Dale Carnegie

A Lifetime Giving— Not Grabbing

Some years ago an oil well was being thudded down in the oil region of the state of Pennsylvania. A tool bit was raised by steam power, then dropped, and this constant chugging pounded a hole in the earth. Suddenly something went wrong. The steel bit was lost in the bottom of the well. The oil men tried for a while to pull it out, then gave up. Said it couldn't be done.

Among the crowd of curiosity onlookers was a young boy who studied the situation and began asking questions. He got a piece of paper, made some drawings, and showed them to the oil men. He said that a barbed grappling iron could be made which would hook into the rope and then the bit could be lifted out. The oil men laughed at the boy; but that didn't daunt him. He believed it could be done and he was insistent. Finally the boss driller said he was willing to try the idea. It was tried. The bit was pulled out.

That boy's name was Chevalier Jackson. Recognize it? He was proud of his achievement. He went away to medical school and, absorbed in his studies, he soon forgot all about the grappling iron he had suggested. He worked his way through college, and went abroad—in the steerage. All this time he kept on studying. And now he is Dr. Chevalier Jackson. Recognize the name?

The day came when he opened an office in Pittsburgh on a very thin shoestring. In fact, he was so poor that he had to sleep on a folding cot behind his office, and he cooked his own meals.

One day a charity case was brought to him. A girl had swallowed a safety pin. The usual procedure was to cut open the throat, take the pin out. And usually this was fatal. As he sat studying the problem, he thought of the oil well. Why not grapple? And that's just what he did. Fortunately, the pin was closed, and he was able to extract it.

Now he had an idea. He set to work on it and invented a device for extracting foreign objects. First it was the esophagoscope; then the bronchoscope. He became a specialist in this; people were brought to him from all over the world, especially children. He soon discovered that the most common object swallowed was the much-used safety-pin; next ordinary straight pins and then needles. Doctor Jackson kept improving his methods of extracting foreign objects, and has a record of saving 3,400 lives.

He did not accomplish all this fine work through love of money, but through his desire to help humanity. This has been a keynote all his life: help people; be of service to human kind. Don't spend a lifetime grabbing; be willing to give. This great principle has made him famous.

Have you ever worked in a store?

It doesn't take long, when you work behind a counter, to find out that when things are advertised they sell better than when they are not.

In other words, advertising means more goods sold and more manufactured.

And that means more jobs in stores and factories.

That's worth keeping in mind—advertising makes jobs.

2,000,000 QUARTS OF PRESTONE ANTI-FREEZE WILL BE WANTED BY MOTORISTS WHO FAIL TO BUY EARLY THIS YEAR

Prestone Anti-Freeze, the finest anti-freeze (does not boil away) on the market, will be hard to get this winter. Prices have not gone up, but there will be less available this year than ever before, due to conditions at the present time.

Anticipating a shortage last February, we ordered our complete stock of Prestone Anti-Freeze in order that we could be sure to serve our customers as always before. As Prestone Anti-Freeze does not boil away, and has proved its worth through many winters, its cost is much lower than cheaper anti-freeze that must be constantly added to.

While we believe that we have enough on hand to fully satisfy our customers, we suggest that you buy early, as it is almost certain that others may not be able to sell Prestone.

Rural Supervisor Calls Attention to Unwise Land Use

Unwise use of land was largely responsible for the conditions of more than a million farm families who were in urgent need of relief during the depths of the depression. The financial status of many of these people was caused by floods, droughts, and other adversities, but all had suffered from the general business decline; however, these were not the sole causes of their difficulties. The great majority were the victims of long neglected soil erosion, carelessness and unscientific farm practices, inadequate acreage, insecure tenure, overburdening debts and a prolonged period of farm prices.

It is now generally recognized that there is an intimate relationship between our system of land tenure and such problems of soil erosion, occupancy of submarginal lands, and progressive impoverishment of the individual and community life.

Tenants with a short-term oral lease have at best a transitory interest in the land they cultivate. They are not penalized for letting the land decline in fertility, nor are they rewarded for any improvements they make. Such people are likely to regard the farm that they cultivate as a resource to be exploited, to the fullest extent, during their occupancy, rather than as homes to be improved and made secure for the future. Unless the farmer has some security on the land, it is difficult, if not impossible, for him to cope with land use problems.

