded and so damaging to the profession of teaching that teachers who love their profession cannot let it go unchallenged.

It is true that the man who chooses teaching as his profession does virtually close behind him the door to wealth. The very character of teaching is such as to preclude a high devotion to the acquisition of money. Teaching is an intellectual and spiritual process and deals with the things of the spirit. Material considerations must necessarily be secondary in importance. Beyond this, however, there is another reason which compels the teacher to refrain from attempts at the acquisition of wealth—which makes it, in fact, impossible for him to enter intelligently into the business transactions of his community. The teacher's daily business carries him directly away from the marts of trade. He has no opportunity to form intelligent judgment as to commercial values, so that if he makes an investment, it will likely be an unprofitable one. This fact has given rise to the popular impression that teachers are visionary and impractical beings, wholly lacking in both common and business sense.

It is also true, as Mr. Davis says, that teachers are public servants. They are such because they are employed by the public through its legally constituted authorities (boards of trustees, Regents, etc.) work in public institutions in official capacity, and receive their pay from the public treasury. Their terms of office begin and end according to the public will and the policies they follow are promulgated by legally constituted public authority. Indeed, so completely is the teacher a public servant that he is not even free in what is usually termed purely private and personal matters. The social, business, and religious life of the teacher is under constant public surveillance. The public will not tolerate in the teachers a plane of conduct below the highest level of the community he serves, nor much above it.

Not only is the above true, but the public demands practically all of the time of its teacher servants. The teacher who gives much of his time to personal business or to personal pleasure soon loses public confidence and with it his position. Accordingly, the public delimits the private life of its teachers in a measure that almost precludes ordinary private living.

Thus far, Mr. Davis' position is entirely sound, but when he attempts to apply the above statements to law and medicine he is so far wide of the mark as to be ludicrous. Both the lawyer and the physician are constantly dealing with material things. Their daily work calls them into contact with the which they live. They mix and mingle hourly with business men. Each has an exceptional opportunity to know commercial values and to reap profit from the misfortunes and mistakes of others. Their professions make of them permanent citizens of the communities in which they live as against the migratory character of the teacher's citizenship. I do not know how many of the lawyers and doctors become wealthy, but I am sure that the percentage is much higher than among teachers. If they accumulate such excess through a prostitution of their professions, as Mr. Davis asserts, then most of them, I fear, are "prostitutors." Moreover, neither the lawyer nor the physician is in any proper sense a public servant. The state does not employ lawyers except the few that are needed to preside over courts and prosecute criminals. Many lawyers spend their time defending violators of the public will as expressed in law, or in formulating policies and devices by which corporate wealth may evade and do violence to the spirit of the law. An overwhelming majority of them are not employed by the public or any body representing the public. They draw no pay from the public treasury and are not officially amenable to the public will. They do not lose their positions when their personal conduct fails to meet public approval and they are free to choose the communities in which they live.

Much the same thing may be said of the physician. He is not a public servant in the same sense that the teacher is, and has every advantage over the teacher from a commercial point of view. The public in official capacity does not employ, or pay, or discharge him. He is a public servant only in the sense that the farmer, the merchant, and other workers are public servants.

The fact that the teacher is a public servant in the true meaning of that expression makes it all the more important that the public adequately remunerate him—not, however, for the teacher's sake, but in the interest of the public service.

A Straw Stack

A large brown straw stack stood in the center of the field, the remnant of what had shortly before been hundreds of acres of growing wheat. One, tall peak towered above its several neighboring peaks, in somewhat the same way that one big mountain overlooks the heads of several smaller sisters. The broad level stretches of wheat stubble surrounding this heap, and the general smoothness of the country tended to make its size more impressive. With their barren surfaces, made it look all the more like a mountain above its many cliffs, crags, and precipices, the line of vegetation.

Cattle and horses stood at the foot of this immense mass, up to their knees in straw, and switched their tails continuously to ward off the flies. The stack had eaten great caves into the side of the stack. These tunnels occasionally caved in on the stock, and smothered them to death, while others narrowly escaped, bringing with them great heaps of straw on their backs.

