Ike Pledges Building Peace With Justice

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower pledged today his second term will be dedicated to "the building of a peace with justice" to thwart "international communism and the power it controls."

In his inaugural address, Eisenhower painted a picture of a prosperous, strong America.

But he added "this is not the whole of our world."

"In too much of the earth there is war, discord, danger," Eisenhower said. "New forces and new nations stir and strive across the earth, with power to bring, by their fate, great good or great evil to the free world's future."

The entire world is divided and "the divisive force is international communism and the power that it controls," Eisenhower went on.

"The designs of that power, dark in purpose, are clear in practice. It strives to seal forever the fate of those it has enslaved. It strives to break the ties that united the free. And it strives to capture—to exploit for its own great power—all forces of change in the world, especially the needs of the hungry and the hopes of the oppressed."

The President entitled his address, "The Price of Peace." He prepared it for delivery to massed thousands at the Capitol and to a nationwide radio and TV audience.

Today's ceremonial oath-taking followed yesterday's private swearing in ceremony at the White House.

Eisenhower said the world of international communism "has itself been shaken by a fierce and mighty force, the readiness of men who love freedom to pledge their lives to that love."

Alluding then to Soviet brutality in Hungary, Eisenhower said: "The unconquerable will of heroes has struck with the swift, sharp thrust of lightning. Budapest is no longer merely the name of a city; henceforth it is a new and shining symbol of man's yearning to be free."

"Thus across all the globe there harshly blow the winds of change. And, we—though fortunate to be our back to them."

Pledging that America, in its dealings with all the peoples of the earth will "ever speak truth and serve justice," Eisenhower told his audience:

"We look upon this shaken earth, and we declare our firm and fixed purpose—the building of peace with justice in a world where moral law prevails.

"The building of such a peace is a bold and solemn purpose. To proclaim it is easy. To serve it will be hard. And to attain it, we must be aware of its full meaning — and ready to pay its full price."

Noting that he had just sworn "my solemn oath of service to you," Eisenhower said the United States will "prove true to the honorable purposes that bind and rule us as a people in all this time of trial through which we pass."

Eisenhower said the goal is "the favor of Almighty God" and that "the hopes in our hearts fashion the deepest prayers of our people" in the struggle for world peace.

"We live in a land of plenty," the President said, but rarely has the earth known such perils as of today.

"In our nation, work and wealth abound. Our population grows. Commerce crowds our rivers and rails, our skies, harbors and highways. Our soil is fertile, our agriculture productive. The air rings with the song of our industry."

Publisher Due Warrant Issued For Blackmail

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A warrant charging blackmail is on its way here today to be served on publisher Herman Greenspun.

Lander County Sheriff Don Maestretti said the complaint charges Greenspun and private investigator Wilbur McNich with attempting to blackmail Dist. Judge John Sexton.

Sheriff Maestretti said the warrant was mailed Saturday from Battle Mountain, Nev., to the Clark County sheriff's office in Las Vegas for service.

Judge Sexton presided over a recent libel case in which Greenspun was ordered to pay $180,000 to Las Vegas Atty. George Franklin.

Greenspun termed the action "the worst type of harassment of a newspaper."

He said that his paper, the Las Vegas Sun, conducted an "investigation" of the judge. "The results of this investigation came before him in open court in the form of a motion," said Greenspun Saturday.

"I can't imagine where he could possibly find blackmail in anything that came before the court."

He said the motion, which asked that the judge disqualify himself from the case on grounds of bias and prejudice, was denied by Sexton.

McNich, also known as Perry Pym, worked for the publisher in gathering information aimed at obtaining a new trial.

"Neither myself nor any employee of the Sun would ever attempt to blackmail anyone," Greenspun said.

President Begins Another 4 Years

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower, in a solemnly worded inaugural address, today warned that "rarely has this earth known such peril." He dedicated his second term to countering that danger with strength at home and help for all nations struggling to be free.

Eisenhower expressed friendship for the people—but not the government—of Soviet Russia. Massed thousands, on the steps of the Capitol and standing on the wet grounds in front, listened in hushed silence as the President spoke.

His address followed the public ceremony in which he took the oath of office for a second term. Sunday morning, on the constitutional date for his inauguration, private rites were held in the White House for Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon.

The skies were overcast today. There were occasional spatters of rain.

But the sun was struggling to come through as the President arrived at the Capitol for the ceremonial swearing-in.

There were thousands in his immediate audience, and his words were broadcast and telecast to the nation. The Voice of America planned broadcasts in many foreign languages.

Huge crowds assembled early around the Capitol and along the traditional highway of processions, Pennsylvania avenue. The President, Nixon, their wives, and congressional leaders, drew thunderous cheers as they drove from the White House.

The Eisenhowers and the Nixons came in separate cars.

The wives sat nearby as the two were sworn in.

Chief Justice Earl Warren administered the oath to Eisenhower after Sen. Knowland (R-Calif.) had sworn in Nixon.

Eisenhower was sworn in at 12:23 p.m.

There was a great burst of handclapping and some cheers.

Eisenhower's inaugural address was couched in almost a religious quality, the language of a man looking beyond the borders of his own country and his own time.

Eisenhower, preceded by a fleet of motorcycle police, arrived at the Capitol at 11:46 a.m.

His son and daughter-in-law, Maj. and Mrs. John Eisenhower and their three children, David, Barbara and Susan, were already on hand.

Congress members and other government dignitaries had earlier marched to their places. The House members were led by a clerk carrying the official mace.

State governors, some 40 strong, filed onto the stands from the rotunda.

Immediately behind them, the members of the diplomatic corps

60 Per Cent Of Polish Voters Okay Anti-Soviet Red Regime

WARSAW (AP) — More than 60 per cent of Poland's 17,448,000 voters appear to have endorsed Wladyslaw Gomulka's Communist leadership in the first popular test of his "communism without tyranny" policy.

Unofficial but reliable reports said more than 11 million of those voting yesterday for a new 430-member Parliament apparently cast the official ballot without change. Gomulka's regime had warned sternly against exercising the modest right to cross names off the Red-dominated single list of candidates.

About 16 million voters — nearly 80 per cent of those qualified — went to the polls. Both the Red hierarchy and the Roman Catholic Church had called for a big turnout.

The Communist-controlled Budapest radio claimed that 90 per cent of the electorate voted the straight ticket.

Official results are expected by Tuesday.

Those who refused to go along with Gomulka boldly struck off the names of candidates they did not like, uncoerced by any direct official measures. Their protest vote did not alter the fact that Gomulka's United Workers (Communist) party will have a substantial majority in the new Parliament.

Ballots which were unmarked automatically were credited to the Communist candidates, who headed the lists. Winners in the other parties admitted to the National Front ticket—the Democrats and the United Peasants—are committed to the Red line.

Only scattered demonstrations against the National Front were reported, and there were no reports of disorders. Precautionary patrols set in some potential trouble spots did not have to go into action.

Gomulka, now 51, has advocated a course of some independence from Moscow dictation. He was swept into power three months ago in an upsurge that kicked out-right Stalinists off the party's Politburo. Last week he joined visiting Red Chinese Premier Chou En-lai in lambasting U.S. policy in the Middle East and endorsing the Soviet-installed regime of Premier James Kadar in Hungary.

The balloting, despite the lopsided outcome, had more of the atmosphere of free voting than the two postwar rubber-stamp parliamentary elections of the Stalinist era. The present regime feared the voters might use too freely the new right to strike names from the official list, granted as a concession to democratic principles.

Gomulka in an election eve appeal that was rebroadcast repeatedly in effect warned that a defeat for too many Communist candidates would invite Soviet intervention.

called, conducted the long investigation which resulted in Adams' arrest. The inquiry involved thumbing through the wills of between 300 and 400 persons who had died in Eastbourne in the last 20 years.

The detective said the doctor told him a lot of gifts he had received in patients' wills had been in lieu of fees. Adams said the chest of silver Mrs. Morrell left him was of no use to him since he was a bachelor.

Hannam also testified that Adams told him: "I have one thing in life, and God knows I have vowed to Him I would, that is to relieve pain and try to let these dear people live as long as possible."