When a farm is rented by a borrower of the Farm Security Administration, the Supervisors help the tenant to secure satisfactory leasing agreements which will give the farmer a sense of security and stability. Security of tenure creates a desire on the part of the tenant to make necessary and timely minor improvements that are attributes of better living and better land use.

Both because of the undesirable effects of insecurity on the tenant and in order to insure the proper working out of the farm plan, the Farm Security Administration encourages written lease agreements for as long a period as practicable for all farmers who receive Rehabilitation loans. This assurance of continued occupancy, with the guidance furnished by the County Supervisors, has thus far served to promote soil conservation and good land use practices among borrowers throughout the country.

In some parts of this area, and particularly in this county, where a live-at-home program and a more diversified type of farming appear to be desirable, the present system of tenancy stands in the way of improvements. Since the advent of diversified farming practices, the old third and fourth rental custom has ceased to serve equitably. This unfair distribution of the farm income has a tendency to shift rental agreements to a cash lease status, and in so doing, principally, because there is a scarcity of good farms, the tenant is required to pay a bonus for the land.

The landlord is justly entitled to a fair return on his investment, and so is the tenant, but as long as the present system is in force, there will always be a disgruntled farming element. Then, from these observations, would it not be in line with the changing agricultural practices to adopt a corresponding rental agreement?

CARL P. EMMETT,
Rural Supervisor.

A MEATLESS DINNER

now and then is relished by the best of men

Dorothy Greig

A MEATLESS dinner does not necessarily mean dining on a nibble of spinach. A meatless meal can be satisfying. And it will be if you replace meat with another high protein food . . . such as eggs, fish or cheese.

Shrimps à la King with curried rice—a main course for a meatless meal

In fact, when such a meal is carefully planned, meat will never be missed, and the members of the family will rise from the table content.

For the main dish in the dinner outlined here we have chosen shrimps because they are meaty and substantial to bite into and because they have lovely flavor. Also, either canned or fresh, shrimps are available to us all.

- Chilled Tomato Juice
- Shrimps à la King with Curried Rice
- Buttered Green Peas
- Cabbage Salad
- Bread and Butter
- Gingerbread and Whipped Cream
- Coffee

Here is the recipe for the shrimp dish. In this, eggs are mixed with the shrimps in a rich, creamy and utterly delicious mushroom sauce.

Shrimps à la King with Curried Rice

- 1 tablespoon butter
 - 1 cup green pepper (cut in strips)
 - 1 can condensed cream of mushroom soup
 - 6 tablespoons milk
 - 1 can (4 3/4 oz.) shrimps
 - 2 eggs, hard-cooked
- Cut the green pepper into strips about 1 inch long and 1/4 inch wide and cook in the melted butter. Then add the cream of mushroom soup and stir well, gradually add the milk and heat. Add the cleaned shrimps and heat in the sauce and just before serving add the sliced hard-cooked eggs.
- Curried Rice
- 2 tablespoons butter
 - 1 teaspoon curry powder
 - 4 cups cooked rice
 - Egg slices for garnish
- Add the curry powder to the melted butter. Then add the cooked rice, heat and mix well. Pack the curried rice in bottom and around sides of casserole dish or serving dish. Fill the center with the Shrimps à la King. Garnish the rice ring with egg slices. Serves 6. Note: Buttered rice may be substituted for curried rice.

Local Feed Store Sponsoring Hog Demonstration

"They're really putting Purina Hog Chow on trial," was the comment of several local citizens who witnessed the weighing of the two pigs, Amos 'n' Andy, in McEver & Sanders Hatchery Friday.

Webb McEver, manager of the business, explained that the two pigs were a Purina demonstration project. Amos, the smaller one, weighed 57 pounds, and Andy, the larger, weighed 64 pounds. The smaller pig is being fed on Purina Hog Chow and corn and the larger pig is fed shorts and corn. Both pigs are from the same litter.

