Hard work pays off — just ask the Big Spring High School choir.

Months of extra practice paid off for the choir this past weekend when eight members — M'Kalee Morgan, Shelby Crews, Diamond Mayes, Jason Golleher, Baylee Howell, Toby Schubert, Andrea Cervantez and Aron Rios — qualified for the Texas Music Educators' Association all-region choir.

"It was very exciting to make the all-region choir," Mayes said. "There were a lot of the people from a lot of other schools trying out for the choir, but we were confident we'd do

Early voting steady

By THOMAS JENKINS

Staff Writer

Early voting in this year's general election has been brisk so far, according to officials with the Howard County Elections Administration, as the number of ballots cast continue to pile up.

According to Sandra Bloom, county elections administrator, her office has already received more than 1,100 ballots since early voting opened Monday morning.

"When we opened early voting Monday, we had 299 mail-in ballots to add, and we had 238 ballots cast here at the election office," Bloom said. "That's a pretty good start for early voting in an election like this. Tuesday we received another 22 mail-in ballots, with 269 ballots cast in-person. Wednesday was our biggest day yet, with 13 mail-in

Throwdown postponed

Herald Staff Report

This weekend's planned Ultimate Chili and Dessert Throwdown has been postponed, officials announced today.

The event, organized by city employees to raise money for the United Way of Big Spring, was postponed because of a lack of entries.

The Throwdown had been scheduled for Saturday morning in Heart of the City Park.

The event will be held at a future date yet to be determined.

Symphony set for new season; dinner tonight, show Saturday

By BILL McCLELLAN

News Editor

If Home is Where the Heart Is, then the Big Spring Symphony Orchestra wants your home to be the country club tonight and First Baptist Church on Saturday.

Tonight is the kickoff dinner for the symphony's 2010-2011 season. Officially, it's the Big Spring Symphony Association's annual meeting and dinner, which begins at 6 p.m. at the Big Spring Country Club. It's not too late to RSVP by calling (214) 256-1674. Ticket packages will be available for the season, which has been named Home is Where the Heart Is.

"We will have a New Orleans style dinner and a Dixieland band, so it should be a lot of fun," said Dr. Keith Graumann, Graumann symphony conductor.

Tickets are $20 per person for those who want to take part in the meal; otherwise, admission is free.

The first concert of the season, "Fall Travels: Overtures from Around the World," will be held at 8 p.m. Saturday at the First Baptist Church and will feature guest conductor John Giordano.

Graumann

Giordano

"We're very fortunate to have Maestro Giordano conduct our first concert again this year. It is always a pleasure working with him," said Graumann.

Selections will include Wagner's "Mastersinger Prelude," Rossini's "Barber of Seville," Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" and Moncayo's "Huangpango."

"Lots of the music is popular on television and radio

NY beats Rangers, close to 3-2 in ALCS

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas has two more chances to reach the World Series for the first time.

First, Colby Lewis gets a chance to win the pennant. If he can't finish the job, Cliff Lee would face the New York Yankees in Game 7.

"There's no frustration or feeling like we didn't accomplish what we wanted to do," Rangers third baseman Michael Young said after Wednesday's 7-2 loss in Game 5. "We'll just go home and try to finish it off."

Nick Swisher and Robinson Cano hit consecutive homers to build an early cushion, and CC Sabathia made the lead stand up as the Yankees closed to 3-2 in the AL championship series.

"We're right where we need to be," Swisher said.

A late-arriving crowd for the late-inning game wondered whether this would be it for the defending World Series champs after Texas outscored them 25-5 while winning three straight.

A difficult comeback? Yes.

Impossible? No.

Yankees manager Joe Girardi addressed his players early Wednesday after Game 4.

"Before we lost the three games in a row, we won four in a row," he told them.

By the time Curtis Granderson hit an eighth-inning homer for his second RBI of the game, belief among the Yankees was starting to grow.

Now the teams will go deep in the heart of Texas to decide the pennant in the best-of-seven series. When they resume in Arlington for Game 6, Phil Hughes starts for the Yankees against Lewis in a rematch of Game 2, won by the Rangers 7-2.

"It's great. We're going back home," Lewis said. "We've got to win one out of two."

Texas may be holding the ultimate postseason ace in the hole: Lee would be opposed by 19-game post-

Playoff Bound?

Coahoma running back Dakota Griffith scores a touchdown in the Bulldogs' game against Forsan last week. They have a chance to lock up a playoff spot with a win at Anson Friday.

Playoff spot at stake for Coahoma at Anson

BY ADAM COLEMAN

Sports Editor

COAHOMA — Everything Coahoma head coach Trey Gardner has been preaching, everything the Bulldogs have done this season has led up to Friday night at Anson — a chance to clinch a playoff berth.