Today was Adams' 58th birthday. As he sat impassively in the courtroom, his attorney handed him a bundle of letters, including several birthday cards.

Doctor's Confession Related To Hearing

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — One of Scotland Yard's ace detectives testified today that Dr. John Bodkin Adams admitted giving an 81-year-old patient a huge amount of heroin in the last two days of her life.

Detective Supt. Herbert Hannam said he confronted the portly society physician with the fact he had prescribed 75 tablets, each one-sixth of a grain, for Mrs. Edith Morrell the day before she died in 1950.

Scotland Yard maintains that Adams, inflamed by greed, pumped massive doses of narcotics into three patients and was responsible for their deaths.

Five justices of the peace are holding the hearing in this Victorian seaside resort to determine if there is sufficient evidence to bring the 260-pound doctor to trial on a charge of murdering Mrs. Morrell, who left him a chest of antique silver. Her son later gave Adams a Rolls-Royce.

Italy Party Girl Scandal Trial Begins

VENICE (AP) — The Wilma Montesi scandal case finally went to trial today after 2 1/2 years. A three-judge panel ruled against the defense on a legal point in the death of the 20-year-old party girl, and then postponed taking evidence until tomorrow.

Francesco Carnelutti, defense attorney and one of Italy's ace lawyers, tried to separate the case from the three chief defendants from the case of nine lesser defendants. The judges said no.

Carnelutti said he made the request so the nine could be called as witnesses and be required to tell the truth. As defendants they do not have to tell the truth under Italian law.

Chief defendants in the case are Gianpiero Piccioni, 36-year-old jazz pianist son of former Foreign Minister Alcide De Gasperi; former Rome Police Chief Savio Polito; and Ugo Montagna, prominent Rome man-about-town and friend of influential Italians.

Nine others were accused of giving false testimony during 16 months of preliminary investigation which jarred Italian politics and Rome society.

The trial was shifted to Venice because feeling was running high in Rome.

Some 200 witnesses were called, including high officers of the Carabinieri (national police), three former police chiefs and an Italian movie actress.

The court's task was to try to find how the 20-year-old Montesi died in 1953 and who if anyone tried to hide the truth.

Wilma's body was found on a black-sand beach near Ostia, the seaside playground near Rome. Police listed her death as an accidental drowning. Scandal erupted when a young magazine editor, Silvano Muto, wrote that she had died at a high society do and sex orgy.

Only one president ever sought a third term: Franklin D. Roosevelt. He was elected to a third term in 1940. He died in 1945 shortly after being elected to a fourth term.

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Presidents customarily add, "so help me God," as Eisenhower did yesterday in a private ceremony starting his new term.

Spain Reverses Expulsion Order

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — American pianist Gyorgy Sandor says the Spanish government has decided not to enforce an order expelling him and his wife from the country.

The expulsion order alleged that Mrs. Sandor, the divorced wife of the late Archduke Karl Pius of Hapsburg-Lorraine, was a bigamist under Spanish law. Spain forbids divorce, and Mrs. Sandor was considered a Spanish citizen through her marriage to the archduke, a pretender to the Spanish throne.

The Sandors, both born in Hungary, arrived several days ago to visit Mrs. Sandor's two daughters by the archduke. They are wards of the Spanish state since the archduke's death in December 1953.

Invoking an expulsion order that has been on the books since 1953, the government ordered them to leave Spain by 3:30 p.m. yesterday. The order was suspended after the U.S. Embassy intervened at the pianist's request.

The Sandors plan to leave Thursday for London, where he will fulfill concert engagements.

Fan club members surround Ingrid Bergman with home-made signs at Idlewild Airport, New York, after the Swedish-born actress arrived for her first visit to the United States in nearly eight years. Miss Bergman planned to be in the U. S. only 34 hours to receive a film critics award.

The March of Dimes received a healthy shot in the arm from the KSTV-TV telethon Saturday night. Tabulations Monday showed pledges had aggregated $2,346.78, including $181 at Coahoma. Until the last, there were contributions trickling in.

At Coahoma, the American Legion helped gather the contributions. Ten volunteers worked at the telephone office in Big Spring to handle the calls and relay them to the guardsmen. At the studios, more than 100 performers staged a varied show which included several bands and choirs. Besides a host of solo instrumental and vocal selections, the group numbers included the Howard County Junior College Choir, the Cosden Chorus, the Bowman Bros. trio from Lubbock, Boy Nix's band, the Circle 4 Ramblers, Tony Starr and his teen-age band, Heine Roger's band, Manuel Pagan's band, the Bob Galbraith swing combo.

Supreme Court Will Hear Blacklist Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today granted a hearing to 23 movie actors and other film workers who sought millions of dollars in damages on a complaint that Hollywood "blacklist" kept them out of work. The 23 claimants said they were blacklisted by the film industry after they refused to testify in 1951 before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Each asked damages of $250,000. The suit was against major film companies, film distributing companies and members of the House committee. California courts dismissed the litigation on the ground there was no showing of injury to any "legally protected interest" of the 23 because none had an employment contract. In appealing to the Supreme Court for a hearing, the 23 contended they had been denied equal protection and due process of law.

(Continued from Page 1) themselves, can now build only their prison." The United States, Eisenhower said, does not "fear this world of change" for it is "no stranger to much of its spirit." "Everywhere we see the seeds of the same growth that America itself has known. The American experiment has, for generations, fired the passion and the courage of millions elsewhere seeking freedom, equality and opportunity." Against that background, Eisenhower said this country cherishes its friendship with all nations that are or would be free.

Retired Experts Helping Small Business Men

By ROBERT W. GIBSON SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 21 (AP)—Six retired executives are rescuing small businesses in trouble—"for the fun of it."

These men were among the highest paid leaders in West Coast business, but age brushed them aside to make room at the top for younger men.

Now they act as a board of directors for any little businessman or manufacturer who needs help and is willing to accept it.

The idea was conceived by William B. Logan, a management consultant in San Francisco.

"One man running his own little business," said Logan, "can't possibly be an expert in all fields. A big corporation can pay top salaries and get the talent it needs, but the little man can't."

Logan said Dun & Bradstreet figures show that inexperience causes nearly 91 per cent of business failures.

"Experience is what Logan's re-tired directors give."

"After working for 43 years like I did, you can't just quit and fold your hands," explained Edward Lanz, 62-year-old retired division sales manager of the American Can Co.

Samuel G. Gearhart, 67, former manager of industrial sales for General Electric's Pacific district, said the work "keeps me alert. I'm getting a lot of pleasure out of it."

Other members are John S. Curran, 73, retired bank executive; Edmund H. Pigeon, 70, retired small business analyst; Samuel F. Baker, 67, former president of Barium Steel Corp. and of United Aircraft Products Co.; and R. G. Von Bernuth, 62, retired regional director of Pfizer Chemical.

One manufacturer who received their help commented, "We would probably have gone broke if we hadn't had Logan's board of directors."

"We're running as efficiently as General Motors now," he said. "One problem was that the price was far too low on one item. The more business we did the closer we came to going broke."

Logan cited a case in which a small businessman expanded his sales volume to $2.5 million a year—and lost $50,000.

The directors cut back the sales volume and the client made $35,000.

A curfew that had been lifted at dawn was immediately reimposed. The fire raids last night were to avenge the death of a Turkish policeman, killed Friday in a bombing attributed to the Greek EOKA underground.

Planes Could Have Kept On, Flier Claims

WASHINGTON (AP)—If jet tanker planes had been available, three B52 bombers could have clipped about six hours from the time it took them to circle the globe last week.

That is the estimate of Lt. Col. James H. Morris of San Antonio, Tex., who piloted one of the three heavy jet aircraft more than 24,000 miles in 45 hours and 19 minutes.

Morris told newsmen the bombers could have "kept right on going" if that had been necessary. He voiced the opinion that the B52's range, when refueled in flight, is limited only by the physical endurance of the men who fly it.

During their round-the-world journey, the B52s were refueled at intervals by KC97 tanker planes which are driven by conventional non-jet engines. To take on fuel from these tankers, the heavy jets must slow down and drop to 20,000 feet—the maximum altitude that can be reached by loaded KC97s.

