WILL ROGERS

By Clayton Rand

The salt of the earth and the spice of life, Will Rogers seasoned our age with a new and lasting flavor.

Made of common clay from a rare mold, he had the uncommon touch of reaching alike the hearts of peasant and king, president and pauper. He spoke the language of the people.

Blessed with the divine gift of human understanding, he exposed the follies of men that we might see ourselves as others see us. Making millions laugh, millions wept when he died.

Knocking at the gates of paradise he probably said with a chuckle, "Wiley Post, he dropped my mings down there". And perhaps the archangels made him chief jester at the celestial court, to teach the prophets to take eternity with a sense of humor and a smile-making heaven a happier place in which to live.
