A Way Toward Understanding

A calm and intelligent report by the CIO delegation which visited Russia last October made a welcome appearance the other day, at a time when official Russian-American relations were alarmingly strained. The CIO officials avoided both adulation and sharp criticism and stuck pretty close to a factual report of what had been seen through American eyes. And the Soviet government seems to have shown and told the visitors more than its custom.

Toward the end of the report, the authors departed from a description of their tour to make some recommendations. Chief among these was a proposal that there should be a larger interchange of people, particularly workers, between Russia and the United States.

The need of mutual understanding is obvious, and thus the suggestion is not new. But it seems to us that this need could not have been restated by a better group than the CIO.

It has been stated recently that there are only 125 American citizens in the whole USSR. A few of them are newspapermen, a few more are engineers, and the rest are in government service. The less than 1500 Soviet citizens in this country include government officials and employes, military men, and wives and children. Both countries are closed, by Russia's order, to what Russia would call the "masses" of the other.

In addition to the physical barriers there are, of course, barriers of information. The official Russian definition of news is not information but "education," which consists of giving the people what the government thinks they should hear—complete with predigested opinion. At the same time Russia does not permit foreign correspondents to stray very far from Moscow, or to send out any dispatches critical of Russia's policy or way of life.

Hence the ordinary citizens of the world's two most powerful nations remain in almost total ignorance of each other. Americans have somewhat the best of it. But, from what little one can learn, the Russian John Doe has a distorted picture of an America filled with fat employes and landlords and millions of exploited, starving workers.

To permit an interchange of workers, students and just ordinary tourists between the two countries would not solve all the potential difficulties. In fact, there is little likelihood that these ordinary people will ever have the chance to understand each other unless the Russian philosophy of government changes radically.

Yet it is permissible to hope that this chance may somehow come about. And it is perfectly proper to believe that Russian leaders are more likely to listen to requests for this chance from the CIO than from any other responsible and representative American organization.

Average Day Of Crime

Every 20 seconds last year, somebody in the United States committed a crime, and for that reason FBI's report on U. S. crime for 1945 makes some of the blackest reading on record.

The average day of crime in the United States adds up to 12 accidental killings, 18 murders, 31 rapes, and 163 aggravated assaults. These are the crimes against persons.

In crimes against property, the score card for an average day shows 149 robberies, 662 cars stolen, 881 places burglarized and 2371 other thefts.

The average of the year's 298,000 reported thefts yielded the criminal a $54 haul. The 129,000 burglaries averaged $118 worth of loot, the 22,000 robberies netted the stick-up man $146. There were 241,491 cars stolen—662 a day, 27.6 an hour, right around the clock. But a little over two-thirds of the stolen property was recovered by the police.

In reports from nearly 300 cities of more than 25,000 population, the total value of property stolen is put at $88,000,000. This is a 27 per cent increase over last year and a nice commentary on the nation's increased prosperity.

Counter-Irritant

We should like to suggest a temporary solution of the nylon shortage. Simply start a rumor of a severe scarcity in leg make-up, sometimes referred to as the liquid stocking.

Women shoppers, who seek a scarce item, would simply transfer their queue to another counter, and the nylon supply would accumulate normally.

Hitler's Secretary Reported Arrested

FRANKFURT (AP)—The American-controlled Dana News Agency reported Monday that Frau Marie-Thekla Weichelt, whom it described as Adolf Hitler's private secretary, had been arrested in Wuerzburg.

Frau Weichelt frequently helped the fuhrer draft his speeches, the agency said.
Dana said that Frau Weichelt was believed by the American Counter-Intelligence Corps to have been close to Hitler "until the surrender," although she said she had been the Nazi leader's secretary only between 1934 and 1938.
She was arrested last Wednesday in Uettingen, near Wuerzburg, by local American investigators and was turned over to the Counter-Intelligence Corps, Dana said. She was said to have disguised her appearance and was living with her parents in seclusion.

Increase In Winkler License Sales Noted

KERMIT—More than a 30 per cent increase this year in passenger car registrations in Winkler is announced by the tax assessor-collector office. Passenger car registrations last year on April 1 were slightly less than 1,500. Three hundred more license plates were ordered this year and the entire supply was exhausted before April 1. Estimates are that approximately 2,000 cars will be registered by mid-April.

While the number of truck registrations was not available, estimates are the percentage increase in the numbers of this type of vehicle is greater than for passenger cars.

LANOLIN CREAM IS GOOD BEAUTY AID FOR FEVER-DRY SKIN

By ALICIA HART
When you're ill and run a temperature, one of the best beauty aids you can use is a lanolin-base cream. Fever has a rapid dehydrating effect upon the skin, which will leave it parched and sometimes wrinkled, unless you take the precaution.