The B52s also lose time in climbing back to their normal cruising level, which on this flight was between 35,000 and 50,000 feet.

In response to a question, Morris said "about six hours" could have been saved if the B52s could have been refueled by the new KC135 jet tankers, now in production.

Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. (James 4:11)

Frightened Foe A Dangerous Foe

Insofar as it is ever known exactly what goes on in the innermost councils of the Kremlin, Nikita Khrushchev, with the aid of Chou En-Lai of Red China and the Polish and Hungarian leaders whom he recently called upon, has won the showdown battle for control of the citadel of world communism and the center of Russian power.

He has been crawling on his anti-Stalin stand, indicating a plan to pacify his fellows inside the Kremlin and among the satellites — if you exclude Tito, and make a few reservations regarding Gomulka of Poland.

Whereas a month ago the Communist world seemed to be split down the middle, there is some evidence now that the rifts have been repaired and the top leadership in Communist countries brought into some sort of focus.

This is bad news for the West. If true, the Kremlin organs of propaganda and the Kremlin leadership from Bulganin on down, have been making some extraordinarily bitter attacks against President Eisenhower's Middle East program — bitter even for the Red propagandists. Some observers of the scene assert that the Kremlin is genuinely disturbed and fearful over this development.

A frightened foe is a doubly dangerous foe, and we Americans should be on the alert at this critical time. Any inclination to take the Russian warnings as just the usual line of bombast should be discouraged.

Perhaps the provision in the President's budget calling for further down-grading of the Air Force and Army had been reached before the present crisis developed; at any rate the proposals are disturbing in view of the worsened overall situation. He would reduce the Army by two divisions, and the Air Force from the current 133 wings to 128 compared to the planned goal of 137 by next summer.

It is explained that the money thus "saved" would be used partly on the guided missile program. The contention is that the cutdown would in reality give greater strength to both the Air Force and the Army.

Congress is expected to take a hard, long look at these further cutbacks. Until recently the economists used the great power of the Air Force as an excuse to reduce Army strength; now guided missiles and nuclear weapons are put forward as justifying still further reductions in the Army and Air Force.

Not the least of the danger inherent in any large-scale reduction of strength is the encouragement it would lead to the Kremlin to strike while the striking is good.

Comprehensive Program

Governor Price Daniel's first message to the Texas Legislature, outlining the major points of the legislative program he hopes to see enacted was one of the most sweeping and comprehensive of recent years.

He hung an "emergency" tag on four items. No. 1 is water, and he recommended that the proposed $100 million revolving fund be doubled for use in local projects.

Highway safety measures came next, including a 200-man addition to the highway patrol. He said death and destruction on our highways had reached "disaster proportions."

He would modernize the state's eminent domain laws to help implement the highway program. This, we imagine, would involve court procedures to reduce the amount of money going for right of way purchase, which has reached enormous proportions in some localities, in order to leave more money for highway building.

Finally, the governor says the state needs a statewide crime commission to keep an eye on possible official misconduct, plus a lobby registration and control law, and a code of ethics for public officials. More has been talked about in these fields and less has been done by successive legislatures than almost any other subject.

The governor thinks his program can be put in effect without disturbing the present tax structure. But he made no firm pledges regarding taxes, except to go on record against the perennial sales tax proposal and against any form of state income tax.

The governor's first message, to be followed later with a discussion of the budget, ran to 6,100 words and contained 25 points.

He laid it out in clear terms, and the Legislature clearly has many chores to perform if it puts a substantial part of the program through.

Blank Check And Emergency

Mr. Dulles has finished with his public testimony on behalf of the proposed Middle Eastern resolution, and he must now say in private what he really thinks. It is evident enough that the Senators are baffled, and that they feel that they are voting for things that are not being explained to them and that they do not understand. For Mr. Dulles has been using all the arts of a skilled lawyer to avoid saying anything precise and concrete about what is the policy which the resolution authorizes, and about how he intends to operate it when Congress has voted the resolution.

What he is asking from Congress is a grant of power — in terms of our military forces and of a considerable sum of money — and along with this grant of power a free hand to use the power, and in addition a vote of confidence in advance. He is asking, I take it, that Congress provide him with all possible bargaining power in negotiating with the Arab states. The bargaining power he wants would consist, first, of authority to use the American armed forces without further action by Congress; second, the authority to spend $200,000,000 now without having to say in advance how it is to be spent; and, third, the over-all moral force of having it known that all these proceedings have the blessing of Congress.

Having tinkered a bit with the resolution, Congress will presumably in the end vote for it. When the Secretary of State, speaking for the President, says that the issue of war and peace hangs on his proposal, it is impossible for Congress to refuse. Under a parliamentary system of government, the legislature could reject the proposal if it dislikes it and could force the government to resign, bringing into existence a different government. But under our system, the control of foreign relations is in the hands of the President, and on a show-down Congress must support him when he certifies that his proposals are a matter of life and death.

In this case, Congress is being asked for a big grant of authority of which one of the essential characteristics is that the use of this authority is not to be explained in advance. Nothing quite like that has so far as I can remember, been asked of Congress except, of course, in time of war.

In the Formosa resolution, Congress took a commitment to defend Formosa and the Pescadores, and it authorized the President to determine what should be done about the off-shore islands. The Formosa resolution was, therefore, a specific grant of authority. As for the Truman doctrine, the only power the President asked for was a specific power to aid Greece and Turkey; the global part of the doctrine was a Presidential declaration in which Congress did not have to play any practical part.

This new resolution is a generalized grant of power. It is so general that not even the countries are specified to which it applies. The best argument for it is that the collapse of the British position has consequences that are far-reaching and as yet incalculable. The old connections in the Middle East are, if not completely broken as in Egypt, then profoundly shaken as in Iraq. Among the Western nations only the United States is in a position to negotiate with the Middle Eastern countries, and what Eisenhower and Dulles are asking from Congress is a blank check in an emergency.

The grant of free money, which seems to trouble Congress the most, is best explained and justified, I would suppose, by telling ourselves that it is to be used for loans and subsidies which are primarily political in their impact on the governments and on public opinion. These are not elegant projects which can be laid before Congress in the form of blueprints supported by the testimony of engineers and technicians. They belong rather to the small change of international political trading.

Ike's Not The Same Man

WASHINGTON — The President Eisenhower who moves into his second term today is in some ways not the same man who took office four years ago. He has grown, he has learned, and he understands his country better.

But he still retains a quality which historians may consider his greatest contribution to American life—a quality he originally brought to the presidency. It's his ability to stay calm and convey a sense of confidence.

Four years ago he inherited a nation which was at war in Korea, desperately worried about communism abroad, and so divided over McCarthyism it was almost neurotically suspicious of communism at home.

He got the war ended. It was a far from perfect armistice. But it did get the killing stopped and forestalled the chance of a bigger war.

He remained aloof from personal involvement with Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.). But his aides — certainly with his knowledge and approval — took a stand against McCarthy and set in motion the Senate scrutiny which drove the Wisconsin Red-hunter into the shadows.

After that the hatred and vilification rampant when Eisenhower took office in 1953 began to disappear. The nation breathed easier. It was as if under the Eisenhower calmness the mass of Americans regained confidence in themselves to handle domestic communism without fear or hysteria.

As a result of the public disenchantment with McCarthy and his followers, Eisenhower finally dominated the Republican party. Up to then he had seemed to lean over backwards to please the party's reactionary wing. Thereafter he steered a more liberal course.

The Eisenhower who nowadays urges expansion of Social Security, the minimum wage and public aid to education has traveled a long way from the Eisenhower of the late 1940s.

It was in those days that Eisenhower, as president of Columbia University, said that if a person wanted security he could find it in jail. It was a statement which made him appear oblivious of the meaning, and public approval, of the New Deal under which the government assumed some responsibility for the people's welfare.

The Eisenhower who took office four years ago, after a lifetime in military service, was not a well-informed man on the ramifications of government. This showed up particularly in his answers at his early news conferences when there was no time for his aides to prepare his answers.

Makes Money By Washing

NEW YORK — "The reason many uneducated men make successes in business," said Murray Cohen, who never finished grammar school, "is that subconsciously they seek security in money."

