Darden to take on city manager post

By ANDREIA MEDLIN

Staff Writer

Tuesday's special meeting of the Big Spring City Council proved to be special indeed. Following 30- to 45-minute interviews with the remaining three city manager candidates and a lengthy deliberation, the Big Spring City Council voted unanimously late Tuesday evening to grant Todd Darden the position of city manager.

"We had 34 candidates when we started," said newly elected mayor Larry McLellan. "During the June 11 meeting that number was reduced to three."

The mayor again declined to release the names of the other two candidates but said, "I can tell you they were from the Dallas area." Reportedly, they were from the Richland Hills area.

The long wait over, Darden was warmly congratulated by his family and the council members. Among the hugs and handshakes Darden also was bestowed a little ribbing by councilman Marcus Fernandez who told the new city manager, "If you thought I called you a lot before, I'll be calling you all the time now."

"I really believe we made the best choice," said McLellan, citing Darden's 30-year career in various positions with the city.

Despite the challenge of the interview process, Darden maintained his calm and sense of humor, telling Fernandez that among the questions he was asked, the councilman's were some of the most difficult to answer.

"My stomach was in knots," said Darden in regards to problem The for BSISD is that the state is using 2012's valuation total — $1.6 billion — in determining this year's appropriation, while estimates of this year's tax rolls is about $400 million less than that figure, BSISD Business Manager Debbie Green said. The result is a double whammy — the state will send the district less money, while the district will have a smaller pool of local tax dollars to collect. conceded.

"Our expenditures look to be very much on track to what they were last year," Green said. "If (appropriation estimates hold), the trustees will have some tough decisions to make."

Raising the tax rate is out of the question — BSISD, like almost every other school district in the state, is at the maximum rate allowed by state law. So, that leaves cutting costs as the only realistic option trustees face.

example, salaries make up about 75 percent of BSISD's budget, and most of those figures are mandated by the state.

"We've got to pay salaries, we've got to pay utilities and we have other necessary expenses, as well," Green said. "There's only so much we can cut."

Fortunately, BSISD has healthy reserve funds, which are more than sufficient to make up a state shortfall this year, although dipping into cash reserves is not hit the panic button just yet.

"By the time we have the true certified (tax roll) numbers in July, those have traditionally been healthier, stronger numbers," Green said.

The budget process will culminate in late August, when the 2013-2014 fiscal package is formally adopted.

In other business Thursday, trustees will consider:

• Discussions on the district's flagship radio status and open meeting

• The annual evaluation of Superintendent Steven Saldivar.

Stopping stress in its tracks tress is a killer. It is a major player in many health issues that we 21st Century citizens are coping with and that theory is validated by statistics, as well as personal experience.

We all know that we should be more stress-free, but knowing what to do with the knowledge we have isn't always easy.

Wisdom is sometimes defined as putting knowledge into action and to a large degree, I would agree. The problem is that we have all found ourselves in that proverbial place of not knowing what to do when something has to be done. We know that something has to change, but what? And where do we start?

Not knowing what to do often paralyzes us into doing nothing and stress becomes an unavoidable detrimental factor in our life as a result of inaction.

If we know what is causing our stress, the starting point for resolution is obvious. The problem is that too often the real cause of our stress isn't easily discernible or identifiable.

One thing important to accept is that knowledge is responsibility. If you accidentally or carelessly run a red light you're still going to be ticketed because you know better. You won't be guiltless by pleading ignorance of the law because every legally licensed driver is required to know what a red light means.

Similarly, there are "red lights" in life we seem to be carelessly sailing through. So, in accordance with the previously stated knowledge is responsibility concept, we start where we know what we can do to facilitate positive change.

But that's not a "one-size-fitsall" solution because many things that cause us stress are out of our control.

One thing is certain, however, and that is that stress is usually present because something needs to change.

Someone said, "Your life does not get better by chance, but by change."

changing nothing, nothing changes."

"The best thing you can do is the right thing; the next best thing you can do is the wrong thing; the worst thing you can do is nothing." So declared Theodore Roosevelt. Maybe positive change is the stressrelief you are looking for.