"Shorts and corn is used on many farms because the initial cost of the feed seems to be much smaller than better Purina Hog Chow," said Mr. McEver in an interview Thursday, "but we are giving a demonstration that will show the total cost of feed and price obtained for the pigs upon completion of the project. By then we are sure that local hog raisers will be convinced that Purina Hog Chow is cheaper in the long run."

SCHOOLS OF DEMOCRACY

The opening of schools throughout America, although just taken for granted by most of us, is probably the most important "defense project" undertaken since the schools closed last June.

Thomas Jefferson named the schools and the press as the cornerstones of a working democracy and ever since his time no interference with either has been permitted in this country.

On the first day of school this year, when millions of youngsters will gather together in assembly and repeat the pledge to our flag, it will mean more to this nation than any number of guns or planes could mean.

These young people are going to be the leaders of America when the war is over and they will play the chief role in preserving peace on earth when the nations of the world lay down their arms.

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill recently outlined the kind of a peace the democracies of the world are seeking. To achieve those aims and to make them lasting will be the task of those boys and girls who are now busy learning American history, cheering the football team and singing the national anthem.

TAX ON ADVERTISING

Every once in a while some government theorist gets his name in the papers for questioning the economic soundness of advertising. In some cases groups in Washington have even started investigations of advertising to see if it is a public benefactor or a public enemy.

The proposed tax—part of that $2,500,000,000 tax bill which the senate will vote on soon—calls for a tax on commercial radio programs. If it passes, it simply means that sponsors of radio programs will have to pay more to advertise, thus increasing the cost of distributing their goods.

Those who understand the purpose and importance of advertising point out that advertising is used to reduce the cost of selling and distribution. If it is taxed, it would naturally tend to raise prices to the consumer.

What Does Farming Offer? A well-known Southern agricultural leader, qualified to advise farm boys and girls, speaking of farming as a career, says "I do not present agriculture as an opportunity for people to get rich. In fact, I do not know any other place to tell people to go for riches in money. But I do present farming as an opportunity for young men and women who want to live well, enjoy freedom, be good citizens, and feel reasonably secure against the uncertainties of economic conditions.

By buying Defense Savings Bonds and Stamps regularly you can help the Defense Program and, at the same time, help yourself and your family.

TODAY and TOMORROW

But there are still many who still refuse to believe that public opinion can be measured by the Gallup sampling method.

DANGER . . . representation

Dr. Gallup doesn't know, himself, how much influence his polls may have on the votes of congressmen. But he told me recently that there are some members of congress who think there ought to be a law against such polls.

ENGLAND . . . amazed

"We in England simply can't understand the near defeat of extension of the selective service act by the congress of the United States," wrote a friend of mine from England. "We felt sure," he continued, "that America was about to go into the war with us lock, stock and barrel, but the passage of that law by only one vote would indicate that we have been barking up the wrong tree."

OPINION . . . polls

I was discussing the war situation with a well-known congressman the other day and I mentioned the letter I had received from my friend in England. He turned to his desk and dug out a clipping from a newspaper which he handed to me. It was the latest report on the Gallup poll of public opinion.

BANKS . . . risk

Installation selling was considered risky business by most bankers and the high crash. They realized that this involved an investment in the integrity of the consumer, and they had no figures on which to base the risk in such an investment.

GALLUP . . . accuracy

Dr. George Gallup, head of the American Institute of Public Opinion, broke into the headlines in 1936 when, based on his scientific methods of checking public opinion, he issued an amazingly accurate prediction of the national vote in the presidential election.

HISTORY . . . automobiles

As far back as the Civil war period installment selling was attempted by a few concerns. The Singer Sewing Machine company gave a large part of its success to offering sewing machines to consumers on an installment basis way back in 1856.

CURBS . . . bonds

Curbing installment selling may help to solve more of the government's problems than merely freeing materials for defense needs. The President made a careful analysis of some of the other ways it would help keep our economy in balance, and concluded that it would be helpful in these ways:

INSTALLMENTS . . . 10 billion

To the average Twentieth century American, the high crash isn't thought of as costing $1,000, but as costing $35 a month for two years, plus an old car for down payment.

HE CHOSE AMERICA!