"But I never idolized money," At 49 Cohen, who is as calm and as restful as a bottle of benzene pills, really is a millionaire who probably doesn't idolize money. How can you idolize something you are making so fast you don't have time to count it?

There are a number of unusual things about Murray, a blue-eyed, sandy-haired philanthropist and businessman who was born poor on the Lower East Side and still wears the air of surety of one who broke his knuckles young, but still won. For example:

He went to work selling paper and twine at 14, and four years later was earning $40,000 a year selling laundry machinery. He lives in a suite in the Waldorf Towers, and is the only tenant there who does his own laundry.

He is also a bachelor who washes 30 million diapers a year. He is, as a matter of fact, president and board chairman of Consolidated Laundries, the world's largest firm in the field, and kingpin in the nation's 400-million-dollar a year linen supply and laundry industry.

In 1943 when he moved in and took over control of the company he was hailed as the youngest top executive of any firm on the New York Stock Exchange.

"It was losing money, and going downhill," he said. "Its annual business was about six million dollars and it hadn't paid a dividend in some 10 years. This year we'll do 22-million-dollars."

"How did he do it? This is Cohen's explanation: "I did it by molding the men I found there when I took over the firm. I didn't bring in men from the outside."

"We had about 2,000 employees then, and we have about 4,000 now, plus 800 trucks. All the managers of the 23 plants we have today were route delivery men or route supervisors when I came."

"I told them at the start their jobs were secure as long as I was there, but it was up to them to provide the kind of security that would permeate through to their families."

"I put in insurance, pensions and stock purchase plans. The measure of my own success is how many men I can help make successful. But I've been a salesman all my life. I believe in ringing doorbells, and that if you pound pavements and ask for business, you'll get business."

"So when they started to tell me what they'd been doing, or showed me a sheet of figures, I told them, 'I don't care what you did—that's up to you—and the only figure I'm interested in is the final one at the bottom of the pages.'"

Mr. Bremer

He says you can do his homework now and he'll correct it later . . .

Around The Rim

Some People Will Steal Anything

I see by the papers where the light-fingered gentry has picked up a hubcap or two around town.

It's never been determined where the hooligans dispose of the loot, though it could be South America. There must be a market for stuff, although the privateers could just be keeping their hands in the game.

Hubcaps are a favorite item but anything is apt to disappear under the cover of night across the great land of ours—anything the thieves take a fancy to.

A few of the trophies the artful dodgers have collected around here include tombstones and thimbles, Christmas decorations and shrubbery.

Some of the items the plunderers take have marketable value. Others, they must grab for sentimental reasons.

Many of the hardened artists are downright thoughtfully about their capers—they steal only from those they know have insurance to cover their losses. Others would make off with your wooden leg, just for the kicks they'd get from seeing you struggle down the street without it.

Some of the great fraternity of knobknockers are plucky—you can say that for them.

I notice a news story out of Springfield, Ohio, where a man came home and found his home missing. He first listened to "People Are Funny" and then decided the building had been stolen, pipes and all. He found it later on a lot across town but how it got there he was never able to find out.

A family up in Salem, Oregon, turned up with a lineolium in their kitchen missing, one that had been newly laid and had the cook stove and ice box planted in it. That job took a little time. I wonder if the thugs took time off to raid the ice box?

You hear every now and then of the pirates who steal the kitchen sink but I read about a guy who broke into a house the other day—the only thing he took was a bath. How did the occupants know? He left a ring in the tub.

You might wonder about the New York thief who swiped eight policemen's pay checks, valued at $1,204. Consider, too, the Australian bandit who stole 10,000 copies of booklet on crime prevention from a police printing plant.

In Toronto, a woman thief stole $800 to pay off her lawyer, after she had been tried on a charge of taking $1,300 from her employer.

You can't blame some of the night raiders for changing their habits. There must be easier ways to earn a buck than the one employed by a gink who tried to stick up a dance hall out in Arizona last year.

The following happened to him: (1) The spot's owner hit him over the noggin with a blackjack. (2) A waitress beamed him with a baseball bat. (3) Another waitress crowned him with a steel chair. (4) The owner's brother punched him in the jaw. (5) A patron winged him with a beer bottle. and (6) he got arrested.

The police must have looked good to him after that.

History Made On Austrian Border

ANDAUF, Austria — History, how momentous none of us can yet foresee, is indeed made at night along the Austro-Hungarian border. By stealth and daring, Hungarian refugees from intolerable oppression still cross the border even under a moon that now hangs like an enemy in the sky, casting a harsh klieglight on a stark winter landscape.

By 3 a.m., when this farm village so near the border has been fast asleep for a good six hours, the refugee agencies are just beginning to expect the night's peak load at this border collection station. Three refugees, a young woman and two men in their 20s had just arrived.

"They've had a bad time of it, an interpreter said brusquely. "They are all of a party of 25 that got through. The others were caught just at the border." I thought despairingly of the machine-gun and rifle fire we had heard earlier, and the baying of dogs trained to hunt down their rebellious quarry.

The three stood quietly in the men's dormitory. A drab, duncolored room that was once the village dance hall, it had only the saving grace of security, of warmth and of double-decker beds. A score of exhausted escapees were already asleep. There was a leonine gray head on a pillow a few feet away, but the majority looked like high school boys.

The girl was taken away to the women's dormitory in the town school. As the two men sought bunks, a new group of a half dozen Hungarians arrived. They were five young men and a girl in this winter coat, her bare hands scarlet with the cold, not even a scarf on her dark head.

As these refugees kept coming in little groups, the one universal characteristic that impressed and amazed me was their calm, or perhaps I should say stoicism, their dignity, their courteous manner and their quiet.

There was neither hysteria nor mock heroics. There was no belaboring from these people who had walked for miles, hidden for hours in the swamps and marshes of Hungary near the Eisner Canal, and finally made a dash for it.

A slight man, husband of the one woman in the group, said in response to questioning who hoped to earn his living thus in the world of free men.

"We left Budapest yesterday," he said matter-of-factly. "There has been no bread or meat in the city for days and days. The only food we have seen has been cakes stamped with the Red Cross. Yesterday, when there was more shooting at Gespeel (Budapest's largest complex of factories) and there seemed to be a drive against the workers, we decided to leave."

He had no idea — this cabinet-maker — where he wanted to settle in the Western world. He said he had not thought that problem through. His only thought, when the decision to flee was finally made, was to escape the misery and persecution of Communism.

There was a poignant moment when it was explained to the young wife that she would have to go to the women's dormitory. She, who had endured so much and so bravely, clung to her husband's hand as if she might never see him again if once they were parted.

But she smiled reassuringly at her. She managed a smile, and without further ado followed the Red Cross worker to the women's shelter.

Nasser's Days May Be Numbered

WASHINGTON — The beginning of the end of the Nasser regime in Egypt is in sight. The fact is that within a year or so the United States may be seriously considering aid to the Egyptian people due to the plight in which they may find themselves because of the misguided policies of Nasser.

This is the emerging picture of the Middle East. It may explain why the Eisenhower administration is declining to say at this time just which countries it will eventually help with the economic measures being considered by Congress.

Secretary of State Dulles, in the testimony he gave in closed session to the House Foreign Affairs Committee this week, a portion of which now has been released, said that several Middle East countries are faced with economic chaos as a result of the closing of the Suez Canal and the blowing up in Syria of the oil pipeline from Iraq. Mr. Dulles declared that there are no immediate plans to use any funds to aid Egypt financially but that he hoped Egypt would be free of Communist influence "in a year or two" and then would become eligible for help.

He added: "I do not think the fact that they once perhaps made a reckless transaction and mortgaged much of their crops to finance arms should bar them from help at all times."

This is but another way of saying that Nasser's mistakes will not be held against the Egyptian people, who presumably will take care of the Nasser blunders themselves with a new government of their own choosing.

There is grave danger that the Suez Canal will not be the same important waterway in the next ten years that it has been in the past. New pipelines to Mediterranean ports from the Arab countries, by-passing Egypt, are a virtual certainty now. The United States government doesn't have to participate in the financing of such projects. They will be developed in the natural course of events by business leaders of various countries in constructing projects that will insure a steady flow of oil through friendly countries. The Arab countries, moreover, which have been hurt by Nasser's tactics and want to sell their oil will cooperate in building the new pipelines.