Games like this have to carry some extra weight, but Gardner believes this game is as big as the last three. After all, the Bulldogs wouldn't be in this position without those wins.

"We know it's a big game for us," Gardner said. "We can guarantee that we'll have a spot. We've kind of felt like the last few games have been big. We kind of approached everything as a must-win."

After going 5-5 the last two seasons, Coahoma will have a chance to start the Gardner era on the right foot with a playoff berth if the Bulldogs can get past Austin Baccus and Anson.

The key for Gardner is not allowing his team to get too excited. Coahoma still has to win the game to lock up the playoff spot and Gardner continuously reminds his players of that.

But the players are aware of the opportunity at hand Friday.

"We've talked about it a little bit," Gardner said. "They pretty much understand where we're at and what's on the line, where we're at in the season and what we've got to do."

Anson may not be an easy opponent to roll through, even though the Bulldogs have seemed unstoppable the last few weeks.

Bufs try to bounce back against Idalou

BY ADAM COLEMAN

Sports Editor

FORSAN — There's no question Forsan is eager to get back on the field after last week's 56-0 debacle at Coahoma.

"I think so," head coach Jason Phillips said. "I think they were disappointed with last Friday. We all were. Nobody did their job, coaches, players, we all kind of let up. For the first quarter, we played really, really well. ... Then, we just kind of fell apart."

The Buffaloes are ready to get that behind them, but they'll have to do it against Idalou at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Forsan.

After reviewing film this week, Phillips said the Bufs were encouraged by their play in the first quarter. The game wasn't out of hand the whole time at Coahoma. But once the Bulldogs got a grip on the lead, Phillips said his team just fell apart in all phases of the game.

As the regular season comes to a close, the Bufs have been up and down week-to-week. The 9-6 loss at Post was frustrating, the 35-34 win at home against Anson was thrilling and the loss at Coahoma was disappointing. This game against Idalou is another chance to make a statement, Phillips said.

Forsan receiver Kolten Self makes a catch in one of the Bufs' game earlier this season. They face Idalou at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Forsan.

It's not easy to beat the Wildcats, however. Before the season coaches tabbed Idalou as the favorite in the newly formed District 2-2A Division II and Phillips said there's a reason for that.

"They've got a good tradition up there and year in and year out they have a good football program," he said.

"They're probably the district favorites for a good reason. It should be a tough football game."

The Wildcats haven't tripped up yet in district play, beating Stanton, Hawley and Post and allowing only six points through those three games.

The Buffaloes' potent offensive attack might pose a threat to the Wildcats, however, with running backs Brendan Roman and Ty Johnson. The two have done well so far this season. Roman has 77 carries for 477 yards and seven touchdowns and Johnson has 50 carries for 458 yards and five scores.

Getting Idalou at home might help. The Bufs are 3-0 at home.

Phillips pointed how

The Tigers have Baccus at quarterback, who helps make the offense go. But it's not just Baccus Gardner is worried about. Anson tailback Jack Moffett could be one of the better running backs the Bulldogs see all year, in Gardner's opinion.

Gardner also said the Tigers' record in district play doesn't accurately reflect them. This team is two or three plays away from being 3-0 instead of 1-2.

The Bulldogs have been reminded they can't take Anson likely because of the district record.

But maybe it's a bad time to play Coahoma. The Bulldogs are on a three-game winning streak after the loss at Stanton and the margin of victory in those wins hasn't been close. They beat Hawley by 32, Post by 27 and last week they beat Forsan 56-0.

The Bulldogs may be playing their best football at one of the most crucial parts of the season.

"You take about the first six minutes out of Friday night's game, it's one of the better games we've played," Gardner said. "We talked to our kids about that the other day. We had very few penalties, it was the first game we've had no turnovers. Defense played tremendously. That was about as clean a game we played."

season winner Andy Pettitte in a seventh game.

"Who cares about Cliff going in Game 7?" Texas right fielder Jeff Francoeur said. "We've got a game to win in Game 6."

Still, Lee's 7-0 postseason record is on their minds. In the 50th anniversary of a franchise that has never reached the World Series, Texas remains one win away.

"We're in a good position," second baseman Ian Kinsler said.

New York is trying to overcome a 3-1 postseason deficit for the first time since 1958. Since the LCS went to a best-of-seven format, 24 of the 30 previous teams to take 3-1 series leads have won pennants.

For Yankees fans, 2004 is still fresh. That's when New York won the first three games of the ALCS before the Boston Red Sox became the first major league team to rebound from a 3-0 postseason hole.

"Crazier things have happened," Swisher said.