Most of us prepared hard for the future we expected, and yet things aren't working out as we had planned.

That's true if you have been laid off, are a recent college graduate who feels underemployed, or are a manager facing constant upheavals at work, even if you are the boss, because you are wrestling with disruptive technologies and new competitors who seemingly come out of nowhere to upend your industry.

This is not how we were told it was going to be. Growing up, we were led to believe that the future was predictable enough, and if we studied hard we could obtain the work we wanted in an environment we understood, and we would live happy and successful lives.

The experts told us the steps for dealing with a predictable universe:

1. You (or your parents, teachers, or bosses) forecast how the future will be.

2. You construct a number of plans for achieving that future, picking the optimal one.

3. You amass all the necessary resources (education, money, etc.) necessary to achieve your plan.

4. And then you go out and make that plan a reality. Simple, right?

Well, there's just one small problem. We don't live in a predictable universe anymore and that in and of itself negates the simplistic theory that tells us we have all the answers.

Truth is, the longer I live, the more I realize how few of the answers we do have. Often I am reminded of how incapable I am of changing things by myself.

With that as a launching pad, I submit a few thoughts on stress relief that may not be scientifically proven, but sure seem to be experientially valid.

First, be honest enough with yourself to acknowledge that you need change. That's threatening to some folks, but we all have room for improvement.

Then, stop demanding perfection. Nobody is, and when we place unreasonable expectations on ourselves, or others, we will ultimately end up stressed over failure to live up to an unattainable standard.

Louise Hay said, "If I want to be loved for who I am, I have to learn to love others for who they are."

Reading a good book that has a positive and uplifting theme is always positive. No matter what society says, you will be more at peace with yourself, your circumstances, and your world if you feed your mind positive, encouraging and edifying brain food.

Surround yourself with true friends and people who will build you up with their positive outlook. It is undeniable that attitudes are contagious.

Mandy Hale said, "Sometimes you have to move on without certain people. If they're meant to be in your life, they'll catch up."

Sometimes the only difference between a bad day (experience) and a good day (experience) is one's attitude. Having a positive and optimistic perspective when you don't have all the answers takes work. but it's worth it.

It never hurts to remember that we aren't the only ones who have had to face adversity and that if we hang on we have the opportunity to be an overcomer.

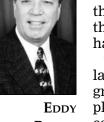

As hard as it is to accept, our problems and challenges aren't unique and somebody before us has already weathered this situation. Remind yourself that if they can do it, so can you.

We aren't going to float through life on a cloud. There are just too many life situations that are unavoidable.

But we can help ourselves out by facing change and struggles with a positive view and a trust in God's strength to become perfect in our weakness. You may just find yourself dancing in the rain before you know it.

You may not agree with anything I've said, but I column as I see 'em.

DEBRA SAUNDERS

Stateness looks totally foolish. Because she had Arab Spring fever, an ally is in chains, and Egypt has new leadership, the Muslim Brotherhood.

At least America had a national interest in ousting Libyan despot Moammar Gadhafi, who ordered the 1988 Pan Am Flight 103 bombing, which left 270 dead. But with the U.S. military spread thin from wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and the political ideology of Libyan rebels in question, Obama preferred to leave NATO in charge of the air war over Libya. A White House aide famously dubbed this strategy "leading from behind."

When Libyans killed Gadhafi, Madam Secretary paraphrased Julius Caesar, quipping, "We came; we saw; he died." She has shown less bluster since a terrorist attack in Benghazi left Ambassador J.

Christopher Stevens, Sean Smith, Tyrone Woods and Glen Doherty dead. The Libyan nonwar doesn't feel like victory anymore.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., has faulted Obama for pledging arms after 100-plus Syrians were killed by chemical weapons but not earlier in a civil war that has claimed 93,000 lives. Give this to McCain: He has the moral high ground. I felt the same way about the atrocities committed by Iraq's Saddam Hussein. Ten years after the Iraq War began, the country is more stable but at a cost so terrible that Americans don't want to walk that path again.