Also, larger and larger tankers are being ordered which in a few years will carry more and more oil around the Cape of Good Hope and avoid passage through the Suez altogether. The large-sized tankers can transport more oil and do it more economically than the smaller ones that go through the Suez Canal. It takes a little longer voyage, but the expense is about the same. Already the tanker construction business everywhere is in one of its biggest booms, and Nasser is really the man these builders of giant tankers have to thank.

For many weeks there have been two fallacies widely published and widely believed. One is that Nasser was provoked by the withdrawal of American funds for the Aswan Dam and hence seized the canal as a reprisal. This isn't true. The American government has evidence that the Egyptian dictator intended to seize the canal long before the offer of money to help build the big dam was withdrawn.

Another fallacy is that Nasser's prestige has been enhanced by the American policy of siding against the British and French when they resorted to military action in and around the Suez.

Actually, it has worked the other way. From the day the British and French took the initiative and used force, the Nasser regime was doomed. For it meant that businesses of all kinds in Western Europe would be wary of Egypt. Any country that goes in for "nationalization" — a euphemistic word for arbitrary confiscation — is bound to scare off investment capital and discourage commercial relationships.

Nasser may have enjoyed a brief triumph in the press of some countries and among those in this country who wanted to toss bars at the American government, but his goose was cooked the day he seized the canal — an action that was coupled with his purchase of arms from the Communists.

Egypt belongs with the West from a trade viewpoint, and many of her leaders have a Western education and background. The future of Egypt's economy lies in a partnership with the West, which means America, Britain and France, which means she may take several months for all these facts to sink in, the end of Nasser as a dictator and a reversal of his policies are inevitable if Egypt is to survive as an independent nation.

Take A Workout

Beautiful Joanne Dea believes that every mother should take time to workout either at a gym or at home to keep her figure lively. Joanne will soon be seen in "Orange," a Jeff Chandler production for United Artists.

HOLLYWOOD BEAUTY

Some Workouts Help Bring Peaceful Sleep

By LYDIA LANE

HOLLYWOOD — Joanne Dea's long beautiful finger nails have always been an object of envy with me, so when I met her for lunch the other day I was surprised to find them extremely short.

"What happened to the long-great method you had for growing nails any length you wanted?" I asked. "Don't blame me. Blame 'Orange'." Joanne replied, and then went on to explain that she had just finished doing a costume picture with Jeff Chandler. "And don't think I didn't hate to cut them off. But they just didn't fit in with the role. It did make me realize how much more flattering it is to my hands to have long nails. I am already beginning to let them grow and putting color polish on both sides. I apply a top coat every other day. When I give my nails this kind of treatment," Joanne explained, "you only have to have a manicure twice a month."

"Even if your nails don't, you've never looked better," I remarked. "I've found something to help me sleep," Joanne said with enthusiasm. "I have always been one of those people who can't sleep down the woods when they get in bed at night."

"I've tried reading but I never found the place I wanted to put down the book. I tried warm baths but they only made me more wide awake and all the mental suggestions had to effect at all. "But since I work out at a gym three or four times a week I am so much more relaxed that I fall asleep as soon as I get in bed. And it has done my figure so much good," she explained. "I've lost weight in my waist and hips but gained in my bust. My whole body-tonus is so much better. "When I had my first baby I stupidly allowed myself to gain 40 pounds." Joanne continued. "When I gain weight my stomach is the first place to show it. If you can't go to a gym, set-ups at home will help but you have to vary your exercises to reach all muscles in the abdominal area. "But I think every woman who can possibly organize her time should treat herself to the wonderful workout and hot steam baths of a good gym," Joanne concluded.

Get Ready To Float, Trail This Spring

ROME — No vestal virgin ever wore more floating draperies than Roman designers decree for the modern woman this season. Dresses shown at style openings this weekend drip and trail with scarfs, sashes and panels and have toga-like gathered backs.

Carous follows the trend with high-waisted robes of pale cotton and silk jersey for ballroom. A few stonewashed, lace dress, lightly trimmed with ruffled satin ribbons come as a relief among the goddess gowns. Carous makes handsome use of panels in daytime clothes, however. Printed silk afternoon dresses are outstanding in her collection. She gets elegant results with mink, dark prints — black, brown and navy backgrounds, small figured with other dark tones. Panels or scarfs dropping from the shoulder make a suit effect or can be thrown back to reveal simple, form-fitting dresses.

Coahoma AL Auxiliary Meets; Has MOD Coffee

The Coahoma American Legion Auxiliary met Friday afternoon for their regular business meeting and program in the American Legion Hall.

A letter was read from the Past American Study Chairman on the contest being conducted for the junior members. There is an essay to be written about Honduras and a Pan-American Doll dressing contest.

The National and the Department prizes were announced as well as the chairman's own personal prize. This program is designed to encourage a knowledge of our southern neighbors that we may be better able to lend our influence to the efforts toward a closer all-American relationship.

The group agreed to fill a box of clothing for the Save the Children Federation. This is a project of sending used clothing to underprivileged children. It may be sent either in this country or abroad.

Mrs. Cramer announced the school of instruction to be held at the VA Hospital in Big Spring Feb. 4, in the afternoon and evening. It is open to both men and women. The instructor will be Mrs. Ottilia Aaron of Dallas. The Coahoma unit will serve as hostess and will furnish a portion of the refreshments and the corsages. Mrs. Cramer also reported on the hospital work; Mrs. Jim Shelburne assisted her. Immediately following the business meeting; Mrs. Ida Graham had the program on Girls State. She told the group that Girls State was organized as a national Americanism activity by the 1937 National Convention. The purpose of Girls State is to provide citizenship training for girls of high school age in every department of the American Legion Auxiliary.

She explained that eligibility is limited to any girl in the junior, or third year, of high school and they are chosen on the following qualifications: leadership, character, courage, honesty, scholarship, cooperativeness and physical fitness. The Coahoma unit is planning to sponsor a girl to go to Girls State in June. Six senior members and two junior members attended the meeting. Mrs. Dink Cramer, who is VA Hospital representative for this district, announced she would be in Austin over the weekend attending a special called meeting of all hospital representatives over the state. Mrs. Albert Wirth will accompany her.

The legion and the auxiliary sponsored a coffee in the Legion Hall Saturday with all proceeds going to the March of Dimes.

A Bible Thought For Today

Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. (James 4:11)

Frightened Foe A Dangerous Foe

Insofar as it is ever known exactly what goes on in the innermost councils of the Kremlin, Nikita Khrushchev, with the aid of Chou En-lai of Red China and the Polish and Hungarian leaders whom he recently called upon, has won the showdown battle for control of the citadel of world communism and the center of Russian power.

He has been crafty on his anti-Stalin stand, indicating a play to pacify his fellows inside the Kremlin and among the satellites — if you exclude Tito, and make a few reservations regarding Gomulka of Poland.

Whereas a month ago the Communist world seemed to be split down the middle, there is some evidence now that the rifts have been repaired and the top leadership in Communist countries brought into some sort of focus.

This is bad news for the West, if true.

The Kremlin organs of propaganda and indeed the Kremlin leadership from Bulgagan on down, have been making some extraordinarily bitter attacks against President Eisenhower's Middle East program — bitter even for the Red propagandists. Some observers of the scene assert that the Kremlin is genuinely disturbed and fearful over this development.

A frightened foe is a doubly dangerous foe, and we Americans should be on the alert at this critical time. Any inclination to take the Russian warnings as just the usual line of bombast should be discouraged.

Perhaps the provision in the President's budget calling for further down-grading of the Air Force and Army had been reached before the present crisis developed; at any rate the proposals are disturbing in view of the worsened overall situation. He would reduce the Army by two divisions, and the Air Force from the current 133 wings to 128 compared to the planned goal of 137 by next summer.

It is explained that the money thus "saved" would be used partly on the guided missile program. The contention is that the cutdowns would in reality give greater strength to both the Air Force and the Army.

Congress is expected to take a hard, long look at these further cutbacks. Until recently the economizers used the great power of the Air Force as an excuse to reduce Army strength; now guided missiles and nuclear weapons are put forward as justifying still further reductions in the Army and Air Force.

