VOLUME LIV

HICO, TEXAS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 26, 1938

NUMBER 12

Here In HICO

With a last heaving sigh of relief, we attack the task of cleaning up the live hook which catches a variety of information, propaganda and political data at this time of year. Since Saturday is the day on which we vote for the last time until the general election, which usually excites about as much enthusiasm as would a testimonial dinner for Adolf Hitler, supposedly it is safe to throw away that portion of the literature which we do not use in the current issue.

In our morgue are contained a number of pictures of State candidates, some of whom are already defeated, some of whom will be beaten Saturday, and a few of whom will be elected. At least there will be some satisfaction in unloading drawers and stripping copy books of their confusing varieties of knowledge and misinformation.

After several minutes spent scanning and studying the contents of the above mentioned data, and following sober reflection, we have decided that there's nothing particularly interesting in same. So here goes another consignment to the bulging wastebasket. Let's get on to other things, and leave the matter of telling people how to vote to others more qualified.

A very interesting booklet, "Canada Your Friendly Neighbor Invites You," catches our eye among the political pot pourri. It was sent for reference purposes in our office, we note, but that doesn't prevent us from planning one of those popular "Scotch vacations," does it?

The resident of the United States who is planning a vacation "across the line" should write to the Canadian Travel Bureau, Department of Transport, Ottawa, Canada, and will receive a similar booklet.

We are torn between two desires, however, for alongside the Canadian travel booklet we find an offer for advertising Hotel Reforma in Mexico City in exchange for a due bill good for accommodations there.

Like Corrigan, when we start somewhere we don't pay much attention to a compass, for just as long as we're traveling for fun there's no particular use of worrying about our destination. However, the Mexicans seem to have worked out a better plan for an impetuous newspaperman, so for a time we shall concentrate upon the latter offer. October is a pretty month in which to travel, isn't it? We can't go in September.

Tax collections in Texas during the past 13 years have gradually moved upward, we find, as follows:

1924	$ 61,000.00
1927	$ 76,000.00
1930	$107,000.00
1936	$127,000.00
1937	$192,000.00

"Where this folly will end, nobody knows and nobody cares," laments W. T. Carley of Austin, who is responsible for the figures. While we don't want to get into an argument with Mr. Carley, who is authoritative enough in his information that he might discredit us, we still maintain that somebody does care, although admitting that nobody knows.

Members of the legislature are going to have to care a lot at the next session if present indications may be depended upon. And we folks at home are going to have to remember that there are limits beyond which the public treasury cannot go in putting out money, unless we are willing to replenish the supply with new and higher taxes.

In a more optimistic vein reads a clipping from the Brady Standard, preserved for some occasion in the past. We know of no better time to print it than right now, so here it is:

"Here is something worth thinking about. It was passed on to us; in turn, we pass it on to you.

"Yes, when it's dark in Europe, it's still daylight here. We complain of the 'depression' while we should be counting our blessings. We say, 'What's coming next?' when we know that whatever comes, it's going to take courage and cash to meet it. So instead of fretting, why not get to earning?"

"The going is rough... the digging is hard right now, but don't forget that if an Englishman, a Frenchman, a German, an Italian, or any other business man of Europe had your chance today, he'd jump for it... even if business were as bad as you think it is. And, really, it isn't half that bad.

"So, remember... when it's dark in Europe, the sun still shines in the U. S. A."

REVIVAL AT DUFFAU
The public is invited to attend the services of the Baptist Revival starting next Sunday night, Aug. 28, at Duffau. Preaching will be by the Rev. E. K. Barber.

COUNTY DEMONSTRATOR

Sends Notes About Her Work Over Hamilton County

Barbara Jones, Clothing Demonstrator for the Pecan 4-H Club, has proved to be one of the outstanding club girls for Hamilton County, even though this is the first year she has done 4-H Club work.

Barbara won second place in the County Wardrobe Demonstrator's Contest. She has done outstanding work in clothing construction, in improving the storage space for her clothing, and in improving herself.

"My closet is not new; it is an old one remodeled. Though it is the only closet in the bedroom I use, it was first built for a quilt closet, and was not made so that it could be used as a clothes closet. We had never used it, however, except as a 'junk' closet for magazines, parts of radios, old hats no longer usable, and other articles of this kind.

"After all of this 'junk' was removed, I began thinking how it could be arranged into a clothes closet. It was small, about 4' x 4', and had three wide shelves in the back.

"Upon the advice of my home demonstration agent, my mother, father, and I removed the shelves. We put a rod across the closet about 1-1/2 feet from the back wall, and above this we put a shelf to keep my folded garments on. Our house is a one and a half story house and the closet is so low that there is not enough room above this shelf for me to keep my hats on it. Since the closet is so deep, the agent advised me to put narrow shelves on each side and make hat stands from coat hangers to clip onto these narrow shelves. In this way, these shelves—only six inches deep—take care of even wide brimmed hats. Our narrow shelves on the side take care of my cosmetics, shampoo, soap, and shoe polish. A belt rack on the door provides storage for my belts where they are easily found, and the shoe rack I made keeps my shoes up out of the dust and makes it easy to sweep the closet.

"The only cost of my closet was the paint I painted it myself."

Since Barbara made her closet over, her father, Mr. Elmer Jones, has built three other closets for clothing that are excellently arranged, as well as a dark room for him to use in his photography hobby.

Barbara also has worked especially hard on grooming, posture, correct eating habits, and wise selection of clothing for herself. One of the big goals that she is still working on is learning to like people instead of being afraid of them. The improvement she has made already may be told best by the remark made by the judge for the County Demonstrator's Contest when she visited Barbara's home to do the final judging in the contest: "I can hardly believe that is the same girl I visited six months ago! She has so much more poise and self-assurance than she had before when I came, and looks so much prettier."

PAINTING NEW BRIDGE

Brings Out New Evidences of International Cooperation

The new Thousand Islands National Bridges between Canada and the U. S. present an interesting example of U. S. and Canadian cooperation. From the preliminary engineering down to the final coat of paint and the dedication, each nation furnished its professional services, materials and labor for its half of the job—a job costing $3,959,000—that links the two nations in another bond of friendship.

The project starts at Collins Landing, N. Y., and runs to Ivy Lee, Canada, through the region known as the Thousand Isles. Engineers used some of these islands as stepping stones for five bridges across the Lost Channel section of the St. Lawrence River. Eight and one-half miles of approaches and roadways connect them.

International cooperation extended even to painting the bridges. On our side of the border, American painters were employed and across the line Canadian painters did the work. Even the paint these men applied was made by Canadian and American firms. Three coats of "Dulux," made by the Du Pont Company, were used on the American side while three coats of "Clux," made by Canadian Industries Limited, were applied on the Canadian side. Fortunately for the appearance of the bridges, both "Clux" and "Dulux" are made in the same color and of the same materials. "Dulux" widely known in the U. S. A., is a revolutionary type of finishing material that lasts longer and looks better than the usual paint products. A similar product is used of refrigerators, electrical appliances, automobiles and as a smoother household enamel. The color chosen for the five bridges is known as Patina Green and resembles the appearance of weathered copper.

To crown the international aspect of this work, the Premier of Canada and the President of the United States jointly dedicated these bridges on August 13.

HIGHWAY 281

Association Formed

Towns On Through Texas Route Represented At Lampasas In Barbecue-Meeting

With large and enthusiastic delegations of citizens from practically every town along the route of State Highway 281, U. S. 281, present at a meeting called for route known as the American Legion Memorial Highway was presented as the logical north-and-Lampasas Tuesday, August 23, this route calling for early improvement to relieve congestion on other highways, and was described as a valuable asset not only to the particular section which it traverses, but to the State as a whole.

After a barbecue lunch at Lampasas Country Club, provided by the Lampasas Chamber of Commerce, a meeting was held in the clubroom where Rufus F. Higgs of Stephenville was elected to serve as President of the Highway 281 Association, Dr. H. B. Rollins of Lampasas, vice-president, and Miss Gertrude Luker of Lampasas, secretary.

Mr. Higgs from the chair appointed a resolutions committee which later presented among its resolutions for approval of the assemblage one addressed to the State Highway Commission seeking further improvement of the route, asking particularly that the Commission complete the unpaved gaps as soon as possible.

