Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Dr. Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Bird Builds Dance Hall
Australia has no lions or monkeys or elephants or any of the fierce animals. But what she lacks in man-eaters Australia makes up in many strange and beautiful birds and mammals which are found nowhere else in the world. One of these is the bower-bird, notes a writer in Pearson's London Weekly. This beautiful creature is a great architect, and the male bird builds itself a bower of arched sticks in which it dances and plays. The bower is merely a playhouse, or dance hall, and is not a nest. The bower bird decorates his dance hall with an artistic collection of shells, berries, leaves and bits of blue paper—it likes blues and greens. Also it paints the sticks with a mixture of powdered charcoal and saliva, using its beak as a brush.

An Old Indian Custom
An Indian widow was forbidden by custom to marry for a year after her husband's death because the spirit of her departed spouse was believed to stay with her that long. During the year she could not accept gifts of meat from anyone nor could she even buy it; she had to get it herself. If she lived through the year, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and observed all the rigid customs, she would then be given gifts by both the men and women in the tribe, and she would usually get another husband, because the next spouse would know that she was obedient and he could depend on her. Indian men were not held down by such strait jacket rules. They could even put up their squaws as stakes in gambling.

A Square Deal For Capital

Texas can attract foreign capital by dealing fairly with corporations. The attitude of a state legislature toward capital has a great deal to do with forming the attitude of capital toward proposed investments within a state. Experience Texas and other states have had in the past, when unwise legislation drove out large corporations, ought not to be forgotten at a time when there is a disposition among the more progressive cities of Texas to seek new industries.

If this movement cannot be called state-wide, the kind of taxation the legislature levies on capital has to be considered by Houston, Dallas, Beaumont and other Texas cities that want to grow by expanding their industries. What the All-South Development Council of Dallas calls "the Texas legislative habit of depending on punitive, single-shot natural resource tax measures to carry pyramiding state financial burdens" discourages new capital from making investments in the state.

A certain type of legislative mind can see in a big oil company, a sulphur company or some other corporation of this kind merely something to tax—and on which taxes should be piled just as long as the corporations can stand up under the load. This type of legislative mind can never regard large corporations as a blessing to the state because they create payrolls, pay a considerable share of taxes and are otherwise helpful to the communities in which they are located. A corporation is simply something to be "soaked," and the more it is "soaked" the better pleased the corporation-bating legislator is.

The fact that oil companies are taking away irreplaceable natural resources encourages corporation-bating. But natural resources that remain undeveloped have only a potential value. Left alone they do not create wealth, provide employment and contribute to human progress. The natural resources of Texas would still be to a large extent underground and undeveloped if foreign capital had not provided means for developing and using these products. Why not give both local and foreign capital a square deal?—From the Beaumont Enterprise, August 6.

Early Fed Cattle Have Prospect of Exceptional Market

College Station, August 18.—Texas feeders have prospects of an exceptional market for such beefs as they can finish out by the end of the year and the first two months of 1938, according to G. W. Barnes, animal husbandman of the Texas A. and M. Extension Service.

Barnes, who has recently completed a tour of the major grain and livestock areas of the state, reports that the grain crop is good over a major portion of Texas.

"The good grain crop over a large part of the State, in combination with the shortage of grain for early feeding in the corn belt, makes this an ideal year for Texas feeders," Barnes said. He warned, however, that feeders should start their operations at once in order to get their animals well finished and on the market before corn belt beefs begin to move.

The excellent grain prospects in the corn belt have strengthened the demand for feeder and stocker animals, Barnes pointed out. Texas normally sells about two million feeders and stockers each year, he said and feeds out around 150,000 beefs.

If beefs are placed on feed as soon as the grain supply warrants, so that the animals can be marketed before early April of 1938, Barnes believes that Texas feeders could profitably finish out from 300,000 to 500,000 animals.

A New Service to Our Customers

BEGINNING AUGUST 1, 1937 every check you give on your account at this bank, and every check you turn in which may be drawn on an out-of-town bank is photographed. This is done on a small moving picture film. This permanent picture record will be kept in our files indefinitely.

More and more these days, your cancelled check takes the place of receipts. But sometimes a cancelled check may be mislaid or become lost just when you need it most.

Should in time to come, you wish to see any particular check its reproduction can be thrown on a screen in the bank for your inspection, or if necessary a photograph can be made to submit as evidence.