Not the least of the danger inherent in any large-scale reduction of strength is the encouragement it would lend to the Kremlin to strike while the striking is good.

Comprehensive Program

Governor Price Daniel's first message to the Texas Legislature outlining the major points of the legislative program he hopes to see enacted was one of the most sweeping and comprehensive of recent years.

He hung an "emergency" tag on four items, No. 1 is water, and he recommended that the proposed $100 million revolving fund be doubled for use in local projects.

Highway safety measures came next, including a 200-man addition to the highway patrol. He said death and destruction on our highways had reached "disaster proportions."

He would modernize the state's eminent domain laws to help implement the highway program. This, we imagine, would involve court procedures to reduce the amount of money going for right of way purchase, which has reached enormous proportions in some localities, in order to leave more money for highway building.

Finally, the governor says the state needs a statewide crime commission to keep an eye on possible official misconduct, plus a lobby registration and control law, and a code of ethics for public officials. More has been talked about in these fields and less has been done by successive legislatures than almost any other subject.

The governor thinks his program can be put in effect without disturbing the present tax structure. But he made no firm pledges regarding taxes, except to go on record against the perennial tax proposal and against any form of state income tax.

The governor's first message, to be followed later with a discussion of the budget, ran to 6,100 words and contained 25 points.

He laid it out in clear terms, and the Legislature clearly has many chores to perform if it puts a substantial part of the program through.

Blank Check And Emergency

Mr. Dulles has finished with his public testimony on behalf of the proposed Middle Eastern resolution, and he must now see what he can do in secret session. It is evident enough that the Senators are baffled, and that they feel that they are voting for things that are not being explained to them and that they do not understand. For Mr. Dulles has been using all the arts of a skilled lawyer to avoid saying anything precise and concrete about what is the policy which the resolution authorizes, and about how he intends to operate it when Congress has voted the resolution.

What he is asking from Congress is a grant of power — in terms of our military forces and of a considerable sum of money — and along with this grant of power a free hand to use the power, and in addition a vote of confidence in advance. He is asking, in other words, to provide him with all possible bargaining power in negotiating with the Arab states. The bargaining power he wants would consist, first, of authority to use the American armed forces without further action by Congress; second, the authority to spend $200,000,000 now without having to say in advance how it is to be spent; and third, the over-all moral force of having it known that all these proceedings have the blessing of Congress.

Having tinkered a bit with the resolution, Congress will presumably in the end vote for it. When the Secretary of State, speaking for the President, says that the issue of war and peace hangs on his proposal, it is impossible for Congress to refuse. Under a parliamentary system of government, the legislature could reject the proposal if it dislikes it and could force the government to resign, bringing into existence a different government. But under our system, the control of foreign relations is in the hands of the President, and on a show-down Congress must support him when he certifies that his proposals are a matter of life and death.

In this case, Congress is being asked for a big grant of authority of which one of the essential characteristics is that the use of this authority is not to be explained in advance. Nothing quite like that has, so far as I can remember, been asked of Congress except, of course, in time of war.

In the Formosa resolution, Congress took a commitment to defend Formosa and the Pescadores, and it authorized the President to determine what should be done about the off-shore islands. The Formosa resolution was, therefore, a specific grant of authority. As for the Truman doctrine, the only power the President asked for was a specific power to aid Greece and Turkey; the global part of the doctrine was a Presidential declaration in which Congress did not have to play any practical part.

This new resolution is a generalized grant of power. It is so general that not even the countries are specified to which it applies. The best argument for it is that the collapse of the British position has consequences that are far-reaching and as yet incalculable. The old connections in the Middle East are, if not completely broken as in Egypt, then profoundly shaken as in Iraq. Among the Western nations only the United States is in a position to negotiate with the Middle Eastern countries, and what Eisenhower and Dulles are asking from Congress is a blank check in an emergency.

The grant of free money, which seems to trouble Congress the most, is best explained and justified, I would suppose, by telling ourselves that it is to be used for loans and subsidies which are primarily political in their impact on the governments and on public opinion. These are not elegant projects which can be laid before Congress in the form of blueprints supported by the testimony of engineers and technicians. They belong rather to the small change of international political trading.

Ike's Not The Same Man

WASHINGTON — The President Eisenhower who moves into his second term today is in some ways not the same man who took office four years ago. He has grown, he has learned, and he understands his country better.

But he still retains a quality which historians may consider his greatest contribution to American life—a quality he originally brought to the presidency. It's his ability to stay calm and convey a sense of confidence.

Four years ago he inherited a nation which was at war in Korea, desperately worried about communism abroad, and so divided over McCarthyism it was almost neurotically suspicious of communism at home.

He got the war ended. It was a far from perfect armistice. But it did get the killing stopped and forestalled the chance of a bigger war.

He remained aloof from personal involvement with Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.). But his aides — certainly with his knowledge and approval — took a stand against McCarthy and set in motion the Senate scrutiny which drove the Wisconsin Red-hunter into the shadows.

Makes Money By Washing

NEW YORK — "The reason many uneducated men make successes in business," said Murray Cohen, who never finished grammar school, "is that subconsciously they seek security in money."

"But I never idolized money." At 49 Cohen, who is as calm and restful as a bottle of benzadrine pills, really is a millionaire who probably doesn't idolize money. How can you idolize something you are making so fast you don't have time to count it?

There are a number of unusual things about Murray, a blue-eyed, sandy-haired philanthropist and businessman who was born poor on the Lower East Side and still wears the air of a surety of one who broke his knuckles young, but still won. For example: He went to work selling paper and twine at 14, and four years later was earning $40,000 a year selling laundry machinery.

He lives in a suite in the Waldorf Towers, and is the only tenant there who does his own laundry.

He is also a bachelor who washes 30 million diapers a year.

He is, as a matter of fact, president and board chairman of Consolidated Laundries, the world's largest firm in the field, and kingpin in the nation's 400-million-dollar a year linen supply and laundry industry.

In 1943 when he moved in and took over control of the company he was hailed as the youngest top executive of any firm on the New York Stock Exchange.

"It was losing money, and going downhill," he said. "Its annual business was about six million dollars and it hadn't paid a dividend in some 10 years. This year we'll do 22-million-dollars."

How did he do it? This is Cohen's explanation: "I did it by molding the men I found there when I took over the firm. I didn't bring in men from the outside."

"We had about 2,000 employees then, and we have about 4,000 now, plus 800 trucks. All the managers of the 23 plants we have today were route delivery men or route supervisors when I came."

"I told them at the start their jobs were secure as long as I was there, but it was up to them to provide the kind of security that would permeate through to their families."

"I put in insurance, pensions and stock purchase plans. The measure of my own success is how many men I can help make successful. But I've been a salesman all my life. I believe in ringing doorbells, and that if you pound pavements and ask for business, you'll get business."

"So when they started to tell me what they'd be doing, or showed me a sheet of figures, I told them, 'I don't care what you did—that's up to you—and the only figure I'm interested in is the final one at the bottom of the pages.'"

Mr. Breger

Liberal Arts Grads Getting Jobs In Industry

COLUMBUS, Ohio — An Ohio State University dean says liberal arts graduates, including those with "non-technical" training, are being placed in good jobs by industry.

Industry and business are waking up to the fact that they've been overlooking a bet in their recruitment programs, says James F. Fullington, Dean of OSU's College of Arts and Sciences.

He said industry and business find that a liberal education, regardless of the major field of study, develops capabilities that they need and can use "in management, sales, and, believe it or not, production."

Discussing the functions of the college of arts and sciences, he said the college "is dedicated to the conviction that the primary aim of undergraduate education should be the development of the man, and that specialized technical training should be secondary." He added that "this is not a matter of the exclusion of specialized technical training, but of relative emphasis."

"The college believes," Dean Fullington said, "that the man who is broadly educated in the sciences, social sciences, arts, and humanities may become a happier man, a better husband and father, a better citizen, and a better leader in his vocational field than the narrowly trained specialist."

Around The Rim

Some People Will Steal Anything

I see by the papers where the light-fingered gentry has picked up a hubcap or two around town.