Yankees players actually dressed for success. They all arrived at the ballpark ready for a post-game charter flight.

"Our guys came in, everybody was wearing a suit," Swisher said.

Sabathia recovered from an erratic opener in Game 1.

Players confused by crackdown on hits

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray Lewis is worried about what's happening to his sport.

The Baltimore linebacker who epitomizes hard hits in the NFL fears that the league is stripping away the inherent violence and "the game will be diluted very quickly."

"My opinion is play the game like that game is supposed to be played, and whatever happens happens," Lewis said Wednesday about the NFL's decision to crack down on dangerous and flagrant hits.

The NFL imposed huge fines on three players — Pittsburgh's James Harrison, Atlanta's Dunta Robinson and New England's Brandon Meriweather — for illegal hits last weekend. It warned that, starting with this week's games, violent conduct will be cause for suspension.

Arizona Cardinals linebacker Joey Porter was clearly perplexed by the decision.

"There's no more hitting hard. That's what our game is about. It's a gladiator sport," Porter said. "I mean, the whole excitement of people getting hit hard, big plays happening, stuff like that."

"Just watch — the game is going to change."

Violence has always been a part of the NFL, bringing soaring TV ratings and strong attendance — along with the allure that accompanied tackles by Chuck Bednarik, Fred "The Hammer" Williamson, and Jack "The Assassin" Tatum.

The question is how much to allow. "Physical, tough football is what people are attracted to," said Ray Anderson, the NFL's executive vice president of football operations. "Violent, unnecessary hits that put people at risk, not just for the careers but lives ... we're not subscribing to the notion fans want that."

Commissioner Roger Goodell told the teams that "further action is required to emphasize the importance of teaching safe and controlled techniques and of playing within the rules."

"It is incumbent on all of us to support the rules we have in place to protect players," he said.

But some players think the league is asking for something much more difficult: complete changes in playing style — changes that fans don't want to see.

Not surprisingly, defensive players are most critical.

"What they're trying to say — 'We're protecting the integrity' — no, you're not," Bears cornerback Charles Tillman said. "It's ruining the integrity. It's not even football anymore. We should just go out there and play two-hand touch Sunday if we can't make contact."

Miami linebacker Channing Crowder said the only way of preventing helmet-to-helmet hits is to eliminate the helmet.

"If I get a chance to knock somebody out, I'm going to knock them out and take what they give me," Crowder said. "They give me a helmet, I'm going to use it."

Upset Harrison excused from Steelers practice Wednesday

PITTSBURGH (AP) — This time, James Harrison sacked himself.

The unhappy Steelers linebacker was excused from Wednesday's practice after meeting with coach Mike Tomlin about the $75,000 fine Harrison incurred for a helmet hit on a Browns receiver. Tomlin felt Harrison needed time to cool off.

Harrison was so upset with the fine — and the NFL's stricter enforcement of dangerous hits — that he said he was weighing retirement, although Tomlin expects him to practice on Thursday.

"I thought it was beneficial for him and for us if I gave him a little time to cool off and give him the day off," Tomlin said. "I excused him at that time and we went on and had a productive day. I'm sure he will be back in the building tomorrow."

Harrison said in multiple radio interviews that he isn't certain that he can keep playing the way he has been taught, now that the league not only is fining players but is threatening to suspend them for flagrant hits. He was fined $5,000 earlier this season for a hit on Titans quarterback Vince Young. Neither of the Harrison hits that drew fines was penalized.

"How can I continue to play this game the way that I've been taught to play this game since I was 10 years old?" Harrison said on Sirius/XM radio. "And now you're telling me that everything that they've taught me from that time on, for the last 20-plus years, is not the way you're supposed to play the game any more?"

"If that's the case I can't play by those rules. You're handicapping me."

OUR VIEW

Throwdown's delay clearly a blow for UW

It may seem we're using this space for a lot of good causes lately and, indeed, we are. That's why we were dismayed this morning when organizers of what was supposed to be the inaugural Ultimate Chili and Dessert Throwdown, benefitting the United Way of Howard County's annual fund-raising campaign, announced the event had been postponed.

The city of Big Spring, along with local radio station KBYG, had planned to host the throwdown from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Heart of the City Park in downtown Big Spring, but not enough people volunteered as chili cooks and dessert makers.

That's a shame, because the United Way needs all the help it can get in meeting this year's campaign goal of $250,000.

Locally, the United Way helps 14 agencies with funding. These agencies provide youth and family guidance through the Boy Scouts, Girls Scouts and YMCA; individualized physical therapy under the direction of the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center; youth services via the West Side Community Center and West Side Community Day Care; youth and adult assistance and learning through the Northside Community Center; victim support through Rape Crisis Victim Services, CASA of West Texas and the American Red Cross; spiritual and life support assistance with Isaiah 58 and the Salvation Army; eldercare on behalf of the Howard County Council on Aging; and positive treatment of animals through the Howard County Humane Society.