The Obama administration wisely stipulates that there will be no American boots on Syrian ground. Deputy national security adviser Ben Rhodes asserted that Washington expects U.S. arms will not fall "into the hands of extremists."

The president also has resisted calls to order a "no-fly zone." He would rather spend tax dollars on nation building at home than on civil war management abroad.

There's this view among the foreign policy elite that Obama has to be tough on Syria in order to telegraph to world leaders that American outrage builds at a penalty. In Egypt, the penalty was that a terrorist organization won power, and in Libya, the penalty put more firepower into the hands of hostile militias.

By all means, Mr. President, send arms to the Syrian rebels. Do what you have to do to keep Assad — and Hezbollah and Iran and Russia — from winning. But don't feel you have to give in to the risky demands of the foreign policy scolds. Remember: "We came; we saw; he died."

MARFA — For the past 12 years, musician Bryan Adams has sharpened his skills as a professional photographer by capturing intimate images of friends and colleagues in the entertainment, fashion and art industries.

In October 2012, Adams released a comprehensive retrospective of his photographic work in a book titled, "Exposed." Twenty-nine select images from the book will be on public display at the Marfa Contemporary, as the final stop of a 3-city U.S. tour of art venues in Dallas, Oklahoma City and Marfa, Texas.

The exhibition opened May 31, and runs from 6-8p.m.through Wednesday, July 31. The show is free to the public. Bryan Adams "Exposed" will be the third exhibition at Marfa Contemporary since its opening in October 2012.

Portraits in the exhibition include a crosssection of international celebrities and emerging stars such as Danny Trejo, Victoria Beckham, Lindsay Lohan, Amy Winehouse, Mickey Rourke, Natalia Vodianova, Pink, Mick Jagger, Sean Penn, Queen Elizabeth II, Sir Ben Kingsley and South African rave rapper Yo-Landi Visser.

A limited number of the Bryan Adams edition-images and copies of the "Exposed" coffee able for sale at Marfa Contemporary.

re you ready for some tall, broad-shouldered, slimhipped, steely-eyed, good-└ looking, slow-talking Western hero to take your breath away (oh my, I'm feeling faint)? Admittedly, most of the people who check out the Westerns are men and I don't think they really pay much attention to the looks of the hero in the book, but I do, especially when there is a spirited woman who is in the story, too.

There are just over 20 new Westerns going out on the shelf today, so you Western aficionados (and you know who you are) better check the new book binder so you can be first on the block to check them out. You will recognize the authors: Robert J. Horton, Lauran Paine, Ralph Cotton, Will Henry, L.P. Holmes, Jory Sherman, Robert J. Randisi, Ralph Compton and others who may not be as familiar will be on the list in the new book binder.

I always heard Bridge is a hard game to learn. However, a slim volume has made its arrival to the library: "Play Bridge in 10 Minutes," (795.415 BYF B) by Brian Byfield. The back of the book will tell you that you will learn all the rules, how to communicate with your partner and more advances strategies for winning the game. Try telling that to Omar Sharif!

When the general election is called, Giles Barrington has to defend his seat

"The Pacific War: Uncensored" (940.542 GUA H) is the frank, unfiltered views of a reporter in the thick of the Pacific War combat on land, sea and air. Harold Guard died in 1986 and John Tring is his grandson who has spent the past nine years editing his story from a variety of public and private sources. No longeer subject to censorship, these observations on how the Allies nearly failed may now be told.

Harold Guard became a war correspondent quite by chance, after he had been invalided out of the Navy following a submarine accident. Thereafter, working for United Press, he gained a front row seat to many of the most dramatic battles and events of the century. In March 1942, Guard arrived in Australia, having narrowly escaped from Japanese forces invading Singapore and Java. His dispatches from that disastrous front prompted one observer to comment on "the crisis days when everybody except Harold Guard was trying to hush up the real situation."

