Murals Portray Texas Life

Expressive of the four sections of Texas, their bountiful natural resources and historical background are the elaborate murals which adorn the walls of the $1,200,000 Hall of State, the dominating building of the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas. At the top a section of one of the giant murals found in the great hall portray two of Texas' foremost natural resources, oil and cotton. On the extreme left may be seen the prow of a sea-going freighter, representing the vast shipping industry of East Texas and the lower Gulf Coast. In the center mural, which hangs in the North Texas room, Old Man Texas is the predominant figure. The lower is unmistakably typical of the hearty West. The paintings adorning the walls of the Texas Building's great hall are reputed to be the largest in the world. They portray the story of Texas, both in the days of the republic and after statehood. Although opened but a few weeks ago, the magnificent Hall of State has won a place as one of the nation's foremost memorial edifices.

Passengers in the smoking compartment on my train were arguing about why railroad business is picking up.

A factory owner said it was because of this new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight. This is door-to-door service with no extra charge added to the freight bill.

A traveling salesman said it was because so many passenger and freight trains now run on faster schedules.

There was a school principal in the group and he said it was because train travel is so much cheaper for passengers. He said passenger fares are at the lowest point in history, with substantial reductions if you buy a round-trip ticket—and no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

One man, a farmer, said he liked something he could depend on, that's why he was traveling by train.

Another man, a newspaper reporter, said people were in favor of railroad travel because it is by far the safest. He quoted a lot of statistics from a book called, "Live and Let Live."

A banker we all know by name said railroad tax payments mean a lot in this state.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

Oregon Trail Was Most Extraordinary Highway

The Oregon Trail, it has been said, was the most extraordinary highway known to history. It originated with the spontaneous use of travelers; no transit ever located a foot of it; no level established its grade; no engineer sought out the fords or built any bridges or located the mountain passes; there was no grading to speak of nor any attempt at surfacing the roadbed, and the general good quality of this 2,000 miles of road from the Missouri to the Columbia was, to say the least, remarkable, observes a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

It was in its broader sense a national road, although the government was not responsible for a single foot of it. Following in the footsteps of the trappers and pioneers who discovered it, it became the route of a national movement of migration of people seeking to avail themselves of an almost uninhabited land, where the possibilities were unlimited. Only across Asia can highways of equal length be found, but on these are occasional settlements, while on the Oregon Trail of 1840 there was no civilized habitation except a few trading posts maintained by the trappers on the long stretch from Independence or Westport (now Kansas City) on the Missouri frontier to Fort Vancouver, the Hudson Bay company's post, a few miles from the mouth of the Columbia river.

People Id Not Credit Story About Hot Springs

Early in the '50's a solitary trapper pushed through an unknown, Indian-infested region in the north of the great Teton range in Wyoming. He entered a territory such as he in all his wanderings had never before seen or dreamed of. Below him was a valley from which rose a thousand smokes, he passed hot bubbling springs and saw that the smoke was jets of live steam. Further, coming to the valley's floor, he stood aghast, for with a roar a gigantic column of boiling water and steam rose in front of him 100 feet high.

Jim Bridger had discovered the Yellowstone!

Imagine his predicament when he returned to civilization with his tales of boiling hot springs "as big as a man's body, spouting higher than the flagpole at Virginia City." For Bridger had acquired a reputation far and wide as the inventor of unbelievably wild tales. And now that he had really seen the most marvelous thing of its kind in the world, a thing that outstripped even his wildest imaginings, no one would believe him!

Heart's Position

The heart lies obliquely within the chest, with its broader end or base in the direction of the right shoulder and the apex pointing downward, forward and toward the left. As the lower end can be felt beating the more easily, it is commonly believed that the heart is on the left side of the body, but on the contrary, it lies very nearly in the middle line. Ackerman's Popular Fallacies, dealing with this subject, states that the most muscular chamber, the left ventricle, and the largest artery, are to the left, making the beating of the heart more readily felt on the left side; but a median vertical plane through the breastbone would cut off the larger portion of the heart on the right side.