In using your cream, spread it on face and neck, like butter on bread. Leave it on as long as possible to allow the skin to drink in what it will. Lanolin, which does the trick of softening, is a fatty substance which lends itself to absorption by the skin.

If there is no fever, your need for buttering up your skin is not nearly so imperative. But the same treatment is beneficial to normally dry skins.

Where fever floods a face with oil, it is important to use soap and water frequently. Neglect of this can cause pores to clog and a crust to form. In cases of extreme oiliness, a doctor suggests using tincture of green soap, when you scrub.

Model Mothers Reveal Useful Figure Secrets

By ALICIA HART
NEA Staff Writer
The girl who blames her thickening figure on her baby is being almost wickedly unfair to Junior. Neither should he be blamed if his young mother's skin or hair is less pretty than it used to be.

Who do you suppose knocks the pins out from under these all-but-Glamorous models. Dozens of New York's top-notchers are mothers. They dump glittering duds—size 12's—into hat boxes after photographic assignments are over, and tie home to their babies. Many teach their toddling tykes the art of modeling, and go out on appointments as mother-and-daughter teams.

Asked how they do it, modelman

Slim and trim, Kirsti Vickers, New York model, instructs her daughter, Penny, in essential beauty care.

Harry Conover, head of the famous "Cover Girl" agency, says: "The secret is common knowledge. Girls follow the rules on diet and exercise laid down by their doctors."

Exercise Important

The reason you need exercise, as Conover or any of his mother-models will tell you, is because lack of it invites fat to flabby muscles. When a model's child is no older than two months, the mother hauls out her mat, with the o. k. of her doctor, and goes at some business-like exercises. Their purpose is to speed tissues, muscles and bones back to normal, both from a health and a good-looks point of view.

As a rule, the extra activity is sufficient to burn up any surplus pounds you gain. If it isn't, map out a slightly restrictive diet for yourself, as models do. Taking fewer calories than your energy uses forces the body to draw on stored-up fat.

Skin care is something you can't neglect at any time, Conover says,

Vets Dominate Permian Village

More than one-half of the renters at the Permian Village federal housing project on the Andrews Highway are veterans, Mrs. Nell Lordan, manager, reported Monday. The percentage of veterans living at the project is steadily increasing, she said.

The project, started last June, has 100 trailer houses, each containing a kitchen and two bedrooms. Military and civilian personnel at the Midland Army Air Field and ex-servicemen are eligible for housing in the area.

Of the 96 units now rented, 53 are inhabited by veterans, Mrs. Lordan said. The others are occupied by 26 service men and 17 civilian employees and their families. Four of the units are not now in operation, three having been damaged by recent windstorms and one destroyed by fire.

XXXI
ANN froze up inside, and with an effort brought her attention back to Millicent, who was still talking.

"You must have taught him that, Ann, and made your own contribution to American literature. It'll be a best seller, I'm sure."
Ann wondered what it was she had taught him, and then she heard his voice. "Hi Milly—your car's at the gate. The mechanic said it was just a— Oh, hullo, Ann. I didn't know you were back."

Millicent put her hat back on—at the proper angle, Ann noted, with detached admiration. She always had to have a mirror to do that. Then she stood up and said, "If my car's ready, I must run along. Thanks, Colin. Good-by, Ann. It's been nice knowing you." She walked briskly down the path.

When she was out of sight, Colin turned to Ann and said, "Oh, Ann-girl, how I've missed you!" He swept her into his arms and kissed her suddenly averted cheek. Then he stood back to look at her. "What's wrong, my dear? You aren't ill, are you?"
"No, I'm all right," Ann said, and thought detachedly that even her voice sounded frozen. All her anticipated pleasure at seeing Colin had evaporated, and her delighted joy in just being alive seemed to have turned to dust and ashes.

Only once did she speak on the way back to the house. "When is your book coming out, Colin?"
"In October sometime."

"You always get your copies before they go on sale, don't you?"
"Hi! Oh, sure!"
Colin made no explanation of Millicent's presence in Port Drake, and Ann would have died rather than question him. For the first time she knew jealousy, bitter and burning. She never had been jealous of Nina, somehow, Nina simply hadn't existed—she had been something ethereal and unreal until the wedding. Then she had been Jock's wife, and one simply wasn't jealous of a man's wife. But it seemed that one could be jealous of a man's former wife.

