stood like prairie dogs near their storm-celler burrows Friday afternoon while others jumped into their cars and streamed westward. Reason for the panic: a three-colored tornadic cloud was rumbling toward Dimmitt and tornado warnings had been issued for this area.

Eight thousand eyes strained through low white clouds to search the yellow and black mass for a telltale funnel.

To the west was a clear, blue sky. Overhead were fleecy, white cumulus clouds. But to the south the blackness of the turbulent cloud was broken only by angry bursts of violent

After nearly an hour of tense waiting, however, the US Weather Bureau's radar confirmed what Castro Countians wanted to believe: the cloud was veering eastward. It would miss Dimmitt, the weather bureau reported, but Hart people should continue to watch it.

Parents streamed into local schools, where their children had been crowded into the hallways. According to several Dimmitt teachers, parents caused more confusion than did the children. Traffic was snarled in school areas for almost an hour.

Many "panie" incidents can become humorous during the calm relief after danger is past. Thus it was here. For

One man reportedly packed a suitcase hurriedly with various articles of clothing, ran to the storm cellar, then had to go back to his house for his wife and child.

A woman rauxed on a bed after the tornado warning was lifted, and was beginning to fall asleep when a jet plane passed very low overhead, causing a whistling roar. The lady was in her front yard, barefooted and shaking, when she fully awakened.

One family had to choose between driving from a tornado or fighting a snake in their storm cellar. They chose the car because they could at least see the tornado-they