Not only was this mountain of straw a gathering place for stock, but for the birds and insects as well. These infested the remoter points to make their nests and rear their young. Even little boys visited this mountain of the plains, scaled its peaks, then turned loose with all speed to roll to its foot.

It was probably a sad occasion for the inhabitants of this rolling and molting stack, when it succumbed to the flames and went up to the sky in large, boiling clouds of smoke, and the mountain of the plains was reduced to a small ash mound.

A Snow Storm in the Rockies
Snow everywhere. As far as the eye could reach—fifty miles, looking southward from the highest white peak—it filled ravines and gulches, and dropped in white drifts from the walls of canyons. It hid the bases of giant old trees, and completely covered young trees. Snow was lying everywhere over the Colorado Rockies, on the 14th day of March, 1915, and still falling.

It had been snowing for ten days, snowing in finely granulated powder, in damp-spongy flakes, in thin feathery plumes; snowing steadily from a leaden sky, snowing fiercely, the soft fleece roughly shaken from purple black clouds. But always the air was silent. The woods were so choked with snow and the branches so laden with it, that all sound was deadened. The strongest gust awoke no sigh from the snow packed forest. There was no crackling of boughs nor of underbrush. The silence was vast and complete.

Coach McCorkle left Saturday. He will attend school and assist the athletic coach at T. C. U. or Oklahoma University.

How to Kill Antelope from Horseback

There is nothing more interesting or exciting, to the experienced hunter, than shooting antelope from horseback, especially when he has a good gun and is mounted upon a well-trained horse. The hunter must get within two or three hundred yards of the antelope before they start running. He then starts his horse at full speed directly toward the antelope, and when he gets within one hundred and fifty yards of them he should begin turning his horse to the left or right of the running antelope. The direction he is going to turn depends upon the shoulder he shoots from. If he shoots from his right shoulder, then he must turn his horse to the right. The antelope, from some cause unknown to me, never fails to try to pass in front of the running horse. The rider keeps turning his horse away from the antelope, and the antelope, true to his instinct, keeps trying to pass around in front of the horse. This soon causes the horse and antelope to be running in a circle, with the antelope on the outside and still trying to pass around and in front of the horse; which in a short time will cause the horse and antelope to be running side by side. The hunter then takes his bridle reins in his teeth or in his left hand, and raises himself in his stirrups. This frees him from the jar or shock of the running horse, and gives the rider both hands free to handle his gun, which he should now use with deadly effect.

The Ford plant is to increase its daily output. That's rattling good news.—Dayton News.

A Lake at Twilight

As I wedged my way through the thick undergrowth of a great forest, a long, drawn out stretch of water suddenly presented itself as a barrier to my further progress. This lake was known only to the animal kingdom, and had never suffered at the destructive hand of man. For this reason, it presented a singular effect of beauty and seclusion. Being on all sides by the same dense growth of trees, briars, and vines, it forbade any man to explore it. The trees hugged close to the sides of the lake, their long limbs impending over the water's edge; and the branches dipped in and out of the water, as the light breeze sagged the limbs to and fro.

It was late summer, and the thick, uncut foliage of vines and trees shut out every beam of light from the low, descending sun. The interwoven branches gave to the lake a touch of coolness and shadiness. The soft moss-covered shoals, projecting into the water, tempted one to lounge on the nature-made sofa, and watch the smooth surface of the water, rippled only by the occasional flouncing of a trout as he jumped from the surface to catch an insect and fell back with a splash of the water that echoed and re-echoed between the opposite shores of the lake. The circular wave motion of the water set up by the fish extended to the extremities of the lake, and each wave was followed immediately by another slightly smaller, until the motion died away, and the water regained its former stillness. But the one flounce was the signal for the whole fish family to come forth in search of supper. Their eager response to the summons resulted in a constant wave that set the whole surface shivering. The turtle awoke from his sleep on an old snag in the center of the lake, and quietly slid into the water. The bull-frog jumped from his high perch throne of moss, and went "plunk" into the water, to begin his bass croaking. Overhead the whirring sound of a tardy buzzard was audible, winging his way southward to the roosting ground. As the day-light faded into darkness, the egg-shaped moon, bathed in a brilliant yellow light was just rising over the tree tops in the eastern horizon. The hoot-owl gave his lonesome greeting to the rising moon, seconded by the shriller voice of the whip-poor-will, which brought a shudder over the woodland. The two greeting blended, and bounded back and forth in the still night air of the forest.