It's never been determined where the hooligans dispose of the loot, though it could be South America. There must be a market for stuff, although the privateers could just be keeping their hands in the game.

Hubcaps are a favorite item but anything is apt to disappear under the cover of night across the great land of ours—anything the thieves take a fancy to.

A few of the trophies the artful dodgers have collected around here include tombstones and thimbles, Christmas decorations and shrubbery.

Some of the items the plunderers take have marketable value. Others, they must grab for sentimental reasons.

Many of the hardened artists are downright thoughtfully about their capers—They steal only from those they know have insurance to cover their losses. Others would make off with your wooden leg, just for the kicks they'd get from seeing you struggle down the street without it.

Some of the great fraternity of knobknockers are plucky—you can say that for them.

I notice a news story out of Springfield, Ohio, where a man came home and found his home missing. He first listened to "People Are Funny" and then decided the building had been stolen, pipes and all. He found it later on a lot across town but how it got there he was never able to find out.

A family up in Salem, Oregon, turned up with a linoleum in their kitchen missing, one that had been newly laid and had the cook stove and ice box planted on it. That job took a little time. I wonder if the thugs took time off to raid the ice box?

You hear every now and then of the pirates who steal the kitchen sink but I read about a guy who broke into a house the other day—the only thing he took was a bath. How did the occupants know? He left a ring in the tub.

You might wonder about the New York thief who swiped eight policemen's pay checks, valued at $1,294. Consider, too, the Australian bandit who stole 10,000 copies of booklet on crime prevention from a police printing plant.

In Toronto, a woman thief stole $908 to pay off her lawyer—after she had been tried on a charge of taking $1,300 from her employer.

You can't blame some of the night raiders for changing their habits. There must be easier ways to turn a buck than the one employed by a sink who tried to stick up a dance hall out in Arizona last year.

The following happened to him, (1) the spot's owner hit him over the noggin with a blackjack, (2) a waitress beamed him with a baseball bat, (3) another waitress crowned him with a steel chair, (4) the owner's brother punched him in the jaw, (5) a patron winged him with a beer bottle, and (6) he got arrested.

The pokey must have looked good to him after that.

History Made On Austrian Border

ANDAU, Austria — History, how momentous none of us can yet foresee, is indeed made at night along the Austro-Hungarian border. By stealth and daring, Hungarian refugees from intolerable oppression still cross the border even under a moon that now hangs like an enemy in the sky, casting a harsh klieglight on a stark winter landscape.

By 3 a.m. when this farm village so near the border has been fast asleep for a good six hours, the refugee agencies are just beginning to expect the night's peak load at this border collection station. Three refugees, a young woman and two men in their 20s had just arrived.

They've had a bad time of it, an interpreter said brusquely. "They are all a party of 25 that got through. The others were caught just at the border." I thought despairingly of the machine-gun and rifle fire we had heard earlier, and the baying of dogs trained to hunt down their rebellious quarry.

The three stood quietly in the men's dormitory. A drab, uncolored room that was once the village dance hall, it had only the saving grace of security, of warmth and of double-decker beds. A score of exhausted escapees were already asleep. There was a leonine gray head on a pillow a few feet away, but the majority looked like high school boys.

The girl was taken away to the women's dormitory in the town school. As the two men sought bunks, a new group of a half dozen Hungarians arrived. They were five young men and a girl in a thin winter coat, her bare hands scarlet with the cold, as they came in from the dark.

As these refugees kept coming in little groups, the one universal characteristic that impressed and amazed me was their calm, or perhaps I should say stoicism, their dignity, their courteous manner and their quiet.

There was neither hysteria nor mock heroics. There was no bellyaching from these people who had walked for miles, hidden for hours in the swamps and marshes of Hungary near the Eisner Canal, and finally made a dash for it.

A slight man, husband of the one woman in the group, said in response to questioning that he was a cabinet-maker by trade who hoped to earn his living thus in the world of free men.

"We left Budapest yesterday," he said matter-of-factly. "There has been no bread or meat in the city for days and days. The only food we have seen has been cakes stamped with the Red Cross. Yesterday, when there was more shooting at Gsepel and there seemed to be a drive against the workers, we decided to leave."

He had no idea — this cabinet maker — where he wanted to settle in the Western world. He said he had not thought that problem through. His only thought, when the decision to flee was finally made, was to escape the misery and persecution of Communism.

There was a poignant moment when it was explained to the young wife that she would have to go to the women's dormitory. She, who had endured so much and so bravely, clung to her husband's hand as if she might never see him again if once they were parted.

But she smiled reassuringly at her. She managed a smile, and without further ado followed the Red Cross worker to the women's shelter.

Nasser's Days May Be Numbered

WASHINGTON — The beginning of the end of the Nasser regime in Egypt is in sight. The fact is that within a year or so the United States may be seriously considering aid to the Egyptian people due to the plight in which they may find themselves because of the misguided policies of Nasser.

This is the emerging picture of the Middle East. It may explain why the Eisenhower administration is declining to say at this time just which countries it will eventually help with the economic measures being considered by Congress.

Secretary of State Dulles, in the testimony he gave in closed session to the House Foreign Affairs Committee this week, a portion of which now has been released, said that several Middle East countries are faced with economic chaos as a result of the closing of the Suez Canal and the blowing up in Syria of the oil pipeline from Iraq. Mr. Dulles declared that there are no immediate plans to use any funds to aid Egypt financially but that he hoped Egypt would be free of Communist influence "in a year or two" and then would become eligible for help.

He added: "I do not think the fact that they once perhaps made a reckless transaction and mortgaged much of their crops to finance arms should bar them from help at all times."

This is but another way of saying that Nasser's mistakes will not be held against the Egyptian people, who presumably will take care of the Nasser blunders themselves with a new government of their own choosing.

There is grave danger that the Suez Canal will not be the same important waterway in the next ten years that it has been in the past. New pipelines to Mediterranean ports from the Arab countries, by-passing Egypt, are a virtual certainty now. The United States government doesn't have to participate in the financing of such projects. They will be developed in the natural course of events by business leaders of various countries in constructing projects that will insure a steady flow of oil through friendly countries. The Arab countries, moreover, which have been hurt by Nasser's tactics and want to sell their oil will cooperate in building the new pipelines.

Also, larger and larger tankers are being ordered which in a few years will carry more and more oil around the Cape of Good Hope and avoid passage through the Suez altogether. The large-sized tankers can transport more oil and do it more economically than the smaller ones that go through the Suez Canal. It takes a little longer voyage, but the expense is about the same. Already the tanker construction business everywhere is in one of its biggest booms, and Nasser is really the man these builders of giant tankers have to thank.

For many weeks there have been two fallacies widely published and widely believed. One is that Nasser was provoked by the withdrawal of American funds for the Aswan Dam and hence seized the canal as a reprisal. This isn't true. The American government has evidence that the Egyptian dictator intended to seize the canal long before the offer of money to help build the big dam was withdrawn. Another fallacy is that Nasser's prestige has been enhanced by the American policy of siding against the British and French when they resorted to military action in and around the Suez.

Actually, it has worked the other way. From the day the British and French took the initiative and used force, the Nasser regime was doomed. For it meant that businesses of all kinds in Western Europe would be wary of Egypt. Any country that goes in for "nationalization" — a euphemistic word for arbitrary confiscation — is bound to scare off investment capital and discourage commercial relationships.

Nasser may have enjoyed a brief triumph in the press of some countries and among those in this country who wanted to toss bars at the American government, but his goose was cooked the day he seized the canal — an action that was coupled with his purchase of arms from the Communists.

Egypt belongs with the West from a trade viewpoint, and many of her leaders have a Western education and background. The future of Egypt's economy lies in a partnership with the West, which means America, Britain and France. While it may take several months for all these facts to sink in, the end of Nasser as an inevitable if Egypt is to survive as an independent nation.

