is no peace." Patrick Henry might well be making his historic address on the contemporary stage instead of the pre-revolutionary House of Burgess, for everywhere there are eruptions which threaten to engulf the world in another consuming conflagration.

Within the past fortnight things have been going off with the rapidity of a string of firecrackers. First the rebuffs in the canal; the riots in Poland; the demonstrations which turned into rebellion in Hungary: the invasion of the Sinai peninsula by Israel: the projected invasion of the Suez Canal territory by Britain and France.

The United Nations, being primarily a deliberative body, has ground slowly to "The gentlemen cry peace.... and there produce a strong U.S.-sponsored resolution calling upon Israel and Egypt to cease fire and to urge Britain and France to restram their advances upon the canal. By the same token, an overwhelming majority greeted the U.S. proposal to urge Soviet withdrawal of troops from Hungary.

Russia has expressed a willingness to dispatch troops as part of any U. N. action to aid Egypt. Of course, Russia is against the U.N. pledging any sort of military or wake of Nasser's seizure of the Suez other action in Hungray where she is doing the same thing to Hungary, on a more inhumane and ruthless scale, than Israel, France and Britain combined have mustered against Egypt

> All of this is as distressing as it is precarious, and the most distressing feature is that it seems to pressage a wave of unilateral resort to arms to settle international differences.

Maybe Parents Do Have A Say

to common sense about teen-agers. In the heyday of the permissive parenthood fad a few years back, the adolescent became quite a privileged character. It was practically the law of the land that his misdeeds-from mischief to mahyem-were really his parents' fault. Obviously he just hadn't had enough love and attention at

Since most parents are well-meaning and conscientiously concerned with their children's welfare, the majority took dutifully to heart the deluge of "literature" admonishing them against rules and punishment. But lately it has become apparent the relaxation of the rules hasn't made teen-agers happy, after all.

A number of national publications have recently found through polls and interviews that most youngsters actually want their parents to assert a reasonable authority and to lay down clear-cut rules and principles for their guidance.

And Minnesota has recently held a agree.

There is a distinct trend nowadays back state conference of adults and student leaders to set up a "code" of general rules for teen-agers. The code, designed to supply the answer to the "all the other kids do" argument, lays down the basic rule that parents should know where their sons and daughters are at night and with whom they are associating.

It also provides: Allowances and car privileges should be based on family finances and the degree of responsibility shown by the youngster. Most social affairs on school nights should end by 10 o'clock. On other nights, deadline should be midnight for high schoolers, 11 o'clock for junior high students. Unless there are other plans with a time limit specifically approved by parents, the youngsters should come straight home from parties, dances,

Minnesota's idea is a good one. If the parent is no longer to be low man on the totem pole, he is going to have to establish a set of generally acceptable rules on which he and most of his neighbors James Marlow

One night last week, I dragged myself from bed in the wee sma' hours of the

I did so to go out and look at the skies. I wanted to marvel at the wonders of the morning sky and particularly the magnificent beauty of two planets which graced the heavens. I wanted to see Jupiter and Venus while these two big orbs were in close proximity to one another.

Despite the chill and the difficulty of rousing oneself from sound sleep, I was well repaid. There the two magnificent planets were, one just above the other, so close that it would appear a man's hand would conceal both. A short distance from these planets was Sirius, most brillians of all the night stars twinkling in its blue setting with all the scintillating colors of the Kohinoor itself. And just above Sirius the most beautiful and eye catching of all the heaven's constellations - Orion. His jeweled belt was sharp and clear and I could almost imagine that I could see that endless sea of mysterious and awesome mistiness that is the amazing nebulae in the very heart of that constellation. And, of course, spanning the skies from horizon to horizon the thousands of other stars and the dozens of familiar and not so familiar constellations. It was indeed well worth all of the effort that it required to get me from the warm bed to the open night A long, long time ago, a young American poet admonished those who were fearful of the stern realities of life to go forth at night and look upon nature. And long before this young rhymer wrote his lines, David had sung that the heavens show the glory of God.

Most of us go through life with never a deed if we looked long and often at the heavens above and marvelled for the sheer joy of it at the wonders of the endless universe spread out before our eyes. This little ball on which we live out our brief span of existence is but a mote measured against the giants in space.

It is breathtaking to me to realize that the gay flashing light I see from that tiny star tonight started on its journey to my eye perhaps 50 years ago. Or that a cataclysmic explosion on a distant star occurred long before Columbus set out on his historic voyage and was not known on earth until just two decades ago. It had taken that many years for the light of that tremendous blast to reach earth although throughout nearly 500 years it had been rushing toward us at 186,000 miles per

I marvel at my own insignificance when I gaze heavenward. The warm rays of the sun which I feel on my back began their journey to me seven minutes ago. And I know that our sun, for all its majestic grandeur, dwindled into no importance when compared with some of his giant brothers in the family of stars.