Another resolution, later adopted, placed the association on record against further diversion of any part of the gasoline tax for any purpose, however worthy.

The president called for talks from representatives of every town along the route, and responses were heard from citizens of Wichita Falls, Jacksboro, Mineral Wells, Stephenville, Hico, Hamilton, Ewart, Lampasas, Burnet, Marble Falls, Blanco, Johnson City and San Antonio. Most enthusiastic perhaps was that from Roy Fry of Burnet, who stated that the idea for a similar highway was conceived before the World War, dropped for the duration of that struggle, then reopened and carried out with firmness and effectiveness which had resulted in the fine route existent today. Now there is not a foot unpaved from Lampasas to the Mexican border.

He stated, but he and his coworkers still refuse to be satisfied until the uncompleted stretches to their north are finished, thus placing the excellently-located highway in position to take care of the large amount of traffic which would find it useful in getting through this scenic section of the State.

In attendance at the meeting from Hico were L. N. Lane, W. M. Cheney, S. E. Blair, S. J. Cheek, R. L. Holford, Dr. H. V. Hedges, J. B. Ogile, and Frank Falls. Falls flew down, while transportation for others of the party was graciously provided by Bowen Bus Lines, which sent a large 30-passenger bus and a representative in the person of L. C. Eastland of Fort Worth.

DIPHTHERIA

Treatment by Scientific Methods Shows Spectacular Results

Austin, August 24.—"Few conquests of science have been so spectacular and complete as those relating to diphtheria. Science has firmly established the value of serum treatment in both its preventive and curative phases. However, toxin-antitoxin or its successor toxoid for immunization and antitoxin for cure, are serums of which the general public is even yet not fully aware," said Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

"As indicated, toxoid is the immunizing preventive agent now usually employed. However, three or four months are required for the time to develop immunity. At this time the Schick test can be applied to determine the results of the preventive treatment.

"Children should receive diphtheria immunization as early as possible, preferably as soon as they are six months old. The necessity for this immunization is recognized when it is known that two-thirds of all deaths from diphtheria occur in the age group under six years.

"It cannot be too strongly emphasized that to deprive children of this protection science has made possible is to subject them to unwarranted and unnecessary hazards that can easily turn into a tragedy. Parental interest in immunization must be widespread, if the Texas death rate from this disease is to be decreased from the 1937 total of 257.

"When a child has been taken ill with diphtheria, antitoxin is the only treatment that will save its life. Also, to be effective, it must be given early in the illness and in large doses. Delay is usually caused by parents failing to realize that any sore throat may actually be diphtheria."

CAR WRECK

Near Olin Causes Injuries to 12 In Light Pickup

Three persons were seriously injured and nine others were hurt about 9 o'clock Sunday night near Olin when the light pickup in which they were riding went out of control and overturned several times.

All occupants of the pickup were from Stephenville. Dan Barfoot, candidate for constable, suffered a severe head injury, as did his 2-year-old son, George. A portion of Walter Brannan's left arm was amputated at the Stephenville Hospital, where the injured parties were taken in a Barrow ambulance and in Mr. Barrow's private car.

Other injuries were reported by hospital attendants as follows: Mrs. Barfoot, abrasions; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Gray, head injuries; Gray's three children, Mrs. Brandon and one child and Mrs. Tom Williams, Barfoot's mother-in-law, minor cuts and bruises.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Methodist Church in Everman, conducted by Rev. John W. Hawkins of Wellington, a former pastor of the church at Everman.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Accounts Credited With Wages For The Past Year

Austin, Aug. 24.—The crediting of each employee's wages received during 1937 to his social security account under the old-age insurance system is now completed, according to Jesse C. Carter, manager of the Austin office of the Social Security Board. When the Board, working at the rate of over a million a day, finished recording the wage items reported by employers for 1937, it completed the first phase of the world's largest bookkeeping job.

Since the amount of each employee's old-age insurance benefits will be determined by his total wages received in employment covered by the system, a separate wage account, identified by an account number, is maintained for each one of the many millions of workers under the system.

Each worker under the old-age insurance system is accumulating credits, on the basis of his wages, toward a monthly old-age retirement income. If the wages the employee receives by the time he reaches age 65 do not qualify him for a monthly retirement income, or if he dies prior to receiving the minimum amount to which his wages entitle him, the system provides for a single payment, based on the total amount of his wages, to the worker or his heirs, as the case may be.

The wages received by each employee in occupations covered by the old-age insurance system are regularly reported to the Government by employers. During 1937, Register, 3b, was the first year the system was in operation, employers reported their employee's wages every six months, but under a change in regulations effective the first of this year, these reports are now made every three months. Employers' wage reports are filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue as a part of their tax returns. These reports are checked against tax returns by the Bureau and then turned over to the Social Security Board for the recording of each employee's wages to his account.

A lag of about six months will always occur between the end of the period for which wages are reported and the recording of employees' wages in their accounts, Carter explained. Employers are allowed one month after the end of the reporting period in which to make their reports. The Bureau of Internal Revenue requires approximately three months for auditing the reports, and about the same time is required for the Board's Bureau of Old-Age Insurance to complete the recording of wages. Since operations got fully under way about three months ago, the final crediting of wage items has proceeded at an average of over a million a day.

In comparison with the more than 29,000,000 applications for social security accounts, relatively few inquiries have been received to date by the Board from employees wishing to know the amount of wages recorded in their social security accounts.

Since July 1, the Board has been answering requests for such information as received. It will continue to send wage statements to other workers who specifically ask for them. Information concerning wages for each year will be available after July 1 of the following year. For instance, a man inquiring as to the status of his account now will be furnished a statement showing the amount of wages credited to him for the year 1937, and similarly after July 1, 1939, information will be available for 1938.

Any person wishing to inquire about his account should communicate with the Social Security Board, 104 Old Federal Building, Austin, Texas.

HOUSTON POWERS

Dies In Hawaiian Islands; Reports Give No Details

Tom Powers received word early Monday of the death of his son, Houston Powers, Diesel engineer for a large fruit company located in the Hawaiian Islands.

First word of his death came to Mr. Powers from a son, Tom, in Bakersfield, California, but efforts to reach Mr. Powers' family in Hawaii to confirm the report were futile. A daughter, Mrs. Iida Faulk, in Los Angeles, made several attempts to contact them by short wave radio.

MEETING AT FAIRY

The Church of Christ at Fairy will begin a series of meetings Sunday morning, August 28. Rev. Laggard May of Waco will conduct the services, with Russell Lewis of Austin directing the singing.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these services.

Mule-Car Wreck On Highway

A mule belonging to Clint Herdick almost caused a serious accident Monday night when he was derailed in front of a car about five miles from Stephenville on the Glen Rose highway.

The occupants of the car were not hurt. Several stitches were taken in the mule at the office of Dr. Tubbs, Stephenville veterinarian.

Keeping Up With TEXAS

Douglas (Wrong-Way) Corrigan will set his $900 "crate" down on Municipal Airport at Fort Worth Sept. 6 for a day and night as a guest of that city. Paul Harmon, of the Chamber of Commerce aviation committee, received a promise to that effect from the noted flier. The Fort Worthers decided to call by telephone after repeated invitations by wire and letter had drawn no definite reply. "Sure, I'll come to Fort Worth," Corrigan said. "I'll be there Sept 6 on my hop west." "Don't land in Dallas by mistake," Mr. Harmon cautioned. "Not a chance," the flier laughed.

Members of the state identification association could have had a more practical convention in the home of Mrs. Juanita Brown, state police fingerprint expert and secretary of the association. A burglar, with absolute disregard for fingerprint evidence, broke into the Brown home, thumbed through the secretary's association records in his search for valuables. He found nothing, she reported, but left several latent fingerprints that might lead to his apprehension.

If any Texas girl would like to live in Burma, India, there's a grand chance waiting for her. Gov. James V. Allred last week received a letter from a boy in Burma who blandly said that "Texas girls are my ideal, and my greatest dream is to be able to marry one of them. I would appreciate anything you can do to help me out in this matter." The girl of his choice, the boy related, should be about five feet, two inches in height, with blue eyes, blond or red hair, and she should be "slightly plump."