Sixth Century Sculpture

Evidence that Athenian sculptors were producing masterpieces as early as the Sixth century, B. C. is offered by an archaic Greek head in the collection of classical art at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Although the head is in a fragmentary condition, enough remains of the contours and modeling to give an idea of its original beauty. The crisp carving of the spiral curls bordering the forehead and the delicate modeling of the planes of the face testify to the artistic achievements of the ancient Greeks.

Habits of Bumble-Bees

The queen bumble-bee makes their nests in deserted field mice holes or other small depressions in the ground every fall. These nests are veritable little storehouses for the next hatch of bees, and the queen bee knows all the tricks of insulation, because she builds a circular wall of wax around her hatch of eggs. Underneath the eggs is a lump of pollen and honey—the food supply for the small forms of life that eventually develop into bumble-bees.

Skyscraper Not New

Mud skyscrapers that were hundreds of years old when log cabins began to dot the American wilderness still stand in the ancient city of Shiban in southern Arabia, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Constructed so as to withstand the raids of hostile Arab tribesmen, with windows high above the ground, the Shiban skyscrapers were of mud mixed with straw and maize, dried and hardened by the desert sun. They have withstood the tests of time and weather.

BACK SEAT DRIVER TURNS UP MISSING

Park Visitor Faces Embarrassing Situation.

Yellowstone Park.—The gentleman from Indiana was visiting Yellowstone national park with his wife, a young son, and younger daughter. After touring the entire loop of the park in his private automobile, he found himself at 8:30 p. m. at Yellowstone canyon with 42 miles between him and his destination for that night at West Yellowstone, Montana, western gateway of the park.

Wife and daughter expressed themselves as desirous of a nap enroute the 42 miles between the two points. They bundled themselves well into blankets and pillows, while the father and son were to pilot the family car.

Less than a mile from the canyon the two male members of the party found something of interest along the roadway, stepped out of the car to explore, and returned to continue the journey with just a look at the pile of blankets in the rear seat to assure them that all was well with the women folk.

At the West Yellowstone gateway, the ranger politely stepped up with the routine question: "May I see your permit, please?"

The driver did not answer. Instead he took a quick glance to the rear seat, and exploded: "It can't be! This couldn't happen to me! It simply can't be!"

"May I see your permit, please?" pressed the ranger, unaware of any difficulty.

"It's simply not true," continued the driver without answering the ranger. "Nothing like this could happen to me. She's got the permit."

"If you'll pardon me, I don't understand," the ranger came back.

Then followed the tale of the missing daughter and mother who held the park entry permit. Telephone conversations between the ranger and another at Canyon solved the difficulty. Mother and daughter had awakened when the two in the front seat had gone out to explore. They, too, decided to look around; but did not get back in time to continue the journey.

"That gentleman doesn't know what a jewel of a wife he's got," is the way Frank Overhansley, district ranger at West Yellowstone, sums it up. "Any man who can drive 42 miles without knowing whether or not the backseat driver is with him ought to keep a close eye on his precious companion."

Land Planes Proposed to Link Pacific Isles

Honolulu.—Fast land planes, instead of heavier and slower seaplanes, may be used on America's proposed new air route from Honolulu to New Zealand and Australia, according to William T. Miller, superintendent of airways of the Department of Commerce.

Miller said there were two specific reasons why land planes rather than sea planes might be used on the new 5,000-mile route to the Antipodes. These were:

The islands already have landing areas that could be used. Water surrounding the islands is too rough for seaplanes to make a safe landing and tie up for refueling and inspection.

The government plans to level off the areas and prepare them for landing fields.

"Even in their present condition," Miller asserted, "it would not hesitate to land a plane on any one of the three islands. The possible landing fields are a mile long, facing directly into the prevailing winds, and are sufficiently wide for all purposes."

Cashes $1,000 Award for 28-Year-Old Deed

Laredo, Texas.—An investment in courage made twenty-eight years ago in saving a young woman from a runaway has been cashed by John W. Freeman, itinerant scissors grinder.

He has just claimed a $1,000 award made at the time of the rescue by the Carnegie Hero Fund commission and has bought an acreage and built a modest home.

The award was made after Freeman, at Fort Smith, Ark., grabbed the runaway horse before it could do much injury to Miss Johnnie Porter, seventeen-year-old daughter of a prominent business man, who was being dragged behind her overturned carriage. Freeman himself was stunned.