In other words, the agencies that receive funding from the United Way are, at least to our way of thinking, vital to our community. No, they're absolutely crucial.

Those agencies provide services that not only the neediest in our community depend on, but also provide services that we cannot accomplish individually.

That means we should all do our best to donate what we can to the United Way this fall. We here at the Herald are able to take a few dollars per pay period out of our checks and earmark it for the United Way, and we suggest that all employers in the community look that program.

It would be tough for a lot of us to find $50 to donate, particularly in these tough times, but it's a lot easier for those of us that get paid every two weeks to donate a couple of dollars per paycheck. Over a year's time, that $52.

Chances are you won't even feel any financial pinch at all, but those in the community that benefit from the efforts of these 14 agencies will. You can bet on that.

A SMALL PRAYER

With You, Lord, by our side we can visualize success in our life.

Preserving America's lead in space

For more than 40 years, the United States has led the world in human space flight and the critical research and technology development that supports exploration, scientific study and the medical breakthroughs that have fueled our economy and created thousands of private sector jobs.

NASA's highly skilled employees have worked tirelessly to maintain this leadership. And Texas has played a central role in that work throughout NASA's remarkable history.

Earlier this year, however, the outlook for NASA was grim as we confronted a budget environment that would not support the continued human space flight activities of the agency without some significant changes.

At the same time, the Obama administration's proposal canceled many key NASA manned space flight systems and would have led to the rapid and catastrophic loss of personnel and skills needed to develop a new launch system capable of taking us to new destinations beyond lower earth orbit and the moon.

The administration's proposal would have effectively ended the era of U.S. dominance in space exploration while threatening our utilization of and $100 billion investment in the International Space Station.

The president's original proposal endangered the missions that are the lifeblood of the Johnson Space Center in Houston and crippling job losses seemed inevitable. In other states with key NASA missions, workforces were also jeopardized.

On Sept. 29, Congress passed an authorization bill for NASA that made significant changes in the president's stated plan and now we are in a much better position to preserve the future of human spaceflight in America. The president signed this measure into law Oct. 11.

I believe the new law provides a robust mission for NASA with significant support for important scientific research and technology development and an enduring commitment to exploration.

The crux of the new approach is simple. We will use as many as possible of the skills, parts and resources we already have on hand to lower development costs without compromising capability or performance. We will build one launch vehicle and one crew exploration vehicle at a time rather than multiple ones.

Ensuring there is a launch system and exploration vehicle under development preserves the key missions of the Johnson Space Center. There will be an ongoing need for Mission Control and astronaut training done in Houston and the Bay Area. There will be an additional shuttle flight, which will allow for the delivery of additional supplies to ensure the viability, extension and use of the space station, another key function of the Johnson Space Center. This extra flight will also preserve critical skills and workforce, much of which can be transitioned to the new program.

I fought for this legislation because it was the right solution to the extraordinary challenge we were presented.

But this is not the end of the struggle for NASA and communities, like Houston, whose economic well-being are intertwined with the agency's.

Rather, the new law is a foundation upon which to build as we move forward toward a sustainable American space program with a robust mission for the Johnson Space Center and a bright future for its brain trust.

As a state, we should brace ourselves for challenges as the workforces of Johnson Space Center and NASA contractors are calibrated to the new mission. There are some who have already lost their jobs and others may follow; but the core of NASA's mission and the vast majority of its talented scientists, engineers and technicians will remain.

Undoubtedly, in the months ahead, more questions will be raised about NASA funding and the feasibility of the approach laid out in the new law.

I know the enormity of this task and I promise that my work to advance the future of human space flight and to preserve the critical role of the Johnson Space Center and Texas' NASA workforce will continue.

I want to personally thank the Texas communities that have stepped in and offered assistance and support to displaced NASA employees and contractors. I hope businesses within the aerospace industry will take advantage of the world-class skills these workers possess and will work together with community leaders to identify further opportunities.