E. C. Revill, city postal carrier at Palestine, left the postoffice at the close of the day's work and started home. A few blocks away he dropped in behind the fire department answering an alarm. They led him straight to his own house which was destroyed by fire.

"Shades of Buffalo Bill!" exclaimed Captain J. D. Moffatt, state police statistician, when he read this traffic accident report from Potter county. "Dave Griest of Kansas City, Mo., was driving his car along the highway two miles east of Amarillo when a full grown buffalo jumped in front of it. The driver did not see the prairie roamer in time to avoid the collision which resulted in slight damage to the modern automobile and subtracted from the diminishing buffalo census."

SCHOOL NOTICE

The Hico Public Schools will open on September 12th. A more detailed announcement will appear in next week's paper, with instructions and important announcements of interest to parents and pupils. RAY D. BROWN.

HULLSTON RESOLUTION

Presented Last Year Considered An Important One

Commenting on probabilities of the next Governor and his Legislature starting inquiries calculated to disclose information regarding disclosure of outside pay received by legislators, William M. Thornton, staff correspondent of The Dallas News, calls attention to similar efforts on the part of Earl Huddleston and Hardin in the last session of the Legislature.

"In the last session the House," says Mr. Thornton, "by voice vote adopted a resolution signed by 45 members calling on the membership to fill out the questionnaire and for the Senate to do likewise. The original resolution declared it had been widely rumored that members had been receiving retainer fees and salaries from corporations and special interests and that it was impossible to serve two masters. A motion to table the resolution lost by a vote of 120 to 10, showing the overwhelming sentiment for it in the House.

"Not much heat was turned on in the last Senate. After adopting its original resolution the House approved a second declaration signed by Hardin and Huddleston calling for Senate compliance. Vernon Lemens was the author. His motion for immediate consideration lost, 18 to 10, it not having been given the necessary two-thirds support to suspend the rule for instant attention. The resolution then went to committee and remained there. Some Senators, however, voluntarily filed statements of employment which were published in the Journal.

"The Hardin-Huddleston resolution said the people of Texas were 'very much dissatisfied with the progress of legislation in the past and there are rumors over Texas and there are members receiving fees from corporations. It called on the Senate for response and said it is much more reasonable to think employment was more effective in the smaller body.'"

THE CONSUMER PAYS

There is a great deal of confusion in people's minds these days, which is not cleared up by consideration of some of the policies and practices of the Federal government. It used to be taken for granted that the most important economic problem was that of the consumer. We are all consumers. One may be a Democrat or a Presbyterian or an Elk or a farmer, or all of those at the same time, or none of them. But whatever his other affiliations, every one of us is a consumer. That is the only class label or designation which fits every human being.

There are two kinds of consumers; those who work for a living and have to buy and pay for their own food, and those who do not work for a living but are fed by those who do, who in turn pay for their own food but pay for that of the non-workers.

Nobody wants to let the non-workers starve, but it would seem reasonable that they should not receive at public cost more food or better food than the workers can afford to buy for themselves. Yet we have before us the spectacle of the A. A. buying surplus agricultural products in order to keep the price up, and giving them free to people on relief, while the workers who have to pay for their food are thus compelled to pay higher prices, because that presumably benefits the farmers whose surpluses have been bought up.

That sort of thing has been going on with potatoes, apples, flour, canned goods, fresh vegetables, raisins, cheese, butter, eggs, oranges and many other commodities. That it benefits the farmers when Government pays them more than the open market would pay for surplus products may be conceded. That it benefits the non-workers on relief when this high-priced food is given to them is apparent. But in between are the great masses of ordinary consumers who are certainly not benefited.

They are the ones who pay. They pay a higher price for their food in order to keep the farmer's prices up, and to feed the non-workers. They can eat only what it sounds a bit screwy to us.

INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTH

President Roosevelt lately called the South "the nation's number one economic problem." The rapid development of new industries based on the South's own raw materials seems likely to change that situation.

One of the most promising new industries in America is that of making paper from pine wood, by the processes developed by the late Dr. Charles H. Herty. Many Southern mills are now manufacturing wrapping paper and paperboard from pine, and the first newspaper mill to utilize pulp from cheap southern pine is now under construction in Texas. Its successful operation will not only give the South a new and important industry, but it will point the way to economic independence for American newspapers, which now have to rely on foreign sources for their white paper.

Not much has been heard recently of the project of using cotton fabrics as a subsurface layer on secondary highways. Several miles of such roads have been built in different parts of the country, and their usefulness under varying conditions or wear, weather and climate still awaits complete approval. The early reports indicate that they are economical to build, stand up well under all but the heaviest traffic, and are inexpensive to maintain.

If the final verdict bears out those beliefs, an almost inexhaustible market for the South's excess cotton will be opened up. There are hundreds of thousands of miles of "feeder" roads connecting the outlying agricultural sections with the main highways of the nation, which need improvement to make them passable in all weathers. Cotton may turn the trick. At the same time several research laboratories are working on ways of using cotton for industrial purposes, with some success.

Along those lines the industrial salvation of the cotton-growing South must be sought.

FREEDOM OF THE MOVIES

Starting from nothing only 30 years ago, the motion picture industry has become one of the largest and most prosperous businesses in the world, but one which touches directly the lives and the interests of more people than any other.

The Federal government has brought suit under the antimonopoly laws against the major film companies and their managements, to break up practices in the industry which are said to prevent local exhibitors and their audiences from showing and seeing the pictures they want.

It is not a function of Government to pass on matters of art and personal taste, but it seems proper that Government should do what it can to prevent any combination of private interests from imposing restrictions upon what pictures the people are permitted to see. That is more important than the question of whether the film producers make too much money.

NEW LIGHTS FOR HIGHWAYS

Most of the 40,000 people who are killed every year in automobile accidents meet death on the open highways, where traffic is not unduly heavy but the temptation to take chances on speeding is the greater for that reason. A high proportion of fatal accidents are due to darkness, and the dazzling lights of approaching cars.

Experience has demonstrated that there are fewer serious night accidents on well-lighted city streets. Unfortunately, it has been impossible until now to light long stretches of country roads. The cost has been prohibitive.

Now two new systems of highway lighting have been invented and have given good results in practice, which are so inexpensive that any rural road district can afford them. One system, which is useful only for hard-paved roads, is based upon imbedding a reflecting material in the road surface, so that the headlights pick out the roadway and show clearly whether there are any obstructions ahead. The other system is an ingenious reflecting device placed on posts or telegraph poles along the roadside, which catches the beam of the headlight and projects it ahead, lighting up the road for half a mile or so. Two or three of these to the mile are said to light the highway almost as well as daylight.

Better-lighted roads and non-glare headlights, which have now been perfected and doubtless will be as compulsory as safety glass in a few years, will help cut down the ghastly toll of motor deaths.

OUR LIBERAL PENSIONS

The last Congress enacted pension laws for the benefit of families of disabled veterans, and increasing pension rates for veterans themselves, which are estimated to add around 13 million dollars a year to the Nation's payments on account of services in past wars.

The annual cost of pensions is now above 400 million dollars a year, and as time goes on it is inevitable that the total will increase, even if this country never gets into another war. There are now about 850,000 ex-service men and about 250,000 widows drawing pensions. The pressure for "liberalizing" the pension laws and increasing the pension payments is constant and increasing.

In the last week of June this year there died in Buffalo the last surviving widow of a veteran of the war of 1812. That war ended 123 years ago, in 1815. Darius King who fought in it, married at the age of 71 a girl of 19. He lived to be 89, but his widow drew a pension for 52 years after his death.

If future Congresses are as liberal in the matter of widow's pensions as those in the past have been, we may have widows of World War veterans drawing pensions well into the 21st century.

ARE YOU A HYPOCRITE?

The average motorist is an unconscious hypocrite. That's a very strong characterization, but a little impersonal analysis will substantiate it.

How often have you roundly criticized some driver for an offense which you commit periodically yourself? How often have you taken comfort in the thought that accidents are caused by some reckless breed of motorists with whom you have nothing in common, thus dodging the fact that only pure fool's luck has saved you from a crash on a dozen occasions? Have you ever attempted to get a ticket "fixed"—even though you pay lip service to the cause of aggressive, impartial law enforcement?