On the report of Fort Smith residents, the Carnegie commission awarded him a hero medal and $1,000 but Freeman said: "Gentlemen, I want you to keep that money and give it to me when I get older and need it."

It's a Pipe! Warden Solves His Problem

Columbus, O.—Warden J. C. Woodard of the Ohio state penitentiary has a versatile "family." A 176-foot standpipe needed repainting recently, and the warden thought outside aid would be needed. Before calling for help Woodard went through the inmates' personal records and found he had many laborers, including 100 steeplejacks—solving the painting problems.

Card Playing Once Only Pastime for the Nobles

According to the authority of Strutt the general opinion as to the origin of playing cards is that they were invented by a painter, one Gringonneur, for the diversion of crazy Charles VI of France, about the year 1392; but Baron Heinekin places their use in Germany a score of years earlier, while allusion is made in British Chronicles to the game of "Four Kings" played in 1377.

Experts in Asiatic history declare that cards were used in countries of the East long before they reached Europe. Warton suggests the Arabians as the inventors of cards, his theory being that they taught the Greeks, and that during the Crusades the game was learned by the soldiers from western Europe.

In the earliest history of card playing it is safe to presume (writes May Wynne in "Mine") that packs of cards were not easily produced, since they had to be drawn and painted by hand. So cards virtually remained a diversion of the nobles till the importation of cheaper cards, which must have been a considerable trade, since, in 1463, we find the cardmakers of London petitioning Edward IV against the importation of cards.

And so with comparative rapidity the fashion of card playing spread through England till the reign of Henry VII we read that it had become one of the favorite amusements at court.

Imitation being the sincerest form of flattery, the public showed itself a ready train of flatterers in the respect of card playing, and it became necessary in the reign of Henry VIII to stop apprentices from card playing excepting at Christmastide and then only in their masters' houses.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Gekelemukpechunk, Name of an Ohio Indian Village

Gekelemukpechunk was the name of a village of the Delaware Indians in Ohio about 1770-73, and the residence of Netawatwee, the principal chief of the tribe.

A handbook prepared by the Bureau of American Ethnology suggests that Gekelemukpechunk was "perhaps identical with White Eyes' town, which formerly existed at the site of Duncan Falls, Zanesville." But the missionary, David Zeisberger, and other authorities, give the location of this sometime capital of the Delawares as the junction of the Muskingum river and Big Stillwater creek—near Newcomerstown, in Tuscarawas county.

Zeisberger states that the creek was called by the Delawares "Gekelenukpechunk Sipo," and C. H. Mitchener, in "Historic Events in the Tuscarawas and Muskingum Valleys," asserts that in naming the stream Stillwater, the white settlers simply translated the Indian name literally. The pronunciation of the name is not a formidable feat after a trial or two. Accent the syllables "kel" and "pe."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Heat From Hot Springs

A unique feature of Iceland that while the mountains are covered with snow for the greater part of the year, there are numerous burning sulphur beds and bubbling hot springs. Always ingenious, many Icelanders obtain heat for their homes direct from these hot springs. Icelanders also use their hot springs as laundries, and it is not an uncommon sight to see housewives doing the week's wash with hot water supplied free by nature.

Where Armadillos Live

Armadillos are found in South and Central America. The name is a diminutive of the Spanish word, "armada," meaning "armed" and referring to the bony shell protecting this animal. They are timid, nocturnal creatures, living on insects, roots, worms, carrion, etc. When pursued they run rapidly and burrow into the ground. Most species are considered good eating by the natives. There are some species of armadillo that range as far north as Texas.

Loudest Animal Fights

The fiercest and loudest animal fights on record take place when a giant blue whale is attacked by a school of five or six killers. During such an encounter the churning fountains of foam and spray may be seen for more than ten miles, while the crashes made by the 100-ton body of the blue whale as he falls back into the water after leaping into the air are sometimes heard for more than five miles.—Collier's Weekly.

An Early Balloonist

John Wise, one of the earliest balloonists in this country, made his first ascension in May, 1835, at Philadelphia, reaching an altitude which he estimated at one mile. The next year he soared above Lancaster and northerly winds carried his little main bag to a point near Belair, Md. While the balloon was being deflated it exploded, but Wise escaped.