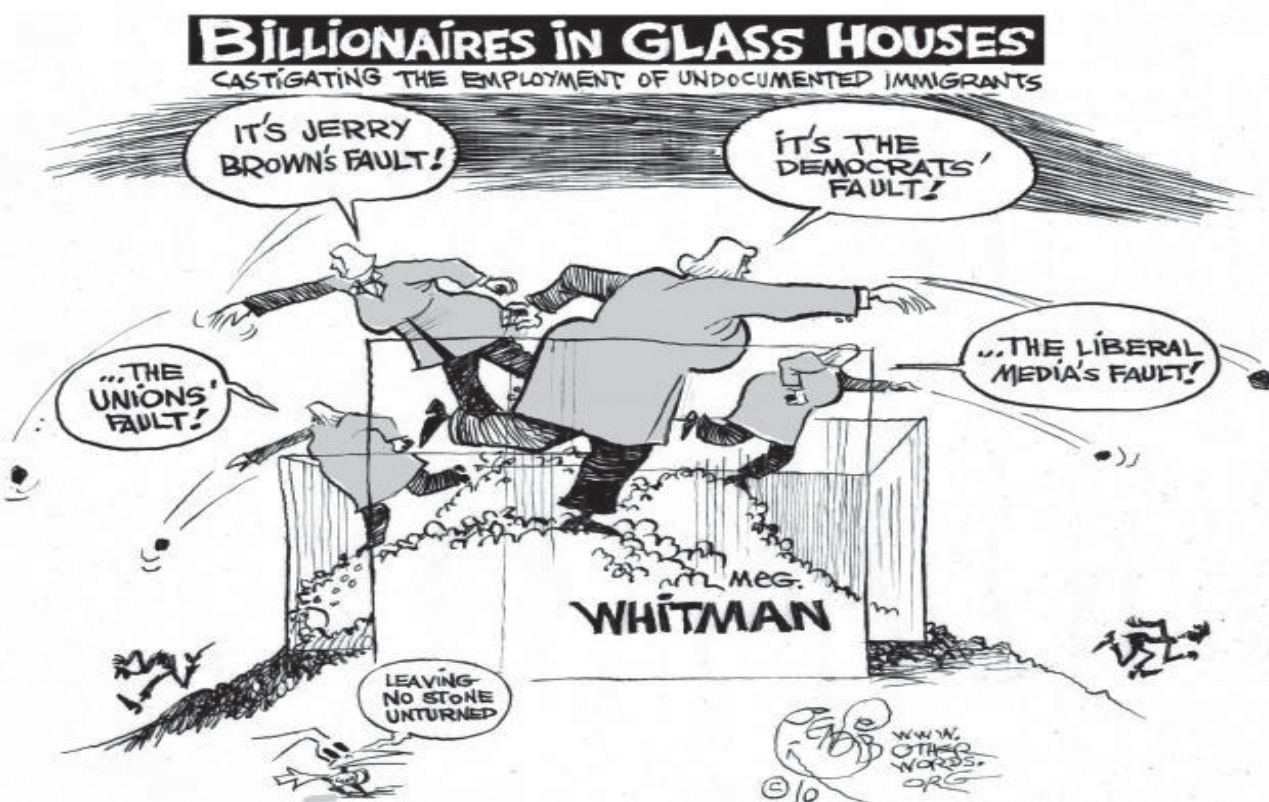

I will continue my efforts to ensure full and faithful implementation of the new law.

While producing a budget that is more sustainable and providing efficiencies for the wisest use of taxpayers' dollars, we are preserving the research and exploration that will add to the economic security and future of America.

Kay Bailey Hutchison is the senior U.S. Senator from Texas.

Arpaio: A modern-day Bull Connor

In April 1963, while confined to jail in Birmingham, Ala., for leading peaceful civil rights demonstrations in what was then considered to be the most segregated city in America, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. wrote an open letter challenging a group of local ministers and the nation to speak out against the brutal, segregationist tactics of the infamous Birmingham Police Commissioner Bull Connor.

Forty-seven years later, in Maricopa County, Ariz., there's another police official who seems bent on defying the Constitutional rights of non-white, law-abiding citizens.

For more than a decade, Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio has been the subject of numerous investigations and lawsuits for his inhumane treatment of prisoners and overzealous enforcement of immigration laws, including Arizona statutes that amount to outright racial profiling.

Department has been investigating Arpaio for violating the Civil Rights Act, which forbids discrimination in programs receiving federal funds.

Investigators have requested documents and interviews to ascertain whether the aggressive search and seizure tactics of Arpaio's office during its pursuit of undocumented immigrants, violated the civil rights of law-abiding Latino citizens.

For more than 18 months, Arpaio has refused to cooperate with the probe.

In early September, the Justice Department filed suit against Arpaio. Maricopa County stands to lose $113 million in federal funds if Arpaio doesn't produce proof that he's not engaging in racial profiling.

Arpaio's obstinate refusal to cooperate with this federal investigation is virtually unprecedented.

According to the Justice Department, Arpaio is the first local law enforcement official in 30 years to refuse to provide documents in a federal civil rights inquiry.