It is a fact that a large proportion of accidents are caused by the reckless ten per cent, but the other ninety per cent periodically take chances and are responsible for many of our annual auto accidents and deaths.

Who, for example, doesn't sometimes pass a car when the stretch of empty road that can be seen is too short for safety? Who doesn't occasionally succumb to the lure of excessive speed—even though he has little or nothing to do when his destination is reached? Who doesn't periodically neglect necessary repairs to brakes, lights or steering mechanisms, on the theory that he will get around to it when more convenient? We'll go a good way toward reducing accidents when the average driver begins asking himself such questions and returning honest answers. Accident prevention, so far as it concerns the human element, is a personal, individual matter—and each individual has to really want to drive safely at all times before he can analyze his driving errors and correct them.

Such A Headache

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

No topic is of such absorbing interest in Washington these August dogdays as the question whether Mr. Roosevelt really hopes and expects to be elected in 1940 for a third term in the White House.

The third term issue is becoming more and more the major political issue in both the Republican and Democratic parties. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt could eliminate that issue by a direct statement that he will not be a candidate in 1940. It would have to be a much more positive and convincing declaration than the President is accustomed to make, however, to make the politicians of either party accept it as final.

When President Coolidge in 1927 made his famous declaration: "I do not choose to run for President in 1928," half the leaders in his own party and most of the Opposition refused to credit it for what it was, a definite and final withdrawal from the Presidential race.

Nothing milder than General William T. Sheridan's statement in 1890 would convince most Washington political observers now that Mr. Roosevelt is not seeking to break another precedent and make himself the first three-term President. General Sherman left no doubt in anyone's mind when he told the Republican National Convention: "If nominated I shall refuse to run; if elected I shall refuse to serve."

Anti-New Deal Coalition

In the absence of anything so vigorous as that from Mr. Roosevelt, and with the belief steadily growing that his intentions are quite the reverse, a "Stop Roosevelt" movement is already under way, mastering to its support not only leaders of the Democratic party but many influential Republicans who are beginning to believe that the only way to block a third term for the present President is for the Republicans to get behind a Conservative Democratic leader, and throw their strength to an anti-New Deal coalition, on the old political principle: "If you can't lick 'em, join 'em."

It is conceded by almost every experienced political observer that if the Presidential election were to be held tomorrow and Mr. Roosevelt were again a candidate on the Democratic ticket he would be re-elected. But if there were two Democratic tickets in the field, as there were in 1896, and the anti-Roosevelt ticket commanded the support of the Republican voters, it might be a different story.

Political speculation here is taking that direction because of the growing belief that the Republican Party will not be able to muster enough strength in its own name to make a better showing against the New Deal than it did in 1936, if as good.

It lacks two elements which under the American political system are essential to the success of any national party. One of those is a national organization built up around a nucleus of state, county and municipal office-holders. In that respect the Republican party is under a tremendous handicap. The other missing element is leadership.

1940 Republican Prospects

Whoever runs for President in 1940 must have, if he is to run against Mr. Roosevelt, a high degree of personal magnetism and the ability to project that personal glamor over a microphone. There is general agreement here that the President's most useful political asset is his radio voice and manner.

He has the rare faculty of convincing everyday folk who have never seen him that he is their friend and speaks their language. No Republican possessing that sort of personal charm has yet appeared on the political horizon in a position where he might be acceptable as a leader. Senator Vandenberg, who has become the party's spokesman by default, has not got it. Neither has former President Hoover, who is generally conceded to be out of the race as a possible candidate in 1940. Mr. Landon would like to be the party's nominee, but it is extremely doubtful if he could be nominated.

Senator Lodge of Massachusetts is winning a reputation as a smart political strategist, and has shown powerful vote-getting qualities in his home state. Representative Wadsworth of New York could be much more of a party leader than he is, if he cared to exert himself.

Southern Vote

The difficulty which the party is having in formulating a program is due, in large part, to the inclination of many politically ambitious Republicans to accept and adopt a large part of the New Deal program, not because they believe in it, but because they think it has vote-getting power.

The chief difficulty in trying to make such a sharp division of parties is the question of what banner the conservative coalition will fly. The growing belief here is that it can be only the Democratic flag. It is pointed out that the gold Democrats did not lose their party standing in 1896 when they chose to follow Gen. Palmer instead of Mr. Bryan, and that the Progressive Republicans who followed the Bull Moose in 1912 are still powerful in the Republican party.

But the big party split now is among the Democrats, and the party which wins in 1940 must bear a label which will not alienate the Southern voters, without whom no coalition movement can be successful.

Few Democrats from the Deep South will vote the Republican ticket unless the religious issue enters the campaign, as it did in 1928, when Mr. Hoover carried many Southern states against Gov. Alfred E. Smith. But northern Republicans are more eclectic in their political attachments, students of political history believe. Therefore the idea is growing that the conservatives of both parties should concentrate on an outstanding anti-New Deal Democrat as the 1940 standard-bearer.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Charles E. Deann

Eli: Responsibility for Others.
 Lesson for August 28th: 1 Samuel 4:12-18.
 Golden Text: Proverbs 22:6.

Eli is one of the most pathetic figures in the Bible. We are impressed by his humility, good intentions and notable length of service, for he judged Israel forty years. But despite his sincerity and upright character, his weakness of character is abundantly apparent. "Very likely he was too good-natured, too easy-going. Certainly he lacked a sensitive, sympathetic appreciation of Hannah's bitter disappointment over her lack of children, for he foolishly accused her, as she prayed in the temple of drinking too much. And while he had the insight to see that it was the Lord who spoke to little Samuel in the charming scene where the mysterious voice calls to the boy at night, it is significant that he shows no sign of surprise or penitent sorrow when Samuel repeats to him the the dramatic tidings the Lord confided. And what a pitiful end was his! When the messenger arrived from the field of battle with the frightful news of total defeat, the death of his sons, and the capture of the ark by the enemy, he fell backward from his seat and broke his neck.

But Eli appears at his worst in his feeble handling of his wayward sons, Hophni and Phinehas. There was a complete lack of mutual understanding between them. While the father was busy in his priestly duties his sons went straight to the devil. At the very temple gate they disgraced themselves with a shocking exhibition of sensuality.

Here we have a perennial problem. As Prof. Phelps, of Yale, says: "Some children shock their parents and some parents bore their children." Since the World War the gap between the older and the younger generations has widened perceptibly. Parents are bewildered by the antics of youth, and the later consider their sires hopeless old fogies. How deplorable! The remedy lies in a patient mixture of tact, imagination, and sympathy. Fortunately there are many families where a happy solution has been achieved.

Sentiment

"Sentiment," said Lowell, is intellectualized emotion—emotion precipitated, as it were in pretty crystals, by refined minds." I am certain that if this great writer had the experience of my friend, Dr. A. D. Y., with his stylish stout body patient, he would in all probability alter the thought therein expressed.

Mrs. S. is a buxom individual, given to reading romantic stories and attending movies which reeked most with love scenes.

Twenty-five years before Mrs. S. met her husband at a Sunday School picnic, a stroll through the shady woods, a seat on the banks of a murmuring brook resulted in a proposal of marriage, which took place in the conventional manner of the time. Time passed and four little S.'s blessed their matrimonial venture. But time and the duties of a wife had not diminished romance from the heart and soul of Mrs. S. As a matter of fact, the passing years had only served to increase her romantic tendencies.

Poison Ivy

"Papa," said the motherly Mrs. S. "tomorrow is our silver wedding anniversary, and I am going to ask you to take that day off and do what I saw done in one of the recent movies." "What's that?" growled the unromantic spouse. "Well, I'll put up a lunch, and we will go to the same picnic grounds where we first met—you and I alone—and sit under that same tree and listen to the music of the brook." Her husband consented and they spent the day together in the same woods where they had plighted their troth, a quarter of a century earlier.

Four days later Doctor Y. was called in. He had two patients and both of them were suffering from an exceptionally bad case of poison ivy dermatitis, contracted in those very woods, and beneath that self same tree which still had their initials carved upon it. Romance is now gone from the soul of Mrs. S., but Mr. S. caustically sneered, "Sentiment is only worth observing when one is less than twenty-five years of age."