A Country Church

Standing all alone near the center of a small rural district in the community church. It is a low, wide-roofed building, with five windows on either side, through which both the morning and afternoon rays of the sun stream brightly. A road, worn deep into the soil, leads from the main highway, and disappears in a broad, grassless spot, where are located a number of hitching posts in various stages of degeneration. On the other side of the building the grass grows tall and green, undisturbed, except by a single, well worn path. A hundred yards or so in the background is a grove of maples, forming a beautiful, inviting shade. Indications are that this shade is frequented by large crowds of the country folk. One could easily imagine the people of the entire community gathered for "all day singing and dinner on the grounds."

On all sides, scattering farm houses are visible in the distance, and they all seem to surround the tiny white church in a protecting and worshipful manner.

Kitchen Maids of Sultan of Morocco Entitled to Nether Garments of Expensive Stuff.

The sultan of Morocco was always an absolute monarch, and in that capacity the revenues of the country were his. There had never been any distinction between public funds and private funds—all belonged to the sultan. It was therefore no easy task to arrive at an agreement as to which were state and which private debts, so inextricably mixed had they been in the past. There was, for instance, a bill for some hundreds of yards of very expensive and very fine crimson cloth. Naturally the protectorate authorities scheduled this among the private debts. The sultan protested. The cloth, he said, had been purchased for governmental purposes—in fact for the trousers of the imperial kitchen maids; for there are several hundred slave-women employed in preparing the palace food. The protectorate government refused to be responsible for this debt. The ex-sultan drew up a historical treatise to prove that imperial kitchen maids were part and parcel of the state, and passed, like the palace itself, from sultan to sultan. The principle was accepted, but the debt was disallowed on the ground that these good ladies did not require such expensive stuff for their nether garments. A cotton material, they argued, would have equally well served the purpose. The sultan's reply was unanswerable and crushing. "In Europe," he said, "it may be the custom for the imperial kitchen maids to wear cotton trousers, but in Morocco we have more appreciation of the dignity of their position." There was nothing more to be said. The debt was paid—by the protectorate government.—From "The Liquidation of a Sultanate," by W. B. Harris, in "Asia" magazine.

FOLLOWED PATHS OF PEACE

Aborigines of Texas Unlike the Fierce Tribes of Other Sections of the Country.

Stone implements found in ancient workshops in Texas, antedating French, Spanish or American settlers, prove that the original settlers of this state were not like the fierce tribes encountered in modern times by the white settlers.

Little is known about the aboriginal population of Texas, which lies between the Pueblo and mound builders' area, but Dr. J. Walter Fewkes, chief of the American bureau of ethnology, aided by Professor Peace of the University of Texas, have located some long-forgotten village sites. Their investigations lead to the belief that the original people of the middle part of the state were hunters, while those of the eastern part near the timber belt, were followers of agricultural pursuits and were skilled in the manufacture of pottery. They resembled the mound builders. The western part of the state was a more elevated and less arid plateau. Here the people resembled the Pueblos of New Mexico. Some of the tribes are reported to have been cannibals. In the opening of the eighteenth century Apaches, Comanches and other savage tribes roamed over Texas following the buffalo, or raiding across it into Mexico. There seems to have been constant hostility with these Indians, in which many smaller tribes were exterminated.

Remarkable Chimpanzee Dies.