Arpaio's actions follow a longstanding pattern of abuse of power and anti-immigration behavior. In 2008, a federal judge ruled that Maricopa County jails failed to meet constitutional standards.

Moreover, Arpaio has publicly admitted that for years he has been employing many of the tactics contained in Arizona's controversial new immigration law, which the Justice Department has said illegally conflicts with federal statutes and undermines the nation's foreign policy.

Joe Arpaio is becoming a symbol of rising anti-immigration fever throughout the nation. He's a throwback to the days when powerful and arrogant police officials openly blocked racial progress and defied federal law.

Arizona ACLU Legal Director Dan Pochoda has said, "Sheriff Arpaio does not have the right to profile people because they look Latino regardless of their immigration status. His job is to uphold the law, not violate people's rights."

I agree. Joe Arpaio calls himself the "toughest sheriff in America." But his abusive law enforcement and anti-immigration tactics make him look more like a modern-day Bull Connor.

The players are questioning how they are supposed to adhere to the heightened emphasis on avoiding dangerous hits when it goes against everything they've been taught since they first stepped on the field as kids.

coached differently because we've been coached a certain way our whole lives," said Cleveland linebacker Scott Fujita, a member of the executive committee of the players' union, the NFLPA. "I think people out there would be shocked at the things players hear in their meetings with their coaches and the things they are supposed to do, the way they are taught to hit people." Many players also wanted stronger discipline for flagrant fouls to be part of their negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement, not something unilaterally imposed six weeks into the season. "We want to protect the players, absolutely," Fujita said. "But we need to have a longer conversation about it, and if you're going to impose sweeping changes like that and talk about suspending players, that's something that you have to address in the offseason." Anderson argues that the way the game is played, officiated and policed will only change for the better — and safer. "We are not going to fundamentally change the game. We're focused on one thing, illegal hits to the head and neck area," he said. "We hope to culturally change it so players understand those head hits under existing rules should be taken out of the game. For players who can't make the adjustment on their own, they will get a lot of help from this office to make sure they don't play that way."

Top-seeded Jelena Jankovic falls to qualifier in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Qualifier Zarina Diyas upset top-seeded Jelena Jankovic 6-1, 6-2 Thursday in the second round at the Kremlin Cup.

The 268th-ranked Diyas, who celebrated her 17th birthday on Monday, led 5-0 in the first set when Jankovic called for a doctor and had her blood pressure checked.

Jankovic said she had a hard time breathing, and had been ill since coming from a tournament in China.

Jankovic, who has qualified for next week's WTA championships, managed to break back early in the second set, but Diyas then broke the Serb two times.

"I had nothing to lose," Diyas said. "I just relaxed and played my best tennis." In the quarterfinals, Diyas will face sixth-seeded Maria Kirilenko of Russia, who routed Kateryna Bondarenko of Ukraine 6-0, 6-0.

Jankovic said she had an infection and was on antibiotics for a week.

"I was suffering on the court but I really wanted to be out there and didn't want to retire," Jankovic said.

"I finished as well as I could, but obviously it was tough for me to focus on my tennis."

The seventh-ranked Jankovic hopes to recover in time for the end-of-season championships in Doha on Tuesday.

"Doha is a different type of tournament," she said. "You can lose a match and still win the whole tournament."

The bidding: South Pass, West Pass, North 1♦, East Pass. 2♣, Pass, 3♦, Pass. 3NT.

Opening lead — jack of hearts. The question of when a defender should or should not win a trick has no easy answer. The natural tendency is to take a trick when the opportunity presents itself. But with experience one learns that sometimes it is wiser to reject a trick than it is to take it.

How to recognize the difference from one situation to the next is not easily defined. Perhaps the best generalization is that you should take a trick unless there is a good reason not to. Today's deal provides a case in point.

Declarer won the opening heart lead with the queen, led the eight of diamonds and let it ride. The success or failure of the contract now hinged on whether East won the trick or ducked it.

Had East taken the eight with the queen, South would have had no trouble scoring 11 tricks. He would have won any return in his hand and led a diamond to the king, forcing out the ace. The ace of hearts would then provide the entry to dummy's remaining diamonds, and declarer would score the rest of the tricks.

The actual East wisely decided not to win the first diamond, and as a result South soon found there was no way to make even nine tricks. He continued with a diamond to the nine, but when East produced the queen, South realized he was fighting a losing cause, and he eventually finished down one.

By refusing to win the first diamond trick, East severed a critical line of communication between declarer and dummy. How could he tell it was the right play? Because dummy's shortage of entries and the strong possibility that South had only two diamonds indicated that the holdup offered the best chance to defeat the contract.

Tomorrow: Bidding quiz.