Nancy Hart's HOME NEWS

A hot weather shortcut that is worth following does away with the bother of making butter balls for the table. Fold a piece of waxed paper over the blade of a sharp knife and cut half inch slices across a pound print of butter. Cut each slice in half and then cut across the halves to make four even pats. The waxed paper should be wide enough to cover the knife blade and extend over the blade far enough to hold firmly with the left hand while cutting with the right.

Are you embarrassed by a few white elephants in your home in the form of overstuffed furniture? Perhaps you have one of those sofas consisting of davenport and chair that was well built and expensive twenty years ago and now too good to throw out, so you continue to try to hide the chair in the darkest corner of the room and tolerate the davenport because plenty of your friends have them, too. If you really want to do something about it you can send the pieces to a competent upholsterer who will trim down the too generous arms, straighten the back of the davenport and give the pieces modern lines and proportions. Use a smart new material for covering, choosing a plain or self striped fabric for the davenport and a figured material for the chair. Maybe all you need is a slip cover to give the plump pieces new youth. You can buy patterns to fit your furniture if you feel like making them yourself and if you have a good sewing machine and plenty of patience there is no reason why you can't make your own slip covers.

Conditions being the very best, it never takes time for the roots of these trees and shrubs to re-establish themselves in their new homes. More than this, until they are well settled, they are in danger of serious injury if not actual death unless weather conditions are unusually favorable. Consequently it's of utmost importance to keep the new plants well watered during the entire season. Foliage as well as roots should have a thorough drenching regularly.

MODERN WOMEN

by EARLENE WHITE
 President of The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc.

In recognition of her achievements as director of the Home Institute of the Detroit News of Grand Rapids, Michigan, Mrs. Earlene Gordon Smith has been awarded a silver trophy. Three hundred business and professional women of that city were leaders in selecting Mrs. Smith who for sixteen years edited the woman's page of The News. The citation made in presenting the trophy included recognition of Mrs. Smith's "vision of an ideal social justice and her work with boys and girls which bids fair to heal and prevent many of the hidden causes of crime."

There is only one competition out of the six which are conducted by the American Academy in Rome in which women may enter, and two of them have won prizes in classical studies. Miriam Friedman of New York and Frances G. Blank of Indianapolis, the two lucky young women, will go to Rome next October to study, each feeling tremendously important, with the Academy's allowance of $1,400 a year to see them through their work in Italy. Miss Friedman is a graduate of Cornell and Miss Blank of Indiana University.

One of the modern Guatemaltecos is Antonia Matos Aycinena, who is known throughout Central America and also in Europe for her paintings and sculpture.

A woman who has a big job in Washington is Mrs. Ruth B. Shipley, the only woman who ever has been chief of the passport division of the State Department.

The FEUD at SINGLE SHOT

By Luke Short

Fifteenth Installment
SYNOPSIS

With his partner, Rosy Rand, Dave Turner is on his way to his ranch at Single Shot. Both are returning from prison where they have served sentences for unjust convictions. On the train, which is carrying a large sum of money, Rosy's quick action and straight shooting holds a hold up while Dave saves the life of Martin Quinn, a gambler, who is being threatened by a desperado. Stopping at Single Shot, the sheriff tells Dave he is not wanted. Quinn defends Dave and Dave and Rand go to Soledad to meet Mary, Dave's sister, and proceeds on horseback to the ranch. Mary reveals she is married and tells Dave that the ranch is doing poorly, being beset by nesters and involved in a claim dispute. Next morning, at breakfast, Dave and Rosy discover that Mary is now cooking for the ranch hands—a bad sign. After discussing financial matters with Mary, Dave and Rosy saddle horses and leave for Single Shot to see the town banker, Mr. Pearson. Mortgage is renewed and Dave decides to get enough money to pay off mortgage by raising alfalfa and selling it. Following night, the lake is blown up, and Dave inwardly accuses Hammond. The latter blames Dave. A chance meeting of the two gives them an opportunity to clear away this false impression. The hunt now turns to Crowell, the mysterious man of means and ambitions. Rosy rushes to Winter's home to tell Mary of his suspicions about her husband and asks her help to prove his findings. Laredo evolves a scheme to arrest Crowell as a murder suspect in order to hold him for questioning.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Reckon that Jasper is alive?"
Lew asked.
"I dunno. I been watchin' him and he acks jus like he was dead."
"Take a look," Lew said.
Reilly walked back and, seizing Dave's forelock, yanked his head up off the horse's neck. He felt his chest.
"He's alive, all right," Reilly granted. "Damned if I know why, though. I slugged that skull of his till my arm was tired and he still hung on to Sayres."
Lew laughed shortly. "That Rickin' Sayres gave him didn't do him no good."
A high, jagged-edged hogback rose before them and Lew nosed his horse into the trail that ascended its side. The trail was narrow, to the left there was a sheer wall, to the right a long talus or windrift that sloped abruptly to the canyon bottom three hundred feet below. Lew looked back and hauled up the rope a little, so as to bring Dave's horse closer to him.
"Wonder now, is that hoss spooky?" Lew asked. "If he is I reckon I'll let this rope go 'and you drive him up."
"Naw. He's dead on his feet," Reilly replied.
Lew said "I hope so" and swung up into the sharply ascending rocky trail.
He sagged loosely in the saddle, head bent down as his horse swung into the ascent. The steepness of the hill raised the horse's forequarters, letting Dave's sagging head slip down on the shoulders. He rode low this way for perhaps three minutes.
He steered himself. "Here goes, old horse. Sorry." And he sunk his teeth in the horse's withers, ripping away a large piece of skin. Electrified by the searing pain in his neck, the horse lunged and let out a shrieking whinny. Dave bit again, savagely.
On that narrow ledge, the horse, frantic with fright and pain, started to pitch. Lew's efforts to snub him with the rope were savage but fruitless.
"He's wild!" Reilly yelled. "Let go and ride up."
Crazed with pain the horse jarred down stiff-legged again, humped its back for another pitch and Dave savagely rubbed the raw flesh. Halfway up in this arc, the horse started a sunfish, and when it landed Dave felt as if he were going to be ripped out of the saddle with the sudden fall.

The horse had gone over the trail edge.
With Dave's weight on its back, the horse started to plummet down the steep slope. Dimly, Dave realized that in the quick descent, Lew who had held to the rope trying to fight the horse down, had been swept from his saddle by the swift yank on it.
"Steady boy," he called.
"Steady, steady," he muttered soothingly and part of his calm was communicated to the horse, who stopped, trembling.
He had to be quick. Closing his eyes he pulled savagely at the thongs binding his wrists to the saddle horn. A sickening rip of skin and one hand was free. Soon the other was able to help him as he turned in his saddle, struggled to free his sliker.
The sliker free, Dave unrolled it swiftly and found the gun Hank had given him. Then, reaching

Then he settled down, keeping his eyes and ears alert, riding close to Reilly's horse. His own mount followed wearily behind.
As the time went on, he became more wary and moved closer to the lead horse, watching it. When he heard it whinny and saw it increase its pace, he spurred his horse and headed it off.
Dismounting, he halted the horses to the ground, laying heavy rocks on their reins. He looked around. Ahead of him, the land rose, broken and rocky, to the lip of a ridge.
Directly below Dave lay the barn nestled snugly against the rock out of the wind. In the corral adjoining it, he counted six horses, but Mary's was not among them.
Watching the house and seeing no signs of life, he decided that no one was likely to come out and surprise him.
He looped the lariat around a point of rock, tested it, then let himself down over hand to the down and seizing the bridle as reins, he spurred the horse slowly Lew's heels, lunged into sight, from behind the rock, looking up at the trail. He listened for the sound of horses in the canyon bed.

A muffled cry came through the door... Dave shot the lock off.