The following story is reproduced from the Fort Dix (N. J.) Reception Center Gazette (N. J.) Reception Center Gazette, a weekly newspaper published by the inmates of the center.

HE CHOSE AMERICA!

Belgium? Private de Koninck thumbed a fresh pinch of tobacco into his pipe.

"Look at these people," he said, pointing out of the train window. "They are the only free people I have ever seen. Freedom with them is a casual birthright. They accept it, as they accept life. It is part of them. It is not a temporary gift. It is a permanent blessing—like their breath. They will love it as long as they live."

"I have seen the people of Europe," said Private de Koninck, whose ancestor, Peter de Koninck, was made a count on the field of valor for an act of bravery at the Battle of Greening in West Flanders in 1802. "They walk in perpetual dread. This is the land of opportunity. It is the last citadel of security. The people of Europe are all of them—have a persecution complex. And not without good reason."

Private de Koninck, who is the Viscount de Koninck, who speaks seven languages and 48 Flemish dialects who was once a soccer expert, who has traveled all over Europe and Asia, who treasures the title private more than he does viscount, is pointing at the intelligence service.

"I know every road—every railroad in the conquered countries of Europe," he said. "I have been to them all. I can speak German and French without an accent."

The draftee in the next seat squinted through the curl of cigarette smoke.

"Your old man must be a big shot," the second draftee said. "My father," said Private de Koninck with a proud sadness, "is a colonel in the Belgian army. He is a prisoner of the Germans. He is with his king as an aide-de-camp. I have not heard from him since then."

Panzers on Wheat Plains of Ukraine?

The German caption does not say so, but the terrain which these tanks are maneuvering could hardly be anywhere else but the great plains of the Russian Ukraine, which are ideal for tank warfare in summer, when the land is baked and firm. Apparently the wheat had been removed from this sector before the arrival of the invader.

Horses Combat Mud on Russian Front

This photo, from a German source, proves that the Nazi forces are not placing full reliance on Panzer units, especially in those places where early rains have turned the roads into a oozy marsh, making the use of tanks impractical. Horses are being used in such cases, as shown above.

Spitzbergen Taken by British

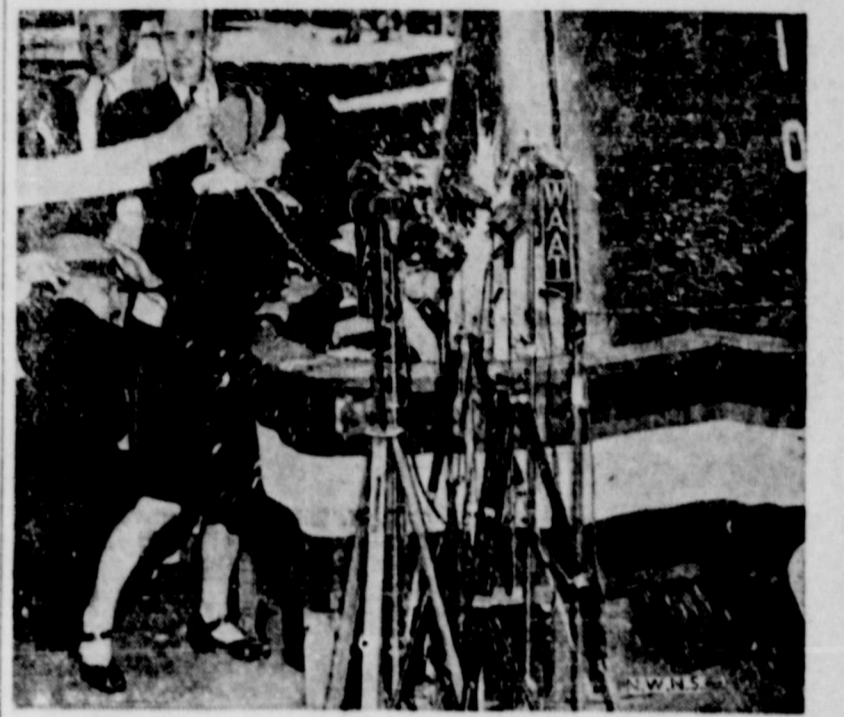

This picture shows one of the leading coal corporations—Norsk Kullutvler—on Norway's arctic island of Spitzbergen. London claims that seaborne British and Norwegian troops attacked the island and rendered the northern archipelago's valuable coal mines unfit for German use. Native mine workers and families were brought to England.