COLIN threw his book across the room, and poured himself a drink. Ann had gone to bed. Ann had gone to bed and hadn't kissed him good night. Hell! What was wrong with Ann? It couldn't be Millicent—she had known about Millicent before, and had taken her existence with equanimity. It was too bad that he couldn't explain Millicent's presence in Port Drake to Ann, but he had been brought there to exert a little blackmail on Ann's behalf. She had done it rather well, too. Beulah had capitulated neatly, and probably could be counted on to be Ann's champion in the future. Colin was glad that he had remembered that Millicent had something on Beulah. He didn't know what it was, but it was apparently potent. What could have upset Ann so?

He lay sleepless for a long while, listening to Ann's regular breathing. Finally he dropped off into a doze, to be roused by a low moan from Ann's bed. In a moment he was awake, half out of bed, to find Ann fumbling with the light. He reached out and turned it on. "What is it, Ann? What's wrong?"

Ann stared at him, her eyes wide and dark in a face white as paper. "Something has happened to Jock—I have to go to him!" She was out of bed, and hurrying toward her clothes.

Colin sprang up, and caught her as she swayed. Her body was cold, and she pushed him away. "I have to go to him—something dreadful has happened—oh, Colin, I'm frightened!" she wailed.

"Ann, Ann—be reasonable. Nothing has happened to Jock. You've had a nightmare. Get into bed, child—you'll be ill."
"I must go—it wasn't a dream. I tell you, something awful has happened—I must go to him!" She was fumbling with her clothes, dogged determination on her face, but her hands were trembling.
"Ann—listen. I'll phone Jock. He'll probably want my scalp for getting him up at this time of night, but I'll phone him to prove to you he's all right. Then will you go back to bed?"
"Phone him," she said.

COLIN cursed himself for a fool as he put in the call. Nina's voice answered almost immediately. "Yes?"
"Nina—sorry to disturb you—this is Colin. How is Jock?" Even as he said it, he realized how silly it sounded.

"He'll live. I just got in from the hospital," Nina said wearily. Then, in sudden comprehension, "What do you know about it?"
"About what? Sorry, Nina. I'm being stupid. What is wrong with Jock?"

"He was in an automobile accident. He had been drinking. There was a girl with him. She's dead." Nina's voice was toneless, repeating facts for Colin's enlightenment.

"I'm sorry, Nina. Is there anything I can do?"
"You might drive in tomorrow." "Do you want me tonight?"
"No, I'll take a sedative and get some sleep. Good night, Colin."

He turned from the phone to Ann. "Jock will be all right. He was hurt in an auto accident. I'll take you in to see him tomorrow," he said soothingly. "Now will you go to bed, Ann?"

She seemed a little dazed. "Now I'll go to bed," she said docilely. Colin brought a glass of water and two small white tablets to Ann, and she took them ungrudgingly. "Stay here, Colin," she said, reaching out her hand.

He turned out the light and sat there, holding her hand. Soon she slept, but there was no more sleep for him that night.

tournament, but with all of her duties, she found time to execute a fine end-play on today's hand.
Mrs. Bayliss (East) ruffed the opening club lead and South's ace of trumps won the second trick. Another club was led, Mrs. Bayliss ruffed again, and after drawing the last adverse trump, she ran her four hearts, discarding a small spade from dummy on the last one.
A trump was led to dummy's ten and a small spade led from dummy. When North played low, Mrs. Bayliss put up the nine-spot. South won with the ten, but could do no more than lead away from his king of spades, which was marked in his hand by his opening bid and North's pass. South's only alternative was to give declarer a sluff and a ruff.

ATLANTIC CITY—(AP)—Bradley Dewey, former rubber director, Monday criticized some scientists who, he said, in the discussions of atomic energy, have created "the impression that they have all the answers, even in the field of politics".

President of the American Chemical Society, Colonel Dewey, declared in an address prepared for delivery at the opening of the society's 109th meeting: "We need to maintain our equilibrium as scientists and professional men amidst the babel of voices which has been mounting in volume since the atomic bombs went off.

"To a certain extent scientists have added to this confusion of tongues and some have succeeded in creating the impression that they have all the answers, even in the field of politics, national and international.

"In so doing some have forgotten that national leadership is only won by long, self-sacrificing public service."

Technical sessions of the meeting, for which an attendance of 10,000 chemists, chemical engineers and industrialists is scheduled will begin Tuesday.

Dewey offered no further amplification of his criticism, but he declared: "What is needed now is calmness—calmness to evaluate the mean-

NEW CIRCUITS ARE ON THE WAY

● A new coast-to-coast "coaxial" cable now being laid underground across the Southern route, in addition to providing new paths for radio broadcasts and television, will carry more long distance calls than the four other transcontinental telephone lines put together. It will have a capacity of 1,920 circuits.

This cable is part of the Bell System postwar construction program which aims at achieving prewar speed of long distance service.

The cable train is now in the vicinity of Dallas, Texas. The Shreveport-Dallas section of the cable will be placed in service this summer.