They were coming, both cursing savagely, at a gallop. Dave pulled his roan close in to the rock and balanced his gun lightly in his bloody palm, his eyes thin, flinty slits in his face.
Lew was the first to charge by, and Dave yelled, Reilly, close on.
Dave wheeled his horse broadside, in a high arc, slowly, crashed and bucked up. Reilly screamed as he catapulted from his saddle across his horse's neck and to the ground.
"Two," he muttered thickly. Spurring his horse over, he looked down at the two men. Lew was dead, drilled through the head. Reilly was dying, if not dead. He stared at the men dully, sunk in a stupor of pain and fatigue and thirst.
He shook himself. The knots to the ropes were under the horse's belly where he could not reach them; so, loading his gun again, he shoved the muzzle of his Colt against the rope beside his foot and cut it with a shot.
Dismounted, he was so weak his legs gave way under him.
"I've got to drink," he thought dazedly, sitting on the ground. Crawling over to Lew's horse, he pulled the canteen from the saddle horn. After the first slow drink he paused, then took a deep draught, which strengthened him. Then he lay down in the shade of the rock, tore the sliker into strips and, after washing his wounds, bound them.

He considered the two dead men. He pulled them over to the opposite side of the canyon. Laying them side by side, he piled a cairn of stones over them.
Then he turned to the horses standing in the sun. Dave mounted Lew's pinto and cut Reilly's horse across the rump with his rope. Dave had no idea where the cabin lay, but he knew if given their heads the horses would make for it.
He flipped the rope loose, he let himself down to the ground behind the barn.
His eyes roved the barn, settling on a bearskin lying in a far corner. A plan formed slowly in his mind.
Going out into the corral again, he moved toward the gate, which consisted of loose poles. The horses watched him.
In the barn again, Dave picked up the bearskin and went to the stable door.
He called the bearskin out into the middle of the corral, then dodged back quietly for the back of the addition.
The horses, smelling the bearskin, milled wildly out the gate in a stampede.
They fled past the south end of the house, heading down a narrow canyon to the east. Dave crawled softly around the north end of the shack. At the corner he stopped, listened.
"God-damn-it, it's them horses scatterin'! Who left that corral gate down?"
Dave did not recognize this voice "You did, Ed, damn you!"
"But I never," Ed protested. "Shut up and round 'em up." Sayres ordered. "You help him too, Lufe."
Dave edged his head around the corner of the house in time to see two men file out and head down the canyon afoot.
He gave them time to get out of sight, then he edged around the front door on his hands and knees. He heard two men, one of them Sayres.

"Fat'll send word where the posse's headin' for. He'll have some one in the posse, don't you worry, if they crowd us, we better take 'em back to the one camp in the timber, north."
"That's a pretty good idea, I reckon," voice came.
"Ain't she thought?" Sayres drawled.
Dave straightened up and swung the door open.
Both men were seated at one end of the table, a bottle before them.
"In the least part of a second Dave divined what Sayres was going to do. Seated, the outlaw could not get at his guns. He made a leap to place himself behind the stranger, his hands clawing at his guns. Dave's shot was quick, hasty hardly allowing time for his Colts to clear leather. The shot caught Sayres in the side and pitched him into the stranger. The impact sent them both to the floor. Then Dave's rage broke, as he emptied his guns into Sayres and the stranger.

A feeling of sickness and weariness and disgust enveloped Dave as he let his gun sag. Sayres lay sprawled over the upset chair, face down, his guns fallen out of his lifeless grip. The stranger lay peacefully on his back.
He shucked cartridges into his guns as he called from the padlock door.
"Mary!" he called.
There was a sort of muffled cry for an answer and Dave shot the lock off. He knew the two men after the horses would have heard the shots and would probably be running back now.
Once in the dark room, he made out a figure sitting tensely on the cot.

"Dave!" she said.
She was in his arms sobbing before he could recover from his surprise.
"Dorsey, Mary isn't here?"
"No-no, I don't think so."
"Who has the keys to the leg-irons?"
"I don't know their names, but it's the boss."
He ran over to Sayres, rolled the body over and fumbled through the pockets. His hands paused and he listened, hearing the pounding of running feet. Slowly his hand left Sayres and settled to his gun-butt, his eyes narrowing. The running ceased, and a man stepped through the door hesitantly, guns already drawn.
Dave shot just once more and the man pitched forward on his face. Suddenly a window shattered and Dave laughed.
The second outlaw had chosen wisely. He was fortified up behind a rock sixty yards in front of the house.
Dave found the keys on Sayres and returned to Dorsey, who white and trembling, had witnessed the duel with the outlaw.
"We kill coyotes because they kill our cattle," Dave said softly. "And we have to kill these hombres, or they'll kill us."
"I know."
"No, you don't," Dave said, "but you will when you understand. It's just bloody and cruel."
"Do you feel that way about it too?" Dorsey asked wonderingly.
"More than you," Dave replied. "More because I'm the one that's got to kill and kill."
"Then this isn't the end?" she asked.
Dave shook his head grimly. The outlaw in front of the cabin was still to be accounted for.
"Can we get away?"
Dave nodded. He stepped to the back door of the addition and shot the lock off.
"Step through here and wait for me outside."

"What are you going to do?"
"A dirty job," Dave said slowly. "But a decent one, I reckon, at that. I'm going to fire the place."
Which she had stepped outside Dave went into the main room and switched lamp oil on the floor and stepped outside.
"That hombre out front has only got a six-gun," Dave said. "He can't hit us—I don't think he can even see us. Make a run for the barn and I'll follow you."
"Look out!" Dave.
Dave dropped to his face as a shot blazed from the corner of the cabin. He landed on his stomach, rolling on his side, his free arm whipping out his gun. Only the edge of a hatch and a gun showed, but Dave emptied his gun at them as he watched the other gun explode. He felt a hot searing pain in his arm and then the shooting ceased.
Flattening himself against the wall, he waited. No more shots came and he made his way cautiously to the corner. He swung out with gun ready, and saw the outlaw kneeling. The man had died like a tired child.
Dave shuddered and looked away.
"I reckon we better hightail it," he said finally, and added slowly, "I'm sorry about that, but there was no other way."
Dorsey stood up suddenly.
"Take me home please."
Dave remembered the stinging scorch in her voice when he had seen her in Dr. Fullerton's. "We'll get the horses."
"Where are they?"
"About a mile from here. Can you walk it?"
"Yes, I—" Dorsey at last lifted her eyes to his set white face.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Lowery and Orville Ogles of Stephenville spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. John Ogles and family.
Mrs. N. A. Lambert is on our sick list this week. She is staying in the home of her son, Mr. Haskell Lambert.

It's As Simple As This:

Can farmers borrow money from the government to build homes?
In years past interested parties making such inquiries have been referred to their Federal Land Bank or nearest production credit association with the note that these institutions could make certain restricted types of improvement loans but that in general building loans were not in their field. Now, under recent amendments to the Federal Housing Act a definite farm building, repair, and improvement program is provided for. The summary that follows is based on provisions of Title I of the act.

- How much can I borrow to build a home?
Up to $2,500 for new structures. It may be a barn, a home, laying house, silo, or several structures combined.
- Can I get money to repair my home?
Yes. Repair, alteration, and improvement loans include such things as a new roof, a new paint job, a plumbing system, new fencing, landscaping, etc. Loans cannot be made for buying equipment that is not actually a part of the property itself.
- How much can I get for repairs?
For all types of repairs and improvements, not over $10,000.
- What is the interest rate?

If Reelected Representative

I have tried to see as many people as possible and solicit your support in my race for Representative in the runoff; however it will be impossible to see all so I am taking this method of soliciting your help on August 27th.

Since I have been your Representative I have endeavored to honestly and fairly represent you at all times; whether I have done this or not is your place to judge. I have stayed on the job and worked for the people while the legislature was in session and when it was not in session. I am basing my claim to be reelected on my record and nothing else. If you think I am the man to represent you the next two years I will appreciate your support and assure you that I will give my best to the duties of the office and will ever be grateful to you for your assistance.

Respectfully,
EARL HUDDLESTON

JOTS.... JOKES & JINGLES -BY- JENNIE MAE

Fire Chief J. W. Leeth was in receipt of a check this week from the citizens of Iredell for the assistance the Hico Fire Department rendered in extinguishing the blaze which threatened to destroy that entire town last week. The check for $50.00, added to a $15.00 donation made last week by J. W. Clanton, owner of a drug store in the same block with the Tidwell Cafe. Accompanying the check was a letter, signed by Roi Mitchell, expressing appreciation on the part of the Iredell people for the assistance given them. Twice this year the local fire department has rushed to the aid of this little town when fire broke out in the business district.