Local Draft Board Receives Information On Selective Service

The Hamilton County Local Draft Board is now in receipt of information for candidates for appointment as midshipmen, U. S. Naval Reserve and information regarding United States Naval Reserve Aviation Training. Those interested in obtaining this information can receive same upon request at the local board office.

The Local Board also calls attention to the following news release from State Headquarters of Selective Service:

Urging the patriotic cooperation of every employer in Texas to see that every returning soldier has a job when he gets home, General J. Watt Page, State Selective Service Director, September 3, 1941 announced the inauguration of a carefully studied and organized reemployment program which will function through the local boards of the system.

Many of those returning soldiers must be cared for in this respect beginning this month when the first selectees, National Guardsmen and others to be relieved from active duty by the Army will be released.

The reemployment program calls for the appointment of a Reemployment Committeeman affiliated with each local board, the director explained. This committeeman will act as liaison agent between returning soldiers and employers.

The function of the local board Reemployment Committeeman will be to get in touch with the former employer prior to the return of a soldier to see if his former job is still available, to transmit the record of returning soldiers who have no jobs awaiting them to the nearest State Employment Service, and to act as liaison agent for the soldiers in placing him in contact with available jobs.

In cases where the State Employment Service is unable to find a job for a returning soldier, the local board Reemployment Committeeman must look for local employment opportunities. For this purpose he should obtain the cooperation of local chambers of commerce and boards of trade, Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Exchange and Optimist Clubs and like groups, labor unions, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and similar organizations.

The War Department is cooperating with the Selective Service System in carrying out the obligation of the Government to obtain civilian jobs for returning soldiers. In every camp it is gathering the occupational and educational history of the soldiers together with all data concerning the military career of each that is pertinent to civilian employment. This data will be distributed to local board Reemployment Committeemen by National Selective Service Headquarters, through State Headquarters.

The Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 provides that a man inducted into military service shall be given a certificate of satisfactory service if he completes training to the satisfaction of the Army. The Act then specifies that:

"In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within 40 days, after he is relieved from such training and service—

"(A) If such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such persons shall be restored to such positions or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

"(B) If such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"(C) If such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status and pay."

The Act also provides that persons restored to their jobs shall not lose seniority and shall be considered as having been on leave or furlough. It further stipulates that "persons so restored shall not be discharged from such positions without cause within one year after such restoration."

To make use of the facilities being provided to aid in his reemployment, the soldier has only to fill out the information requested on forms being distributed by the Army, and to get in touch with the Reemployment Committeeman attached to his local board if he is a registrant, or the local board nearest his home if he is not, as soon as he returns.

General Page stated that a Reemployment Committeeman for each of Texas' 351 local boards would be appointed by Governor Coke Stevenson within the next few days.

Hard-rock miners of northern Ontario, working diligently for defense, set another gold production record

By MARTIN L. PETRY

PART of the Canadian all-out war effort embraces increased activities in her gold mines and again during the month of April the Ontario mines established a new record for daily average production and value. According to figures just made available, total value of bullion shipped amounted to $10,443,488 against $10,455,128 during the thirty-one days of March and $9,863,301 for April of last year.

The average daily return for the Ontario gold mines in April was $348,953 from 9,027 ounces of gold and 1,344 ounces of silver. The previous high in daily average production was established in November, 1940, when the industry milled 22,892 tons of ore for $347,305 from 9,094 ounces of gold and 1,501 ounces of silver.

Few Americans seem to be familiar with the extensive mining activities for all kinds of precious metals in Canada despite the fact that a good percentage of the original money to develop these properties was sent by speculators and investors from the United States. Today these mines are a very important factor in the general defense program for they are not only supplying additional gold but other war metals such as barite, kaolin, silica, copper, lead, zinc, cobalt, manganese, asbestos, tungsten and others. It is estimated that eleven new mines, eight of them gold properties, will start operations within the year and several of them within a few months.