At the time, he was acclaimed by the Australian press as being one of the top four newspapermen covering the war in the Pacific. Over the next three years, Guard was to have many more adventures reporting on the Pacific War, including firsthand experience of flying with the U.S. Air Force on 22 bombing missions, camping with Allied forces in the deadly jungles of New Guinea and taking part in attacks from amphibious landing craft on enemy occupied walk with a stiff right leg due to his Navy injury. Despite this, he often reported from perilous situations at the front line, which gained him considerable notoriety within the newspaper world. Harold Guard always endeavored to give an honest account of what was happening in the war, and this often brought him into conflict with the mili tary censors. It is truly an amazing story.

One of my favorite authors, John Lescroat, is back with Dismas Hardy and the gang. In "The Ophelia Cut," (M LES J) Moses McGuire has good reason to be concerned about his beautiful 23-year-old daughter, Brittany. She moves quickly from one boyfriend to the next, and always seems to prefer a new and mysterious stranger to a man she knows something about. But her most recent ex, Rick Jessup, isn't willing to let her go, culminating in a terrible night when Brittany is raped. Within 24 hours, Rick Jessup is dead, Moses McGuire is the prime suspect in the investigation, and Dismas Hardy has been hired to defend his brotherin-law. Making things even more complicated, McGuire has fallen off the wagon, and his stay in prison could bring to light old secrets that would destroy Hardy and his closest colleagues' careers.

As the overwhelming evidence against McGuire piles up, Dismas Hardy focuses on planting doubt in the minds of the jurors—until, in a feat of legal ingenuity that is staggering in both its implications and its simplicity, Hardy sees a new way forward that might just save them all. But at what price? I won't tell you the ending, but I was very disappointed.

Local to compete at world's largest junior rodeo

Sports

By BRIAN MCCORMACK

Sports Editor

Big Spring's Canyon Atkinson, a seventh grade student and son of Shannon and Belinda Crenshaw, has been riding bulls since he was seven years old. Atkinson recently qualified for the world's largest junior rodeo, where he will compete against the best in the world.

The National Junior High Finals Rodeo will take place in Gallup, N.M., beginning June 23. Atkinson will join about 2,000 other young buckaroos at the yearly event, which features participants from 41 U.S. States, five Canadian provinces and Australia.

More than $75,000 in prizes and $100,000 in scholarship funds will be awarded, which Atkinson will be vying for along with his peers.

"It's a great honor," Crenshaw said of his son. "Canyon's worked real hard every day to get to where he's at. We're very proud of the accomplishments he's had. Eventually, his goal is to be on the PBR (Professional Bull Riding) — the granddaddy of bull riding."

The road to the NJHFR isn't an easy one to hoe. Atkinson, in addition to his duties as a student and son, also competes in more than 50 rodeo events per year. A 2013 state champion, the 13-year old will be one of just four junior bull riders representing Texas in Gallup. Atkinson has won seven saddles and at least 60 buckles since he began riding.

To earn the title of NJHFR champion, Atkinson must qualify in the Top 20 in the first round, then move on to the second where he will face the other finalists in his age bracket. Each contestant will ride three times, with the average being recorded as the final score.

Saturday's championship round will be televised nationally on RFD-TV. Live broadcasts will also air on NHSRATV.com. Performance times are slated for 7 p.m. on June 23, with 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. performances each day thereafter.

Heat rally, beat Spurs in OT to force Game 7

MIAMI (AP) – When LeBron James' greatness almost wasn't good enough, officials began preparing for a San Antonio celebration.

Miami's championship reign would be over. Someone in Spurs black would replace James as NBA Finals MVP.

James and the Heat vouldn't let it happen.

"It's by far the best game I've ever been a part of," James said.

He wouldn't let the Heat lose it — or their NBA title. If the Spurs want to take it, they'll have to fight just a little harder to get it.

One last game, winner take all.

So close to being eliminated that they noticed

"They're the best two words in sports: Game 7," Heat coach Erik Spoelstra said.

And two the Spurs were oh-so-close to avoiding.

They looked headed to a fifth title in five chances when they built a 13-point lead with under 4 minutes left in the third quarter, then grabbed a five-point edge with 28 seconds left in regulation after blowing the lead.

