The Case measure was opposed by the Administration, but Republicans and Southern Democrats teamed up to pass it, 258 to 155, on February 7. A toned-down version is pending in the Senate. All Democrats Invited

Rep. Gossett (D-Texas) told a reporter all Democrats who voted for the legislation were invited to the special session, and added:

"It was very startling to the large number of us who voted for the bill to find ourselves castigated by an official party publication. We want to find out what prompted this unusual statement and who is responsible.

here is that these developments, even though they may include a message from Russia replying to Security Council inquiries about Iran, probably will not break the but merely advance it to a crisis new stage.

This is based on the belief, privately expressed by these authorities, that Iran's demand upon the council very likely will not be sub-stantially changed by Premier Ah-med Qavam in his reply to the same inquiries. Qavam Monday sent Secretary General Trygve Lie a note reaffirming the position of Ambas-sador Hussein Ala as his fully authorized spokesman here. Ala Insists On Council Action

Ala has been insistent on keeping the Iranian case actively before the council. If Qavam now planned to agree to have the case shelved or lelayed pending withdrawal of Russian troops and further direct negotiations with Moscow diplomatic authorities doubted the premier would have been at such pains to endorse Ala.

Food—Too Little And Too Late

It is not likely that any active politician would have lared propose, as did Herbert H. Lehman, retiring director general of UNRRA, that compulsory rationing be reimposed in this country to help feed Europe's hungry people. It is less likely that the proposal will be acted upon.

If it were, there would probably be an unbecoming storm of protest not pleasant to witness. That is not a flattering thing to say about the American people. Perhaps it is unfair. Yet a quick glance about reveals an uncomfortably ample supply of support for that statement.

As a people we seem to have learned little from the war. We have made an earnest and deliberate effort to forget it as quickly as possible. That is a natural reaction, but in the light of our moral and political obliga-tions, it is neither very humane nor very wise.

We suffered little during the war, compared with Oil Production Losses the people who were our allies. Since the war ended we have not been entirely unmindful of this or ungenerous toward them. But our help has been far short of sacrifice.

In a broadcast on the eve of his departure for Europe, Herbert Hoover asked each American family to imagine that one of the helpless and hungry women or crude oil production in the week meat for home consumption may children of Europe was an invisible guest at its table, and to put aside enough to feed that guest as the family natuurally would feed a neighbor who was helpless and hungry.

That was a difficult request. Most of us instinctively help a neighbor in time of trouble. But, remote as we are Louisiana 1,400 to 377,200, the Eastfrom the physical evidence of Europe's anguish, it requires ern area 1,350 to 65,100 and Coloa real effort to realize and to admit its existence and to do something about it.

That may be one reason why Lehman says that voluntary measures are not enough, and that once food has moved into civilian consumption channels, it is too late to declined 1,280 to 144,900. recapture it for shipment abroad.

It would be one of our nation's produest evidences of charity and kindliness if we were to submit once again to the mild self-denial of rationing, in the knowledge that we should thereby be saving human lives and health. But who can say that the re-establishment of rationing would hand in 175 A. D. not bring a return of grumbling and of black marketing in an aggravated form?

It also would probably raise a question of some legitimacy: How sure could we be, if rationing returned, that UNRRA would do its part of the job with a zeal untainted by jealousy and politics? And how sure could we be that the answer would be accurate? * * * THE REPORTER-TELEGRAM, MIDLAND, TEXAS

The operation of UNRRA is vast and complicated. There have been cloudy and confusing claims of inefficiency and bad faith-some malicious, others arising from honest doubt. There have been cloudy and conflicting replies.

Thus the sad story ends with the sad moral that, in spite of long and elaborate preparation, help can still be too little and too late. And for all the noble and selfish effort being put forth, it appears that some of the neigh-bors in this shrinking world will eat immoderately well while others starve.

Placards At 20 Paces

Our anger is admittedly illogical, but nothing in the whole squabble between the OPA and the National Association of Manufacturers has irked us more than the way each side has presented its case.

First we see pictures of OPA's Chester Bowles appearing before a congressional committee with a whole pile of graphs, charts, pictures, and texts which help to explain what he already is explaining orally.

Then we see a picture of NAM's Robert R. Wason with his whole speech printed in large letters on big placards set up on an easel. He recites his speech to the committee and lets them see the placards also. This practice implies an even greater contempt for a congressman's intelligence than is customary. Furthermore, it wastes the time of the congressmen, as well as that of the sign-painters and graph-makers.

Finally, after all the speeches and charts and placards, where's the butter-and shirts, shorts, suits, and nylons