Yes, it is well to walk under the open skies and look upward at the dome of the jewel studded night. It is worth the risk of stumbling over some earthbound object because for a few fleeting seconds, we are freed from the commonplace of our existence and permitted to witness a miracle.

That gorgeous crescent which graces the evening sky and so long has lent an air of romance and loveliness to the night scene - consider it for what it really is. A lonely little world, ribbed with soaring, serrated mountains, dotted with vast expanses of desolate desert. A slave of our own earth - forever bound to travel in a fixed and inflexible circular journey in space around and around the earth. It may require wealth and leisure to travel to the far places of earth and gaze on the worldly wonders to be seen. The wonderful masterpieces of nature and man on this orb are not available for all of us to study. But the poor, as well as the rich, are free on any night to gaze as long as they like on the greatest marvel of all the universe itself

Walter Lippmann Second Thoughts In Washington

Eisenhower declared it last week, is now seek to condemn not only Israel but markedly different from what until then Britain and France as well, rallying the it had been supposed to be. The terms of world in partnership with the Soviet Union our U.N. resolution-the resolution which Britain and France vetoed-meant that Israel had committed an illegal act, one which it had no moral right to commit The inspired comment from official quarters in Washington accused Britain, France, and Israel of aggression. Everything pointed towards a policy in which the United States would lead the accusers, perhaps by applying economic sanctions and probably by action in the General As-

But what the President said defined a quite different American attitude: "As it is the manifest right of any of these nations to take such decisions and actions, it is likewise our right, if our judgment so dictates, to dissent." If it is the manifest right of these nations to do what they are doing, then, of course, the President cannot and will not attempt to have them judged aggressors. What he will do is to "dissent," to point out that "the action taken can scarcely be reconciled with the principles and purposes of the United Na-of leading a movement to have them demn, and punish but as an organ to the second thoughts of the Administration is wiser than the first angry and unbalanced reaction in Washington earlier. If the original line of policy, which was emhodied in the Lodge resolution, had pre-against them. This would have made our present differences, which are not now radical, into an irreparable conflict.

What, taking the situation as we now find it, is the American interest? In the first place, to refrain from moral judgment. If we do not, we shall find ourselves arguing that Nasser is not an aggressor when he crosses his frontier, which he has been doing several times a week, provided only that he uses small forces every time he crosses the frontier. The true friends of the United Nations will recognize that Nasser by his raids into Israel, his intervention in North Africa, by his intrigues in Jordan and Syria, has created problems of security which the United Nations have not been able to solve. It would be a mortal blow to the United Nations if it transpired that the practical effect of its operation was to invect an aggressor like Nasser with immunity

Therefore, in the interests of the United Nations, which is also a vital interest of the United States, let us insist that it be an organ for the solution of the problems ot Suez and Palestine and not a tribunal of judgment.

The Franco-British action will be judged by the outcome-in the first instance whether the military objectives are achieved in a reasonable time and at not too great a cost. If they are not achieved the decision will have been a gigartic blunder which may well have catastrophic consequences. The American interest, though we have disserted from the decision itself, is that France and Great Britain should now succeed. However much we may wish they had not started. we cannot now wish that they should fail. (Copyright, 1956, New York Herald Tribune)

Inez Robb Money Pours In To Aid Hungarians

The wild, frustrated longing of Americans everywhere to do something - anything! - to help the magnificent Hungarian rebels fight Communist oppression is finding an outlet in a midtown Manhattan office that could pass for Bedlam. This is the office of the emergency fund for the Free Hungarian People, established 10 days ago by the International Rescue Committee, and into which more than $100,000 in cash and checks poured during its first 24 hours of operation!

If the office could pass for Bedlam, it is only because of the staggering response of the American people to an appeal which gives them a chance to aid the fighting Hungarians. The office has not only been snowed under by the financial response in its appeal for $1,000,000, but by volunteers who are willing to do anything from slitting envelopes - to in the case of a formidable corporation president badgering shipping lines for space to carry food, clothing and supplies.

But it is the letters that come with the financial donations, be they $1 from an individual or $5,000 from a corporation, that shake the heart and illuminate Ameri ca's devotion to freedom.

