menced even in democratic America. The office of naval intelligence of the Navy department has available for the "collection and classification of information" during this fiscal year about $100,000 more than was appropriated for this purpose during the year just ended. And "G-2," or the intelligence service of the army general staff, has been active in Panama, Hawaii, the Philippines and in the continental

> United States. In this secret "war" the romanticized secret service plays, in peace> time, little or no part. Upon their own officers and enlisted men (mainly the officers), the two services largely depend for the direction of counter-espionage activities, although both act in fullest collaboration with the government's "policemen" of the Department of Justice.

The "G-2 officers handle the army's activities and officers specially assigned to intelligence duty act in the same capacity for the navy. The army has at least one intelligence officer at every post of any size; the navy has intelligence officers in every district and on duty with the fleet at sea.

To Prevent Leakage. While these officers are active in of regulations to prevent leakage of the navy, with newly established 'security units" in the fleet, rather strict censorship, restrictions upon visitors, and increased secrecy and some suspicion all down the line, has adopted in the past three years some of the most rigid regulations of its peace-time history.

The counter-espionage work of the intelligence services is, necessarily, as secret as it can be made. Much of it is the routine checking of minutiae; some of it is keeping tabs on foreign visitors or suspected aliens in cooperation with the Immigration and Naturalization Service and other agencies.

The navy-and the army, too-en larges its activities and broadens the scope of its intelligence work by employing suitable reserve offi cers-many of them in key positions for such work-to assist in counter-espionage measures.

four, "ain't never wore a bathing suit yet," and the mere fact that it was his birthday caused no change in his nudist principles of the last nine-odd decades. Twenty grandchildren stood on a bank of the Missouri river here and watched King present his annual aquatic exhibition, which included difficult dives. His eyes dimmed by cataracts and his hearing almost gone, King still takes a daily swim in the Missouri. in season.

Asked if he minded a few pic tures, King replied:

"Take all you want, if you want 'em in the raw. I'm ninety-four today and I ain't never wore a bathing suit yet-and I'm too old to start

Arms Race Is Called World Recovery Curb

Washington.-The world economic system has recovered about half its depression losses, but growing practices of nationalism and heavy expenditures for armaments are retarding further improvement the Foreign Policy association said. The gain, to date, according to the statement, has been reflected not only in industrialized countries but in those that produce raw materials as well. The statement, prepared by Winthrop W. Case, continued: "Increasing rearmament and the growing fears of war remain a real obstacle to healthy recovery and the full restoration of confidence.'