Mrs. Sally Purdom says she is having a big time since her grandson, Charles French, got his new car and takes her riding. Something of ancient vintage with no top, the jalopy is the pride and joy of its owner, and "Miss Sally" might be mistaken for one of the kids as they streak down the avenue at top speed—twenty miles an hour. (Want to fight, Charles?)

Little Barbara Joyce Alexander had a bit of bad luck Sunday when she fell and cut a deep gash in her knee, but she was out later in the week playing as if nothing had ever happened.

The force at the W. E. Petty dry goods store has been busy all this week remodeling, painting and cleaning up in preparation for the new fall clothes purchased last week in Dallas, some of which are on hand. The rest is expected to arrive this week. The improvements include the removal of an overhanging balcony to provide more storage and display space, and more light. The walls are being repainted white to freshen up the appearance and to reflect still more light. When completed, the changes will represent a vast improvement in the appearance of the interior as well as making a more convenient arrangement.

Mr. and Mrs. Ollie Davis and children have moved to the home they recently purchased from Claud Phillips, located on the old Stephenville road directly across from the residence of Jesse Bobo. Numerous improvements have been made and will be made from time to time by Mr. Davis.

Bill Rusk says that he wishes there had been some friends around to smash the camera when Jack Lewis, Dallas, candid cameraman snapped his picture just as he said, "I do," last week in Glen Rose. Bill leaves next week for Dallas to join his bride, the former Miss Mildred Houstead, and when asked if he was going to eat her cooking, he replied, "Good heavens, no! I'll be hungry when I get home."

If you have wondered why all the boys at the Corner Drug store are smoking pipes, well tell you. Bernard Ogle bought about $50.00 worth of pipes to stock and they figure this is a good advertisement.

Wonder if the person who figured out that an uneducated person has a vocabulary of three to 5,000 words included "Flat Foot Floogie of the Floe Floy in the List?"

Do you believe in "Believe It or Not?" We don't usually take the liberty of criticizing a man as famous as Bob Ripley, but we are a little put out by something he recently had in one of his illustrations that has been called to our attention. He lists 35 different ways to spell "Eileen." We won't go into the spelling of all these different ways, but Mr. Ripley includes these: Eileen, Ilene, Althea, Aileen, Alyne, Allyne. He gets pretty close but never quite reaches the spelling of Hico's Alysne Robertson. That makes 37 different ways.

ORVILLE WRIGHT

He Changed the World's History But Got No Thrill Out Of It

About forty years ago, a trivial event occurred out in Ohio. At least, it seemed trivial at the time; but you know now that this event has influenced your life and that it is going to have a mighty influence on the lives of your children, and your children's children.

On that momentous day, Orville Wright walked into a library, in Dayton, Ohio, and picked up a book. This book told the story of a German by the name of Lillenthal who was able to fly in a glider or huge kite. To be sure, Lillenthal didn't use an engine, but he did fly. Orville Wright sat up that night, until long past midnight, fascinated with the story of this significant achievement. He aroused the enthusiasm of his brother, Wilbur; and the Wright brothers started out on a career that was to end in the invention of the airplane and make their names immortal.

Neither of them had much education. They never finished high school. But they had something far more important than a college diploma. They had resourcefulness and ambition. Years before, when they were mere boys, they had gone out into the country and picked up the bones of dead cows and horses and sold them to a fertilizer factory. Then they started a little shop where they sold and repaired bicycles.

But no matter what they did for a living, they were always dreaming about flying.

Building a wind tunnel in their bicycle shop, they began experimenting with the force of air on wings. Finally, they built a huge kite or glider and took it down to Kill Devil Hill at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. They went to Kitty Hawk because a strong, salty wind is always sweeping in there from the sea and ground there is always soft with billowy sand.

For years, they experimented with gliders; and then they put a home-made engine in one of their gliders and transformed it into a flying machine. They made the date, December 17th, 1903, forever memorable by achieving the first flight in the annals of human history. It was a bitter, sunless day. But cold as it was, Orville wouldn't wear even an overcoat when he mounted the plane because of the additional weight.

At exactly thirty-five minutes past ten o'clock, Orville Wright climbed into the roaring craft, stretched out on his stomach, pulled the release, and the strange machine rose, snorting and coughing into the air, with flames belching from the open exhaust. The machine pitched up and down uncertainly for twelve historic seconds; and then lighted on the ground only one hundred feet away.

It was a tremendous event. It was one of the turning points in the history of civilization. At last, the great dream of the ages had come true. For the first time, a man had shaken off the shackles of the earth and soared up toward the stars.

Yet Orville Wright said he didn't get any thrill out of it at all. He said he expected the darn thing to work and it did.

And here is a strange thing: Orville Wright, the first man who ever flew, doesn't have a license to fly now, he has not been up in an airplane since 1915, and he hasn't piloted a plane since 1914.

He is a shy man and to him the hue and cry of publicity is most unwelcome. He won't write the story of his life. He won't have his picture taken, and he doesn't like to talk to reporters. His brother,

Wilbur, who died in 1912, once said, "The only birds that talk are parrots, and they don't fly very high."

Neither of the Wright brothers ever married. Their father once said that the boys couldn't afford both wives and a flying machine. So they chose the flying machine.

Christy Matthewson once went through a regulation nine inning game for the New York Giants with only 68 pitches.

When you drink Beer in a tavern... choose your tavern

WHEN YOU restrict your patronage to legal, respectable retail outlets, you not only encourage those better outlets but you've made a start toward driving out the bad spots in your community.

And that is exactly the aim of the great body of honest retailers of beer who, along with the brewers, recognize that Beer's only problem is to remove the anti-social conditions that sometimes surround its sale.

Existing laws can curb these evils. Help us by demanding their strict enforcement! Sales to minors, or after legal hours... or use of a beer license as a screen, for selling illicit liquor or for operating an illicit resort... all these are violations of the law and should be stopped. Public opinion, once aroused, can see that such practices are stopped!

News of the World Told In Pictures

FAIR GLAMOUR

We certainly do hear a lot these days about the New York World's Fair 1939. We keep right on hearing it, too, day after day. It seems you can't pick up a newspaper anywhere, or a magazine, either, that you don't run across something about the tremendous, stupendous, glamorous gorgeousness of the Fair, or words to that effect.

Sometimes we lean back in our worn editorial chair and wonder whether the fellow who's sending out all this press literature about the exposition isn't kidding us just a little. New York, you know, likes to kid the country-folk now and then. However, it doesn't seem there are any grains of salt sent with the press news of the Fair, so perhaps we're supposed to take it as "and believe it."

Let's see, now, what some of the wonders are going to be, as they are told to us in all sorts of flowery language. If you want to stick your tongue in your cheek afterward, that's up to you. We're just sitting still till it's time to journey to the Fair and see for ourselves.

To begin with, we're told that the Fair has built a steel globe 200 feet high, the biggest thing of its kind ever put up, and that there's a steel spire 700 feet tall right next to it, and that you are going to travel from the spire into the inside of the globe on the biggest escalator in the world, and that it took a camera man more than half an hour to climb up into the spire to take some pictures of the scenery thereabouts. Well, mebbe, mebbe.

And now try some of these on your imagination:

A statue of George Washington 65 feet tall, the largest portrait in sculpture in the world; a sun dial 50 feet high that's really going to tell time whenever the sun shines; the process, which all visitors will be able to witness, of milking 200 contented cows on a revolving platform so that they'll give 4,000 quarts of milk every 24 hours; the opportunity to make a parachute drop of 250 feet and live to tell the folks back home about it; the presentation of the entire history of railroading in this country, with all the dramatics of hold-ups with big six-shooters, and the like, on real tracks with real trains and masked bandits; a gigantic fountain display at night combining fire, water, sound and color as never before in what has been called "the nearest approach to chaos that man can contrive for purposes of entertainment"; the sight of a great airplane apparently in flight, so that you'll feel like ducking when you see it as if it were coming toward you; the changing of the leaves of a thousand trees to fairy-like fluorescence by the light of hidden mercury vapor lamps; the display of a "rocket ship" of the future in which those who want to "get away from it all" may be shot through the stratosphere to Mars, or to wherever else in the distant universe they have been foolish enough to buy tickets; a wide amphitheatre, as large as those of ancient Rome, where thousands will gather to witness thrilling pageant and spectacular productions of rainbow hues on a huge island stage; an enormous model of the City of New York, with some of its skyscrapers shown twenty-five feet tall, to display the intricate lighting system of the metropolis.

