Pacific Islands' Government

Efforts to arrive at a decision on how the several hundred populated and liberated islands of the Pacific are to be governed are getting nowhere fast.

The islands are now administered by the Office of Island Government in the Navy Department, Capt. W. F. Jennings commanding. Under Captain Jennings are some 300 naval government officers and 500 enlisted men. The Navy hopes to reduce this number by more than half. The U.S. Commercial Company-an RFC subsidiary -is trying to nurse the islands back to economic health, but it's a slow process.

Since shortly after the end of the war, the Navy has been making statements as to which of the liberated islands it wants for permanent bases. Kwajalein, Eniwetok, Majuro, Saipan, Tinian, Manus, and Palau are on the list, plus, of course, the old bases at Samoa, Midway, and Guam. The Navy's wartime investments in these bases run close to a billion dollars. They range from $5,000,000 on Majuro to $275,000,000 on Guam. The Navy is now in the process of turning over to the Army control of the Ryukyus. Okinawa and the Bonins are already under General MacArthur. But, aside from these, the War Department refuses to give any indication as to what bases it considers necessary for ground and air security in the Western Pacific.

The veto power which the Big Five wield in the United Nations must go, says Senator Joseph H. Ball, "if we are to control effectively the threat of a third world war fought with atomic weapons." The senator is obviously right. Let us hope that suf- Puckett & French