A few weeks ago there died a chimpanzee who had spent the eight years of his life defying all rules laid down for the well being of chimpanzees. His name was Antony, and he was the only one of his tribe of monkeys who has ever managed to stand an English climate unmitigated by artificial heat. He came from the Congo in 1911, when he was very young and small. At that time he weighed 14 pounds, by last summer he was just six times as heavy. During the whole period of his civilized life he was kept in a brick building facing southwest and unheated, and he slept in straw without blankets. Chocolates and sweets—pops—son to ordinary chimpanzees—were the special treats of Antony's dietary, and he had a less comprehensible fancy for beans.—Manchester Guardian.

The "Amen Corner."

The phrase "amen corner" is said to have originated in London, where, at the end of Paternoster row, the monks at one time finished their recitation of the "Pater Noster" as they went in procession on Corpus Christi day to St. Paul's cathedral. They began in Paternoster row with the Lord's prayer in Latin, continuing it to the end of the street, and then said "amen" at the corner of the row. As used in this country the phrase described the corner of a church where the elderly members sit and pronounce the word "amen" at intervals.

Fisherman's Mascot.

A mascot to which deep-sea fishermen attach great importance is a tiny flat stone or bone found in the ear of plaice and other fish. The wearer of one of these stones is supposed to be immune to the danger of drowning. It is easy to find these stones in the ears of fish, although they are no bigger than a split lentil. Anybody who cares to look for one and to examine it will see on its surface light and dark rings similar to those found on a larger scale in tree trunks. The number of rings tells the age of the fish, as a new ring appears each year.

The Smut Ball Situation

As was stated in last week's paper, the treatment for smut with the formalin treatment, we suggest that more precaution be used in order to get more beneficial results. C. F. Walker, County Agent, says the smut we have most prevalent in this county is in ball ball form and the spray treatment will not destroy the balls. The use of a barrel and a can large enough to hold a bushel of wheat, the can to have small holes to let the formalin in and also to float the smut ball as well as the small grains. These can be skimmed off which will increase the percentage of success.

Student Rally A Big Success

Last Saturday night over one hundred boys and girls who will attend the High School next year, met at the school building and proceeded to have a grand old time. After the necessary confab was over during which the prospective students had gotten rid of a very small amount of the energy that they have been storing up during the summer, and had confided some of the best secrets that just wouldn't keep, the meeting was called and progressed nicely except when some of that bubbling fun escaped verbally and out loud—its sure strange but such things are very contagious.

Mr. Sone gave the opening talk in which a gist of his next year's hopes and aspirations were imparted to his eager audience. The High School teachers were announced and were heartily applauded in their turn. It seems that our eighth grade (last year's seventh), has made such an impression on Miss Loretti Wiggins that she has asked to be their enrolling teacher. These High-School Freshmen are to be envied because every room had hopes of having this splendid lady as their enrolling teacher. But we will all have her for our English and we know from experience that it will not be in better or more competent hands.

Mr. Cooper was introduced and made a beneficial talk in which the boys and girls got a chance to see that they were certainly in luck to have a teacher who can be an excellent instructor, a student in a way, and at all times a playmate and coach. He can be all of these—that we are sure, because—for it and that is enough anytime, well because we have Mr. Sone's word.

Mr. Cooper had all the available boys together before the meeting and football was discussed and a few plans made. Snits will be ordered to be delivered before September 13. Our first match game will be played during the Randall County Fair, on Sept. 28, and if you entertain any doubts whatever as to our ability you just keep your eyes on the boys in Purple and White, for we're going to play real football this year.

Mrs. Powell was introduced in her turn and we learned that she is to be our History teacher. We all like her immensely already, because—well we tried one Powell last winter and the experiment was entirely satisfactory.

The girls are planning for their basketball season. Canyon High has had some mighty fast girl teams but we are sure—there will be no comparison with these and those of the past. These girls are in the game not only to win in basketball but in for their school and we are sure that they are fully capable of doing it.