A's top Rangers, Darvish 6-2

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - Facing Yu Darvish has been no problem for the Oakland Athletics. They have beaten the Texas Rangers' Japanese ace four times, more than any other team.

Brandon Moss and John Jaso homered, Jarrod Parker went seven strong innings for his fourth consecutive victory and the AL Westleading A's beat the Rangers 6-2 on Tuesday night.

"We may do better against him than other teams, maybe, because we see him more often being in our division and we always seem to get him," Moss said. "But at the same time, it is really hard to face him because he's so unique and so different."

Darvish (7-3) had 10 strikeouts in his six innings, but the A's never trailed after Moss led off the second with his 13th homer. Jaso added a leadoff shot an inning later for 3-0 lead.

Parker (6-6) limited the Rangers to two runs and three hits over seven innings to improve to 4-0 his last five starts. The right-hander is 4-1 in five career starts against Texas.

And this time, he outpitched Darvish, though he tried not to

"To be a part of something like this is something you would never be able to recreate once you're done playing the game. And I'm blessed to be a part of something like this," James said. "And I'm happy about the way we dug down and was able to get a win. It didn't look like we could muster up at some point in the game."

James powered Miami to a frantic fourth-quarter rally and overtime escape as the Heat beat the Spurs 103-100 on Tuesday night to extend the NBA Finals as far as they can go and keep Miami's repeat chances alive.

Losing his headband but keeping his cool while playing the entire second half and overtime, James finished with 32 points, 10 rebounds and 11 assists, making the go-ahead basket with 1:43 remaining in the extra period.

officials bringing yellow tape out to block off the court for the Spurs' trophy presentation, the Heat hit a couple of big 3-pointers and got some defensive stops - everything that makes a great team a champion.

"We seen the championship board already out there, the yellow tape. And you know, that's why you play the game to the final buzzer," James said. "And that's what we did tonight. We gave it everything that we had and more."

Tim Duncan scored 30 points for the Spurs, his most in an NBA Finals game since Game 1 in 2003, but was shut out after the third quarter. He added 17 rebounds.

Game 7 is in Miami on Thursday, the NBA's first do-or-die matchup to crown a champion since the Lakers beat the Celtics in 2010.

But James hit a 3-pointer and Ray Allen tied it with another. Just 5.2 seconds remained in regulation. The Heat were that close to the edge.

"It's a tough moment. We were a few seconds away from winning the championship and we let it go," Spurs veteran Manu Ginobili said. "A couple rebounds we didn't catch, a tough 3 by Ray and a couple missed free throws. It's a very tough moment."

James was just 3 of 12 after three quarters, the Heat trailing by 10 and frustration apparent among the players and panic setting in among the fans.

Nothing to worry about. Not with James playing like this. He finished 11 of 26, even making a

Police visit home of Patriots TE Hernandez

NORTH ATTLEBOR-OUGH, Mass. (AP) -State and local police spent hours at the home of New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez on Tuesday night as another group of officers searched an industrial park about a mile away where a body was discovered the day before.

Police at the scene and prosecutors would not comment on the actions while Sports Illustrated, citing an unidentified source, reported that Hernandez was not believed to be a suspect in what was being treated as a possible homicide.

Sports Illustrated reported that the link between Hernandez and the case was a rented Chevrolet Suburban with Rhode Island plates that police had been searching for. The Sun Chronicle of Attleboro, Mass., said the SUV was registered to Enterprise and investigators wanted to analyze it for fingerprints.

The Associated Press could not independently confirm the reports.

No cause of death had been released for the body found about 5:30 p.m. Monday.

Hernandez is represented by the Athletes First agency, which said it has no comment "on the Aaron Hernandez situation." The player's mother said by telephone from Connecticut on Tuesday she had no knowledge of a case involving him.