News in brief

Toyota recalls 1.53 million cars for brake fluid, fuel pump problems

TOKYO (AP) — Toyota is recalling 1.53 million Lexus, Avalon and other models, mostly in the U.S. and Japan, for brake fluid and fuel pump problems, the latest in a string of quality problems for the world's No. 1 automaker.

Toyota Motor Corp. said Thursday it will call back for repairs about 740,000 cars in the U.S. and 599,000 in Japan. The remainder are in Europe and other markets around the world.

Over the past year, Toyota has recalled more than 10 million cars and trucks worldwide for a variety of problems, from faulty gas pedals and floor mats that can trap accelerators, to braking problems in its Prius hybrid. In August, Toyota called back 1.33 million Corolla sedans and Matrix hatchbacks in the U.S. and Canada because their engines may stall.

The majority of vehicles this time around need to be fixed for a problem with the brake master cylinder, which could lead to weaker braking power, said spokesman Paul Nolasco in Tokyo.

Some models in Japan and elsewhere — but not in North America — have an electrical problem with the fuel pump, which could lead the engine to stall, Nolasco said.

No accidents have been reported from the two defects, he said.

Election Day over for millions of early voters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Election Day is already over for more than 3 million Americans, and a surprising number of them are Democrats.

Republicans clearly are gaining ground in turning out early voters compared with their showing two years ago, but figures from the first batch of states that offer clues about 2010 early voting patterns still give Democrats an edge in a number of states and big counties.

With 30 percent or more of all votes likely to be cast early, both sides are going all-out to lock in supporters' ballots early. And for the first time in a midterm election, they're combining traditional shoe-leather canvassing and get-out-the-vote rallies with technological tools like Facebook and text messaging.

Strategies run the gamut: In Washington state, Democrats held a "tweetup" to rein in young early voters. In Illinois, a voter-education group posted a YouTube video about the state's early voting law highlighting the ability to vote naked — from the comfort of home, please. In Florida, Democrats e-mailed a notice that "Today is Election Day. No, that's not a typo, because every day between now and November 2 is Election Day."

While it's impossible to tell for whom people are voting, Democrats so far are casting ballots at a faster clip than Republicans in Iowa, Maryland, North Carolina and Nevada's heavily Democratic Clark County, which supplied two-thirds of the state's voters in 2008.

Republicans are flexing their organizational muscles and leading the pace in Florida, even though Democrats have the edge in registered voters there, and in Colorado. The parties are running about even so far in Maine.

Obama pounds home familiar themes as election nears

SEATTLE (AP) — Closing out a perilous election season for Democrats, President Barack Obama's final argument sounds like this: Do you want to stick with progress or return to failure?

He's talking about control of Congress, not himself, but there is no escaping his imprint on this election.

With every echo of the spirited 2008 campaign, every mention of the unfinished work and every photo he takes with another candidate, Obama serves up another reminder that his own agenda is at stake on Nov. 2.

It is part of the tricky balance for the White House — deploying Obama to the right places to stir up enthusiasm and recruit first-time voters from two years ago, yet trying to keep people from viewing the election as a referendum on him and the battered economy.

Half of likely voters say how they vote on their House race won't be affected by Obama at all, according to a new Associated Press-GfK poll.

Yet almost as many said they will base their House vote in part to send a message about Obama — 26 percent to oppose him, 23 percent to support him.

Aides say the message Obama has been pounding for weeks is that if Democrats lose control of Congress, gains his administration has made will lose traction. He is referring to the fate of big items Congress already has passed, like health care and Wall Street reform, and promises not yet kept, including deficit reduction and immigration.

French youths clash with riot police in Lyon

PARIS (AP) — Youths have overturned a car and hurled bottles at police in the French city of Lyon amid nationwide tensions over raising the retirement age.

Police are chasing the protesters and trying to subdue the violence with tear gas.

Months of peaceful protests over the retirement reform have degenerated into violence in scattered sites around France. Lyon saw clashes Wednesday between youths and police, and the violence is resuming Thursday.

Also Thursday, protesters temporarily blockaded Marseille's airport and have blocked high schools around the country.

Huge U.S. arms sale ripples across Middle East

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — As American and Saudi officials spent months quietly hammering out a wish list for a mammoth sale of American warplanes and other weapons to the oil-rich kingdom, leaders in Iran were busy publicly displaying their advances in missiles, naval craft and air power.

In one memorable bit of political theater, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad stood under a cascade of glitter in August to unveil a drone bomber — dubbed the "ambassador of death" — that he claimed would keep foes in the region "paralyzed" on their bases.