Since Canada went into the war the number of new properties developed has dropped sharply and at the same time the number of failures has been proportionately less. Back in 1936 there was tremendous activity in Northern Ontario but in those days money for speculative purposes was available everywhere on this continent and the people of the United States provided millions for prospecting and the mining markets in Canada soared with intangible possibilities. Many mines came through, however, but today, because of the war, the general public is responsible for only a small percentage of the capital for the larger mining companies are staking part of their reserves in seeking new "finds" and are in a position to carry through any program from the stage of prospecting to actual production without additional finances.

The cobalt, gold and silver mines in northern Ontario, with their prolific output, have been responsible for the industrial expansion in that beautiful and scenic part of the Province that was known, not so many years ago, as the bush and visited only by sportsmen who revelled in hunting and fishing. The country is so extensive that the progress of industry has failed to interfere with the sportsmen and, in fact, has become a source of convenience for numerous towns and cities have sprung up so as to provide better facilities for him to reach his favorite hunting and fishing spot.

The mining area affords an immense amount of interest to the sightseer and some of the mines will permit visitors within the gates to see the work conducted on the surface. Although it is generally felt that this district is on the borders of civilization so far north that the trip would be hazardous, the contrary is true. There are excellent roads and splendid facilities in towns with a streamlined modernity that is actually astonishing. Kirkland Lake, Timmins, Sudbury and Cobalt are only short distances from North Bay which has been visited by millions of Americans during the last few years on their way to see the Dionne Quintuplets at Caillander.

The Ontario mining fraternity has done a noble job in this war. The mines are operating day and night with ever-increasing output, the companies and workers have contributed handsomely to the government exchequer and many specialists and hard-rock miners have enlisted in the Royal Canadian Engineers, some of whom are reported engaged in an important job in Scotland. These sappers are from the Canadian Corps Company, commanded by Major Colin Campbell, former Ontario Minister of Public Works. This company also contributed the first detachment of R.C.E. men for fortification work at Gibraltar.

SUCCESSFUL PARENTHOOD

CHILD ADJUSTMENT PROBLEMS VARY

If all children had the same trouble in adjusting themselves to school and other social experiences there would be much less distress for the sensitive, or sometimes physically under-par child, who is made unhappy by the necessity for getting along with those his own age. But it is true that many children seem to skip blithely into every new experience, while those who can't take things lightly, observing their untroubled companions, realize that they are somehow different, and perhaps not quite so likeable. Then either they crawl into themselves to attract as little attention as possible, or they cover up their feeling of not belonging by boasting, hitting, grabbing or pretending to be better than everyone else.

For instance, suppose your son isn't popular with other boys because he can't run as fast or climb as fearlessly as they. Years later he may surpass them all through mental attainments or skill in making things with his hands. But just now he'd be willing to trade a bright future, even if he could believe in it, for being chosen by the popular boys as a member of their sandlot baseball team.

Now you shouldn't buy him a place on the team, as many fathers have tried to do, with baseball suits for the gang or mountains of ice cream treats. But you can create opportunities for your son to show off his own special gifts, without of course his being aware of your design. You can invite the boys to your home (plenty of food is legitimate bait for this) and let Junior dazzle them with his card tricks. Or he can turn the gang loose in his basement workshop. Especially if it's one he shares with Dad it will attract the interest of many a small guest whose own father won't allow him to touch his tools. These visits may not make your son a leader, and certainly they won't change his muscles into rivaling those of the team captain, but he's bound to find a congenial boy or two who will share his interest in radio, books, card games or whatever he is particularly good at.

You mustn't stop, however, with smoothing the way with your son's schoolmates. Next year he may have an entirely new crowd to face and eventually he will have to learn to "take it." I've seen many a spindly little chap become the best liked boy in a crowd because of his fine sportsmanship, unselfishness, and casual good humor.

In addition, you will have to build up in the boy who is uncertain of his own worth knowledge of the fact that all of us have different contributions to make to life, and that if we put the proper value on our own gifts—neither too great nor too small—a one—others will accept us on that basis. Instead of worrying and fretting to be like everybody else we should learn early to be happy with our own powers and to make the most of them.