Pet Talk: Arthritis and your pet he Aggie family lost a beloved member when Reveille VII, the retired mascot of Texas A&M University, died recently. Ever since her arrival in Aggieland, Reveille VII, a female American Collie, had been receiving the best care available at the Small Animal Hospital at the Texas A&M College of Veterinary Medicine & Biomedical Science (CVM).

Stacy Eckman, a lecturer at the CVM, had been treating Rev for arthritis since last August, when Rev's caregivers, Tina and Paul Gardner, noticed that she was having trouble sitting down like she normally would.

"Arthritis can attack bones and joints in animals the same way the disease does in humans," said Zachary Goodrich, veterinary resident instructor at the CVM. "However some animals, especially dogs, can be affected by arthritis at a much younger age than humans generally are. Some pets will be affected by arthritis before they are even one year old." Reveille VII was twelve and a half.

Although there is no certain way to prevent arthritis in pets, owners can help stave off arthritis by making sure their dog has a good, healthy diet and gets plenty of exercise.

"Dogs that are overweight tend to be more affected by arthritis," Eckman said.

Reveille VII did not have that problem. "Tina Gardener did a great job keeping Reveille slim and fit, even with her reduced activity level in retirement," Eckman said.

"Consistent low-impact exercise such as walking and swimming helps maintain good muscle mass as well as keeping your pet at an ideal body weight," said Goodrich. "The more extra weight your pet carries around, the higher the stress being placed across its joints which may worsen the arthritis or affect your pet's quality of life."

There are several signs for pet-owners to look for if they suspect their animal is suffering from arthritis.

"The most obvious sign is decreased activity level," said Goodrich. "The animal may not want to go as far as it used to on a walk or may not want to walk at all. Other signs can include stiffness when rising, especially after sleeping, and varying degrees of lameness." It is also important to have your animal examined.

A veterinarian can take x-rays of the affected joints to diagnose arthritis. However, x-ray images can't determine the disease's severity.

Sun and Jupiter Conjunction

The merry procession of well-wishing begins with the sun and lucky Jupiter in conjunction at the last degrees of Gemini. The solar tides are about to turn, and this is a time for celebration of the new friends made, games played and agreements struck during the bright, carefree days of the Gemini sun. ARIES (March 21-April 19). Many ideas will come to you, and there is a real gem among them. Write them down so you can scrutinize your collection later and find the truly valuable item.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You often hear someone say, "It's not a competition." "But it is!" you reply in your mind. Take that competitive spirit and put it to good use by remembering your most important competitor: yourself. GEMINI (May 21-June 21). It might seem like a strange thing to consider, but you have a starring role in someone's memory bank, and thus you have the chance to make the story more

"Their signs on x-rays don't necessarily coordinate with their physical findings," Eckman said. In other words, a lack of change in the x-rays doesn't mean your pet's arthritis isn't getting worse.

Although there is no cure for arthritis, there are a number of treatments available to help your arthritic pet feel better. These treatments vary depending on the severity of the case.

Early detection — before the disease has progressed too far — is important to help maintain your pet's ability to walk, run, and play.

"There are several surgical and medical treatment options available depending on which joint is affected," said Goodrich. "Joint replacements are performed on a case-by-case basis. Arthroscopy is also routinely used to evaluate and treat the joint in a minimally invasive manner."

A veterinarian may give your dog steroid injections to help relieve inflammation. Drugs, such as polysulfated glycosaminoglycan injections, help protect cartilage with minimal side effects.

"Medical options include non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, of which there are several on the veterinary medical market," said Eckman. "Most of them are actually formulated for osteoarthritis." However, never give your pets human medications such as ibuprofen or aspirin, as they can cause serious harm to your pet's stomach, kidneys, and liver.

"When you use the drugs together, you can actually use less drug overall because they complement each other," said Eckman.

Physical therapy, such as work on a water treadmill, is very important.

"Treatment for arthritis sometimes requires multiple types of therapy," said Jacqueline Davidson, clinical professor at the CVM. "Reveille was given several different types of oral medication for pain and inflammation and received injections of a joint lubricant and a steroid into several of the more severely affected joints. She also received injections of a medication in the muscle to help with joint pain and inflammation."