The response by Washington and its cornerstone Arab ally, Saudi Arabia, moved a step ahead Wednesday. The Obama administration notified Congress of plans to sell as many as 84 new F-15 fighter jets, helicopters and other gear with an estimated $60 billion price tag.

The proposed deal — one of the biggest single U.S. arms sales — is clearly aimed at countering Iran's rising military might and efforts to expand its influence.

But it ties together other significant narratives in the region, including an apparent retooling of Israeli policies to tacitly support a stronger, American-armed Saudi Arabia because of common worries about Iran.

It also reinforces the Gulf as the Pentagon's front-line military network against Iran even as the U.S. sandwiches the Islamic republic with troops and bases in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Study: Women give significantly more to charity

SEATTLE (AP) — Women across nearly every income level gave significantly more to charity than men, nearly twice as much in some cases, according to a study by the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University.

Nonprofits have long suspected that women were the driving forces behind many of the gifts they receive, but they haven't had much proof. But the results of this study are so decisive and consistent, they can stop wondering, said Debra Mesch.

Casual Cooking with Kris

Welcoming readers to my world, where I enjoy simple, sometimes quick, but always delicious meals.

A few years ago I was at my mom's place of business downtown, visiting her and talking about different things. She had a friend come in and we all were talking and I noticed the time was getting late. I told them I needed to go home and make my

Rushin' Stew.

Mom's friend asked me what was in it that made it Russian. I told her I was rushin' around to make it. That's why I called it my Rushin' Stew. I need to expand the title to World's Best Rushin' Stew and after making it, you will agree.

As the weather is getting cooler and you are looking for something warm and yummy, this is the recipe for you.

This is not made in an hour; it takes a little while. But it is easy to make and so worth the wait. I recommend making it on a Saturday afternoon for dinner or make it and reheat it for Sunday lunch after church. Add a little warm, sweet cornbread and you are good to go. The recipe provided this week is a stick-to-your-ribs, hearty, everyone-will-love-it, dish. Enjoy!

World's Best Rushin' Stew

2-3 pounds of cubed pork roast or carnitas in package
4 medium potatoes
4 celery stalks
4 carrots
1 small onion, sliced
2 garlic cloves, minced
2 bay leaves
1 can vegetable broth or stock
1/2 cup aged balsamic

vinegar
1/2 cup red or white drinking wine salt and pepper to taste flour
canola or vegetable oil

Cut up the pork into large, bite-size pieces. Take one-third of the meat, toss in flour and add to a large pot with enough hot oil to cover the bottom. Let the meat brown on both sides, but just enough to color and give flavor. Scoop out the meat and drain. Add oil and continue with another third of the meat until all the meat is floured and browned. In same pot, add more oil and sliced onions. Wash all vegetables and chop and drop them in as well. Stir and add a hint more oil if needed just to lightly cover everything to help sautee. Add bay leaves and salt and pepper to taste. As the vegetables begin to soften, add minced garlic and the wine. Stir, scrapping along the bottom of the pan to release all flavored goodies stuck on the bottom. Add balsamic vinegar and broth or stock. Stir well and add enough water to cover everything, plus a little extra. Keep on medium as it simmers and thickens.

It will smell so good that your nose will tell you when it is ready. Make some3 cornbread and dinner is ready.

Vets stand guard over Christian flag

KING, N.C. (AP) — The Christian flag is everywhere in the small city of King: flying in front of barbecue joints and hair salons, stuck to the bumpers of trucks, hanging in windows and emblazoned on T-shirts.

The relatively obscure emblem has become omnipresent because of one place it can't appear: flying above a war memorial in a public park.

The city council decided last month to remove the flag from above the monument in Central Park after a resident complained, and after city leaders got letters from the American Civil Liberties Union and Americans United for the Separation of Church and State.

That decision incensed veterans groups, churches and others in King, a city of about 6,000 people 15 miles north of Winston-Salem. Ray Martini, 63, an Air Force veteran who served in Vietnam, launched a round-the-clock vigil to guard a replica Christian flag hanging on a wooden pole in front of the war memorial.

Since Sept. 22, the vigil has been bolstered by home-cooked food delivered by supporters, sleeping bags and blankets donated by a West Virginia man and offers of support from New York to Louisiana.

"This monument stands as hallowed ground," said Martini, a tall, trim man with a tattoo on his right arm commemorating the day in 1988 when he became a born-again Christian.

"It kills me when I think people want to essentially desecrate it."

The protesters are concerned not only about the flag, which was one of 11 flying above the memorial when it was dedicated six years ago, but about a metal sculpture nearby depicting a soldier kneeling before a cross.

"I won't let it fall," Martini said. "I have already told the city, before you can take it down, I'll tie myself to it and you can cut me down first."