A short talk was made by Hildah Biggers, who was president of the ninth grade class during the 1921 spring quarter. Hildah believes that we have the best school in the Panhandle and all the rest of us believe so too, and we will have you converted to the idea before long so that even the grouchiest of you will not regret that small tax raise of last spring.

Another short talk was made by Ed Gerald, Jr., who also believes that there is nothing better in the Panhandle than our school.

Miss Whittaker will have charge of the expression department next year and we know that she will be successful if the success of this department depend upon her, because we have Mr. Sone's word for that also, and as aforesaid, that is enough.

The High School students realize their good fortune in having Mr. Sone with us again and that they are wise enough to appreciate and take advantage of the opportunity. There are not many schools that have a superintendent so wise in the ways of the world and none that have a more fatherly one who is willing to impart this information to the individuals who need it and to whom it will help most.

In fact we will soon have before us a year in a school fairly alive with that electric current of friendship and good intentions that have bound each and every student together in an indomitable alliance for a better school, a better and more enjoyable life and this student body that you will hear so much about next term, is going to make a deep and lasting impression on the people of Canyon, an impression so deep rooted that the re-birth of the Canyon High School will always be remembered.

The meeting closed with a yell led by Mr. Cooper, a yell in which every student put his and her spirit behind their voice.

We will soon be off on another voyage in that everlasting search for knowledge. Do you wish us well? If so let it be known at every opportunity during the coming year.

—High School Reporter.

Famous Titan 10-20

At Lowest
Price
Ever

$900

All former price advances are wiped out by the big reductions made on this three-plow tractor. We believe this is the best buy on the tractor market.

This is the lowest price ever quoted on the Titan, considering equipment now included (formerly sold extra). March 1, 1921, the price was $1,200. Now it is $900. As this price disregards manufacturing costs, we do not know how long it will be maintained. International 8-16 and 15-30 tractors are also lower than ever before. The 8-16 now sells for $900 complete. The new low price on the 15-30 is $1,750.

All prices f. o. b. Chicago. We can arrange suitable terms. These prices certainly justify the immediate purchase of a tractor. Get yours in time for the horse-killing work of hot weather plowing and the fall and winter belt work.

The Calm
It was a relief to wake and stretch without feeling the never ending roll and pitch of a vessel in a heavy sea. It was pleasant to lie and listen to the contented hum of the big engines and dynamos, when for three days we had been struggling through a severe storm.

The sun was not yet up, but I rose dressed, and went out on deck. Several of the other boys were already there and were standing along the port rail looking toward the south. The transport was not making more than fifteen knots an hour, through a sea that was perfectly calm. In every direction as far as the eye could see there was not the slightest ripple. The water was perfectly smooth and appeared to be covered with a thin scum that changed in color as the dawn advanced. The only thing that broke the smoothness and silence of the picture was off to the south about three miles, where fine large whales seemed to be taking their morning exercise. Their splashing and spouting could be plainly seen and heard from the ship.

The water near the ship seemed to be covered with a slimy green scum, except where the path of the ship broke through; the numerous bubbles and oily streaks appeared, while away in every direction tracks similar to those made by mice and other small animals on dust covered floors, trailed through the scum.

Soon the sun came up, bringing the wind with it, and small ripples began to appear on the smooth surface. The calm was broken, and by nine o'clock white caps crested the waves.

NOTICE
THE STATE OF TEXAS,
To the Sheriff or any Constable of Randall County, Greeting:
You are hereby commanded to serve the following order and notice by causing publication thereof to be made and for the time and in the manner therein provided:

Now on this the 8th day of August, 1921, at a regular term of the Commissioners' Court of Randall County, Texas, there was presented to said court, the following application and petition to-wit:
THE STATE OF TEXAS,
COUNTY OF RANDALL,
To the Honorable Commissioners' Court of Randall County, Texas.