"This is from me and my parents." says a letter accompanying three $1 bills. "We hope it will be of some help to a brave people who are fighting our battle,

"I am a student and this is all I can spare," reads a note enclosing a check for $35. "I think it is imperative for American citizens to help a people who are trying to free themselves against Inc., 62 West 45th Street, New York, 36, great odds. I feel I must help other young N.Y. students who are fighting for their lives (Copyright, 1956, By United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

says another letter, including a check for $100. "and I am sending this in gratitude for the substantial help we received from European sympathizers in our Revolu-letters. They include "I am eager to help," "This is given so gladly," "I long to do more" and "Thank you for giving me the chance to help the Hungarians. "Can we send guns?" is a frequent, eager query. The answer, of course, is "No." Ever since the campaign began, under the sponsorship of Adm. Richard E. Byrd, Gen. "Wild Bill" Donovan, Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Gen. Carl Spaatz, Henry Luce, Herman Steinkraus, Angier Biddle Duke and Leo Cherne, the waiting room of the office has been jammed with persons wanting to volunteer services as well as mon-life. Baby foods are as badly needed in Hurgary as madicines and bandages. Ambulances, food and warm winter clothing are among the other vital necessities which the fund will provide for the Hungarians, who have been fighting everynan's battle for liberty.

How To Play The Game Called 'Flation'

J. A. Livingston

"How times change," exlaimed Alice, as the Carpenter turned back the hands of the clock from Daylight Saving. "They used to be tolerated, smiled at, and called 'pushers on string.' as if they were little children playing Flation. But now they're mean, nasty ogres pulling on a string. The game has got too rough."

'What's Flation?" asked the Mad Hat-

"I just told you," replied Alice. "It's a game. It's played by seven men who sit in a marble temple-the Cathedral of Credit-on Constitution Ave., in Washington. This is the Federal Reserve Board. It decides whether interest rates ought to go up or down; whether we're building too many houses, spending too much money on machinery and new factories; whether flation's getting out of hand and becoming inflation or deflation.

"And what has that to do with pushing on strings?" asked the Red Queen.

"That's puppeteering," replied Alice. "When the Federal Reserve Board plays Flation, sometimes it tells the banks to make loans freely. At the same time it encourages business men to borrow. During the Great Depression, the Federal Reserve kept pushing and pushing, 'flating and 'flating, but the public wouldn't borrow. The puppets didn't respond. So the Reserve members were called pushers on string.

"They should have pulled on the strings," interjected the Carpenter. "That's the way to move puppets.' "Exactly," responded Alice. "And that's why the Bell tolls." "The Bell, the Bell! What's the Bell?

The Carpenter nudged Alice. "Look," he whispered. "Look at her face. She'll be calling out guards for you. You'd better make sense.

"If it please Your Majesty," said Alice, the Carpenter, "by boxing it in." "Bell's idea exactly," answered Alice "Only he says it pretty: He says the Federal Reserve Board is to be independent. but completely. The chairman is to be a member of the National Economic Council. which would include the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, and other top-ranking economic policy makers of the Administration-all equal. This council would report directly to the President and the President would have the final responsibility for its decisions." The Red Queen brightened. "We could use such a Council in Wonderland. The Federal Reserve Board would be absolutely free to act provided it acted as I pleased. It would be outnumbered, therefore it could be outvoted. That would make it independent of its own wishes. A most ingenious proposal." "Buy, Your Majesty, think of last spring," said Alice. 'Then, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of President Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers insisted Martin pulled the strings when he should have pushed. But Martin kept pulling. He insisted on worrying about inflation, not deflation. He prolonged Flation. He was right, the others wrong.

"Did the Federal Rserve Board react to Bell's proposal?" asked the White Queen. "Did it react!" exclaimed the Mad Hatter and Carpenter in unison.

William McChesney Martin Jr., said Alice, "is a colorful chairman of the Board. First, his face inflated. Then, he turned pale, then red, then blue, till at last he became the Purple Martin." "A bird I love very much," said the Red Queen. "Let the Bell stop clanging."

BERN, Switzerland (P) - The Swiss government today invited the Big Four Powers and India to hold an immediate summit conference in Switzerland to meet the danger of a third world war.

In telegrams to the government heads of the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and India, the Swiss offered assistance in organizing a conference similar to the Big Four summit conference at Geneva in July 1955. This time India was included as representative of the Asian and African nations which met at the Bandung conference. U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold was also informed of the Swiss invitation.

WOMEN WHO COOK ELECTRICALLY KNOW

Electric Cooking is THRIFTY!

Fast, efficient electric cooking helps you save in many ways! With accuratelycontrolled electric heat, meats and other foods cook with a minimum of shrinkage, giving you more servings per pound. Oven cooking . . . and top-of-therange cooking, too . . . can be automatically controlled to eliminate costly cooking failures. And clean electric heat saves on kitchen cleaning and redecorating expense. It costs only about 3c per meal to enjoy the cleanliness, accuracy and carefree convenience of modern electric cooking. Try it . . .

For a full measure of cooking pleasure ... COOK ELECTRICALLY you'll love it!

See your favorite electric range dealer soon for the model that's exactly right for your family's needs and budget. You'll find electric cooking one of the nicest things about living better ... electrically!