These are only a few of the promised wonders. Is the Fair trying to kid us? What do you think?

WHO WROTE IT?

"Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet"

His father was postmaster of Joplin, Mo., with a fine voice and the knack of writing songs for political rallies. His mother played the organ, she taught her young son all she knew.

At twenty-one he was sent to Chicago Musical College, where he began to write instrumental pieces. The first popular song he wrote was for Frank "Bring 'Em Back Alive" Buck, called "Ashy Africa," which the game hunter published with another by the same composer "Just Because I'm From Missouri." He got a job as a song plucker in Gimbel's department store in Milwaukee, but after six months came to Manhattan where he wrote his first big hit—"Rainbow."

He followed with "Moonlight Bay," "When You Wore a Tulp and I Wore a Big Red Rose"; in 1914 when the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was organized he became one of its first members.

He toured vaudeville and wrote songs for the next fifteen years. During the war, he wrote "Where Do We Go From Here, Boys?"

Now he is living in Hollywood, writing instrumental numbers and occasional popular tunes.

His name is Percy Weirich

This Family May Soon Move to Austin

A typical young American family is that of Gerald C. Mann of Dallas, whose address may be Austin, Texas, in the near future. Gerald Mann is waging a run-off campaign for the office of Attorney General. In the first primary Mann was given 316,000 votes by Texans. Mrs. Mann is the former Miss Anna Mary Mars of Sulphur Springs. The children are Gerald, Jr., aged 8, and Lola, aged 6. The picture was taken at their Dallas home, near S. M. U., where Gerald Mann made an outstanding record in scholarship and athletics.

To Prevent "Jumping Light"

QUINCY, Mass. . . . A new traffic signal designed to stop motorists and pedestrians from "jumping the light" is shown being demonstrated by Arthur M. Longway (right) of Endicott, N. Y., its inventor. The invention is a device consisting of an aluminum encaused circle of 16 bulbs, 15 white and the 16th red. The white lights indicate the number of seconds before the light is to change, thus eliminating the possibility of being "caught" by a changing light at an intersection.

Terrell Hits Home Run!

C. V. Terrell, chairman and candidate for re-election to the State Railroad Commission, is an ardent baseball enthusiast. When he has the chance he works out with the Dallas Steers. He is shown here, in a Dallas uniform, just after hitting one over the left field wall. Squatted behind home plate is Paul "Daffy" Dean, Dallas pitcher and brother of "Dizzy" Dean.

A Royal Visitor

SOUTHWOLD, England. . . . King George, shortly after his return to England after a State visit to Paris, spent a day at the Duke of York's camp, of which he was patron before his accession to the throne.

Long Life A Delusion

ROXBURY, Conn. . . . Peter Behan, 104 years old, stops long enough from his scythe sharpening to observe that "there's nothing beautiful about old age. It's a delusion. It's no fun growing old and there's no use celebrating birthdays."

New Heat Wave Drives 'em In SPRING LAKE, N. J. . . . New heat wave drives bathing beautifuls back into the Atlantic. Anxious for a cooling "dunk" at Allaire Beach (and the last one in is a something or other) are (l-r) Barbara McClees, Charlotte Mount, Betty Sauta and Jean McEvoy leaping off the beach.

YOUR LIFE INSURANCE

FEWER than half of the people who died in the United States during 1937 owned life insurance, according to estimates made public today by the National Committee for Life Insurance Education.

These believers in protecting the economic value of their lives left their thousands of dependents a sum totalling 30 per cent more than aggregate factory payrolls of American automobile and automotive parts manufacturers last year.

Dependents of these life insurance owners, however, have not been guaranteed against loss of current earnings of their breadwinners for a lengthy period, as the average amount of insurance per policy holder was only for $1,472.

"Despite the smallness of average individual protection," declared the committee, "it is a tribute to the thrift and self-reliance of thousands of Americans who, by tradition, count no sacrifice too great if through it they achieve security for their family."

"In an attempt to accumulate capital sufficient to produce an income adequate for the support of their dependents thousands turn to life insurance, which is the only means known to accumulate a definitely set sum of money if the owner's life is terminated before the savings goal has been reached."

Deaths in the United States last year were estimated at 1,527,000. People owning life insurance, in an endeavor to protect their loved ones against their economic loss, aggregated $1,500 or 65.7 per cent of the number who passed on. The $1,500 people who owned life insurance at the time of their death carried 1,500,000 policies, an indication of their total that left, as well as property, has an economic value.

Payments to the thousands of beneficiaries of the 651,600 policy owners who died during 1937 aggregated $940,000,000 or an average of $1,473 per policy owner. This sum contrasts with $308,000,000, total factory payrolls of American automobile and automotive parts manufacturers, who had 517,000 factory employees last year.

The original face value of the insurance owned by the 651,600 policy owners who died last year exceeded the $940,000,000 of payments to beneficiaries, because some of these policies had outstanding against them unpaid loans which reduced their face value by that amount.

Although 651,600 deceased left their dependents $940,000,000 there were 765,000 people, or 54.3 per cent of the total who died in the United States during 1937 who left their dependents without one dollar of insurance.

Total life insurance in force at the end of 1937 of $110,000,000,000, which includes ordinary, industrial and group policies, according to Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, was about four times greater than the $27,000,000,000 in force at the end of 1917.

Approximately 200 Americans carry life insurance policies amounting to $1,000,000 or more.

Broadcasters and program builders are getting a better idea of just how much radio means to the farmer through figures just released by the United States Department of Agriculture census of agriculture.

The figures reveal that an average of 62 per cent of all farm families now own radios, as compared with 29 per cent in 1930. Several highly productive states boast from 73 to 94 per cent radio ownership on farms. The combined farm and small town (towns under 2,500) average, estimated by the Joint Committee on Radio Research, is 69 per cent.

CALIFORNIAN THINKS TEXAS WILL LIKE GOVERNOR

Fontana, Calif., Aug. 19, 1934.

Editor: News Review.

Dear Sir: After reading in the News Review that W. Lee O'Daniel was elected Governor of Texas, I thought I would write and express my opinion of the political situation of today.

Politics has changed like wearing apparel. It has a zipper on it. The people are zipping out the old line politician and zipping in men who are for all the people. Politics nowadays reminds of so many divorce cases—when the women get tired of their old dyed-in-the-wool husbands, they go to court, get a divorce and kick 'em out. Now when the people get tired of the old guard politician, who has been on a sit-down vacation for forty years, they go to the polls and divorce 'em and kick 'em out. The people are thinking these days.

I remember when Dan Moody and Ma Ferguson were running for Governor, an old man used to hang around the Katy Depot in Waco, Texas. A friend asked him who he thought would be elected. He said the election made him think of a time when he was up North. In a certain community there wasn't any school. So a gang of farmers got together and built a school house. Then they went to the city and hired a Yankee girl to teach school. All the children knew was when they were hungry and wanted to go to bed. The first morning of school the teacher called the roll and all the pupils were present. The first question she asked was, "Who was the first President of the United States?" So of course they couldn't tell her. She dismissed the class until next day. She told them to ask their parents, perhaps they could tell them. So next morning the teacher called the roll and all the pupils were there again. "Who was the first President of the United States?" she asked again. John Smith said, "Let me tell." "All right," said the teacher. John said, "I asked Pa last night and he said he didn't give a whoop." The people aren't that way any more. They are kicking out the old mossbacks who haven't done anything but sit in an easy chair and eat the insides out of the people's pocketbooks.

Everybody this day and time are somewhat like an old maid colored girl. A friend asked her if she had ever fallen in love. She said, "No, suh, but Ah done fell in the 'ivah' onest." They haven't fell in love, but they have fell into politics. I believe Mr. O'Daniel will make a fine Governor of Texas. We listened to him on the radio for quite a while. Well, I will sign off for this time. Yours till the politicians squeeze out gold nuggets from a 1929 Hoover tomato. JEWELL FAULK.