Now comes W. H. Lewis, who resides in Randall County, Texas, and respectfully shows to your honorable court, as follows, to-wit: That he is the owner of that portion of Section No. 33, certificate No. 15-3556, in Block B-5, 4, & G. N. Ry. Co. land, situated in Randall County, Texas, and more particularly described as all of Blocks Nos. 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 80, 81, 92, 93 and all of Blocks Nos. A, B, C, D, E, F, G, being a part of the Conner Addition to the city of Canyon, Texas, and has owned the same since November 10th, 1919, that on or about the 21st day of April, 1916, L. G. Conner and wife Q. V. Conner, caused a plat thereof to be made and recorded in Randall County, Texas, as is fully shown in Volume 21, page 369, of the deed records of said Randall County, to which reference is here made for a full description of said plat; that the land described herein is situated in the Southeast part of said plat and that none of the streets or alleys in that part have ever been opened and used as highways and that they have not been formally accepted by Randall County or any other municipality as highways, but as a matter of fact all of that portion of said Section 33, is now in cultivation; that your petitioner, as such owner is desirous of canceling that part of said map and plat embracing the Blocks described above, and throwing the same back into acreage property as it existed before such subdivision into lots and blocks, streets and alleys, was made; that your petitioner still owns all of that portion of said Conner Addition set out above, so located in Randall County and that the cancellation of that part of said Conner Addition will not interfere with the established rights of any person whomsoever.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that your honorable Court take such action, give such notice, and enter such orders, as may be proper or necessary for the cancellation of that part of the map and plat to said Conner Addition, described in this petition and throwing the property above mentioned back into acreage.

W. H. LEWIS.

And, upon due consideration, it is ordered by said Court that said application and petition be heard and further considered and action taken thereon at the next regular term of this Court, to-wit, on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1921, and that any person or persons interested in the lands therein described be commanded to appear at said time to protest, if so desired, against the action prayed for by the petitioner.

Said application and notice of such hearing and action shall be published in some newspaper published in the English language in said county, for three weeks, prior to action on said application as is provided by law; and a true copy of this order, containing said application as above set out, shall be published as the application for the relief prayed for and as the order of this court giving notice of the time that the court will take action upon said application; and the clerk of this court shall issue legal notice of such hearing.

Herein, fail not, but have you before this court this notice, on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1921, with your return thereon showing how you have executed the same.

Given under my hand and seal of said court this 8th day of August, A. D. 1921.
(Seal) O. W. Gano, Clerk, of the Commissioners' Court of Randall County, Texas.
A true copy, I certify.
W. C. BLACK, Sheriff,
Randall County, Texas.

Ellen's Decision

Ellen pulled back the dingy little boarding house curtain and looked out through the rain-spattered window on a muddy, untidy back-yard. A bedraggled cock slunk out from his shelter under the coal shed to seize a choice scrap cast out by the cook. Ellen shuddered at the ugliness of the scene. She drew her bath robe close about her for the air was damp with a penetrating chill. For the first time the girl was able to be up from an illness of two months. Those two months were like a bad dream to her, and often when the influenza had held her within its grasp she had felt that there was little need to plan for her future. Now that she was almost well, Ellen knew that she must make some arrangement for the summer. Ellen pressed her forehead against the window pane as a mist of tears blurred her vision.

"If school would only last another month," she sighed, "perhaps I could tide over the summer on one more salary."

"May I come in, Dear?" came a voice from the outside, and Bertha Lane another of the teachers of Alvis school entered. "You mustn't take cold, Ellen, come down stairs where it's warm."

"I shan't, Bertha, but I have just been thinking what I can do during the summer. I intended to go to College; you know, I only lack three months of graduating, but my little nest egg is all gone now, and I am at sea."

"I shall go home tomorrow; I don't know what I should do if I did not have a home to go to in the summer," said Bertha softly.

"I could look forward to a happy home going, too, if mother and Daddie were living," Ellen sighed wistfully.

"There, don't worry, little girl, but dress your pretty self and come down, because dinner is almost ready."

Ellen shook out her soft, wavy brown hair and arranged it becomingly about her pretty young face. It was not her nature to take a melancholy view of life and a little primping makes one feel vastly more cheerful.