Reveille's diet was also controlled throughout her therapy to make sure that she stayed at a lean body weight, and she took several different dietary supplements for her joints, one of which was an omega-3 fatty acid, to help reduce pain associated with inflammation.

"Being overweight results in more stress on the joints because they are supporting more weight," said Davidson. "In addition, excess body fat promotes inflammation in the body and can worsen the signs of arthritis."

Reveille came to the TAMU veterinary physical rehabilitation service several times weekly. Her treatments included electro-acupuncture and laser therapy for pain and she exercised regularly in the underwater treadmill.

"Walking in water is helpful for arthritis because the buoyancy of the water reduces stress on the joints, allowing for more comfortable movement," said Davidson. "In addition, the water provides some resistance, which helps promote leg strength."

The TAMU Small Animal Hospital also provides nonmedical treatments to help with pain, such as dry needling, laser, high-energy wave therapy, therapeutic ultrasound, electrical stimulation, and electroacupuncture.

A veterinarian can give recommendations for various dietary supplements and a home exercise plan, as well as provide dietary counseling to choose the most appropriate diet to maintain lean body weight in your pet.

"There is no one right recipe for every dog," Eckman said. "You have options, and you have to determine what works and what doesn't work." About Pet Talk

At this point, South has no trumps in his hand, having ruffed four diamonds and led trumps twice. When he next cashes the ten of spades, drawing West's last trump, he at the same time gets rid of his remaining heart and winds up taking the last four tricks with the A-K-Q-J of clubs. That's all there is to it!

"You know who you're going up against," Parker said. "It's something you know you have to be on your game, but you don't change too much because then you catch yourself trying to do too much and not be who you are."

Somewhere in there, early in the fourth quarter, James lost his familiar headband. He couldn't remember exactly when or how. Nor was it particularly important to him.

four-game series is done still in first place.

A night after breaking a sixgame losing streak with a seriesopening 8-7 victory in which the Rangers matched their run total during the skid, their only runs came on a play in the third when Ian Kinsler had a vicious collision at the plate.

Kinsler's face slammed into the mask of catcher Jaso while sliding feet-first. Kinsler needed three stitches near his left jaw and had blood on his jersey when he finally returned to the field to Thursday.

Losing the game would have been far worse.

"I guess the headband was the least of my worries at that point," James said.

Before that, he had been 12 minutes from hearing the familiar criticisms about not being able to get it done, from having to watch a team celebrate on his home floor again.

Then he changed the game and erased that story.

The Heat, who haven't lost consecutive games since Jan. 8 and 10, had play second base.

He scored on a two-run single by A.J. Pierzynski, having to hold up momentarily from second to make sure the ball dropped before running and then was waved home by third base coach Gary Pettis.

A's manager Bob Melvin was informed by umpires what was going on.

"No rule for it, more of a judgment. It's just like someone going to the bathroom I guess," he said. "It wouldn't have broken my heart if Kinsler came out."

> "He just made plays. I don't think there's any two ways to put it," Duncan said. "We were in the right position to close it out and he found a way to put his team over the top and we just didn't make enough plays to do that."

> Kawhi Leonard had 22 points and 11 rebounds for the Spurs. Tony Parker had 19 points and eight assists, but shot just 6 of 23 from the field.

> The Spurs had one final chance down 103-100, but Chris Bosh blocked Danny Green's 3-pointer from the corner as time expired.

> Bosh had said Green wouldn't get open the way he has all series and he didn't. Green finished 1 of 5 from behind the arc after going 25 of 38 on 3-pointers (65.8 percent) in the first five games.

> The Heat, the NBA's 66-win powerhouse during the regular season, will be playing a seventh game for the second straight round, having needed to go the distance to beat the Indiana Pacers in the East finals.

> Parker's 3-pointer over James tied it at 89 with 1:27 left. He then came up with a steal, spinning into the lane for a 91-89 lead with 58 seconds to go. Miami coughed it up again and Ginobili made two free throws, and he hit another after a third straight Miami turnover to put the