"I don't know any way but to cultivate old Lankie Moore," Ellen dimpled mischievously.

"Old Lankie has the cash alright but the main proposition would be to make him use it," remarked the practical Bertha. "We have to learn to be scheming wretches, after a few years of teaching, Ellen. If you could go to a place where people appreciated you, you would be a perfect wonder; with your good looks and talent you could make a fortune in anything but school teaching."

"But I came from a family of teachers, dear. Daddy was a teacher and after he died mother taught, and it took all of her salary to send me to a teachers' college. That's what I was trained for, and I love it!" exclaimed the girl waxing enthusiastic over the profession that was dearer to her than all else. "How I long to take those dear kiddies to the woods once more before I leave. Bertha, I wish I could afford to teach," Ellen's blue eyes were filled with tears.

"There, there, don't do that," comforted Bertha, going over to her and slipping her arms around Ellen's slight shoulders. "You know they offered you a five dollar raise to stay here another year."

"Yes, but I have to live in the summer; I'll probably be a Woolworth's clerk the next time you see me."

"Come, there's the dinner bell, you will feel more like planning after dinner," consoled Bertha.

Ellen dabbed a little powder on her nose, fastened the last hook on her blue serge frock, and the two girls started down to dinner. After they were seated at the table, Mr. Lankie Moore glided in and seated himself opposite Ellen. At intervals during the meal he adjusted his horn-rimmed spectacles, patted his hair that was skillfully brought over the top of his slightly bald head, and looked at Miss Ellen Compton with an air of pleased approval.

Ellen with a desperate half formed resolution forcing itself into her consciousness gave a wan smile to the highly self-conscious gentleman opposite her. After dinner the boarders gathered in the parlor. They all called on Ellen to play and sing.

"Let's all sing," cried Ellen sweetly.

"Mr. Moore, I am sure you have a good tenor voice."

"Indeed, Miss Compton, not in the least, but we enjoy your singing," replied the gentleman, moving toward the piano, deeply touched by the unexpected compliment.

Ellen had a clear lyric soprano voice and played her accompaniments moderately well. Now Mr. Moore had no special liking for music, but he admired Ellen's talent immensely.

When Ellen refused to sing again, someone suggested a pitch game, and all the boarders except Ellen and Mr. Moore went into the next room to play.

"I presume you will be going home now that school is out," he began.

"I have no home now," Ellen said slowly, "I am not sure where I shall go."

"Ah," exclaimed the gentleman, "perhaps you are thinking of a-er-going into a home of your own."

"Oh, indeed," protested Ellen, "I am sure I never thought of that."

A short strained silence.

"Oh, Miss Compton."

Ellen sweetly, "yes?"

Mr. Moore shifted his chair a little closer to the piano stool that Ellen still occupied. The light shone unmercifully on his bald head that gleamed white beneath the few slick, straggling hairs that were combed over it. Ellen gasped involuntarily as the chair moved closer to hers; her eyes were wide and frightened.

"Miss Compton," he continued, "do you know that you are immensely attractive to me?" His soft hand touched her own that hung limply at her side.

Ellen started involuntarily, then laughed—

This was the beginning. In a half hour she walked dazedly up the stairs and into her room. Sitting before her mirror she addressed herself: "What have you done, Ellen Compton? What would your father think? But this is a good moral man and an efficient business man. But your mother would rather you would marry him than . . . Oh, dear!"

Ellen's eyes filled with tears; she shut them tightly for she could see her sunny little school room with its bright flowers and fresh white curtains; she could see the rows of happy youngsters she had spanked and cuddled during the past year. "I'll have to say goodbye to my little school room," she sobbed, "but perhaps" brushing away the tears, "this will be a little romantic after all."

Miss Olga Crawford of Channig, who attended our summer Normal session last year, is here on a visit.

Miss Mary Watson of Silverton had as her guest this week, her mother, father and brother.

Miss Hudspeth will visit several points in Texas and New Mexico during vacation.

Miss Brigham will leave this week for Los Angeles, California, where she will attend school.