HOLLYWOOD — Joanne Dru's long beautiful finger nails have always been an object of envy with me, so when I met her for lunch the other day I was surprised to find them extremely short.
"What happened to the fool-proof method you had for growing nails any length you wanted?" I asked.
"Don't blame me. Blame 'Drango,'" Joanne replied, and then went on to explain that she had just finished doing a costume picture with Jeff Chandler. "And don't think I didn't hate to cut them off. But they just didn't fit in with the role. It did make me realize how much more flattering it is to my hands to have long nails. Get Ready To Float, Trail This Spring

ROME — No vestal virgin ever wore more floating draperies than Roman designers decree for the modern woman this season. Dresses shown at style openings this weekend drip and trail with scarfs, sashes and panels and have toga-like gathered hems.
Carosa follows the trend with high-priestess robes of pale chiffon and silk Jersey for ballgowns. A few stiffened-lace dance dresses, tightly trimmed with nonflowing satin ribbons come as a relief among the goddess gowns.
Carosa makes handsome use of panels in daytime clothes, however. Printed silk afternoon dresses are outstanding in her collection. She gets elegant results with nature, dark prints — black, brown and navy backgrounds, small figured with other dark tones. Panels or scarfs dropping from the shoulder make a suit effect or can be thrown back to reveal simple, form-fitting dresses.

Coahoma AL Auxiliary Meets; Has MOD Coffee

The Coahoma American Legion Auxiliary met Friday afternoon for their regular business meeting and program in the American Legion Hall.
A letter was read from the Pan American Study Chairman on the contest being conducted for the Junior members. There is an essay to be written about Honduras and a Pan-American Doll dressing contest.
The National and the Department prizes were announced as well as the chairman's own personal prize. This program is designed to encourage a knowledge of our southern neighbors that we may be better able to lend our influence to the efforts toward a closer all-American relationship.
The group agreed to fill a box of clothing for the Save the Children Federation. This is a project of sending used clothing to underprivileged children. It may be sent either in this country or abroad.
Mrs. Cramer announced the school of instruction to be held at the VA Hospital in Big Spring Feb. 4, in the afternoon and evening. It is open to both men and women.
The instructor will be Mrs. Otelia Aaron of Dallas. The Coahoma unit will serve as hostess and will furnish a portion of the refreshments and the corsages. Mrs. Cramer also reported on the hospital work; Mrs. Jim Sheborne assisted her.

Immediately following the business meeting; Mrs. Ida Graham had the program on Girls State. She told the group that Girls State was organized as a national American-Canadian activity by the 1937 National Convention. The purpose of Girls State is to provide citizenship training for girls of high school age in every department of the American Legion Auxiliary.
She explained that eligibility is limited to any girl in the junior, or third year, of high school and they are chosen on the following qualifications: leadership, character, courage, honesty, scholarship, cooperativeness and physical fitness.
The Coahoma unit is planning to sponsor a girl to go to Girls State in June.
Six senior members and two junior members attended the meeting.
Mrs. Dink Cramer, who is VA Hospital representative for this district, announced she would be in Austin over the weekend attending a special called meeting of all hospital representatives over the state. Mrs. Albert Wirth will accompany her.
The legion and the auxiliary sponsored a coffee in the Legion Hall Saturday with all proceeds going to the March of Dimes.

Tired But Happy, Bergman On Way Back After Visit In U.S.

NEW YORK — A tired but happy Ingrid Bergman returned to Europe today, thrilled about her first visit to America in nearly eight years.

"It was almost like a dream and I'll start to remember it when I get back to Paris," commented the Swedish-born actress as she boarded her plane last night at Idlewild Airport.

"I enjoyed my trip very much although I got very little sleep," she said of her 34-hour visit.

She came here to receive the New York Film Critics Award for best actress of 1956 for her performance in "Anastasia."

During the time that remained, the 42-year-old blonde actress crammed in a matinee performance of the hit Broadway musical "My Fair Lady," did a little shopping and talked to friends.

It was her first visit here since 1949 when she left to make a film in Italy with Roberto Rossellini. She and the Italian film director had a son while she was still married to Dr. Peter Lindstrom.

It touched off a wave of criticism and ended her Hollywood film career. However, she was warmly greeted by well-wishers during her brief weekend visit.

"I was surprised by how nice people were to me everywhere I went," she said. "I want to thank all those kind people who put presents in my car and handed them to me wherever I went."

At the airport, Miss Bergman disclosed that she had talked by telephone with her daughter Pia, a child born of her marriage with Dr. Lindstrom.

"I am very happy about the talk," the actress said. "It was very personal, and should be left to the two of us."

Pia, now called Jeffrey Ann, is 18 and a student at the University of Colorado at Boulder. She did not come to New York to visit with her mother.

Miss Bergman scooped all rumors that she might return to the United States to live. "Europe is my home now, although I had 10 wonderful years in America," she said.

Waiting for Miss Bergman in her Paris apartment are her three children, Roberto, 7, and her twin 4-year-old daughters Ingrid and Isabella.

Miss Bergman is appearing on the Paris stage in the play "Téa and Sympathy."

Rossellini, whom Miss Bergman married after a divorce from Dr. Lindstrom, is in India on film location.

Whale-Sized 'Happy' Drug — For Whale

LOS ANGELES — Somewhere in the Pacific a large gray and somewhat relaxed whale is recovering from a whole-size jolt of tranquilizer drug — believed to be the largest one-shot dosage in medical history.

Researchers believe the whale is getting back to normal now, but for a while yesterday the old boy was probably the most happy and who-could-care-less mammal in the seven seas.

In the interest of heart research, members of Operation Dumbo shot 800 milligrams of a strong tranquilizing drug into the 50-foot whale as he swam with three other pals in the choppy waters off Santa Catalina Island. The normal human dosage is 2.5 milligrams.

The "hypodermic" was a specially constructed stainless steel harpoon which discharged the drug through gas pressure.

Dr. Frank C. Nolan, Los Angeles osteopathic physician and head of the expedition, said they had hoped to take an electrocardiogram of the whale. The huge mammal's heart beats between 10 and 15 times a minute, compared with the 70 to 80 in humans.

"By taking an electrocardiogram of a whale, we may well find something which can be reflected to cardiovascular research," Dr. Nolan said.

It was an hour before the drug took effect on the whale and he dropped out of formation with the other whales.

"That's the one we want," Dr. Nolan shouted.

The Coast Guard cutter gave chase but lost the carefree drug-loaded whale in dense fog and rain. Sighed the doctor:

"There is no doubt that the drug had some effect on the whale. What, exactly, we were unable to tell."

He said the hunt was a trial run and he plans to look off Lower California for more whales.

Dr. Nolan said the project was similar to that of Dr. Paul Dudley White, Boston heart specialist who treated President Eisenhower. Dr. White made several attempts with whales last year off Baja California, using harpoons with an electrode attached to permit an electrocardiogram to be taken from an accompanying vessel.

The tranquilizer of Dr. Nolan was to make the mammal "receptive to treatment," the doctor said.

Father Dies After Family's Escape

DECATUR, Ill. — A young father perished yesterday in his blazing second-floor apartment after aiding his wife and infant son to leap safely into the arms of bystanders.

The body of Vernon Leon True, 25, was found in the charred rubble. Firemen said the $20,000 blaze was started by a gas explosion in the basement.

Mr. True was last seen fleeing the apartment with his 2-year-old son, after he had carried his wife and infant son to the arms of bystanders.

Blood Donors To Aid Girl

DURHAM, N. C. — A score of folks with rare blood stood by ready to give a complete new blood supply to 8-year-old Sarita Ann Besswell today during delicate heart surgery.

Doctors planned to halt her heart for about four minutes during an operation to remove a growth from the heart and then seal off two heart chambers.

Only fresh blood can be used during the operation. Newspaper, radio and television appeals for donors went out all over North Carolina when it was found that the bright-eyed girl has the comparatively rare type O-Rh negative blood, ruling out the use of plasma and liquid blood from blood banks.

Hospital corridors outside the Duke Hospital blood bank were crowded yesterday with volunteers. Several donors were picked from these and in addition 14 persons from Rocky Mount, N. C., Sarita Ann's home, were here to give blood.

Eight women stood by at Rocky Mount ready to come here to give their blood if needed.

Albert Taylor, her stepfather, said while her heart stops, an artificial heart-lung will be used to pump blood into her body.

Sarita Ann underwent an operation in February of 1954 to remove the obstruction but it was not possible to complete the operation then without endangering her life.

On the eve of the operation, she played with a doll she brought here from her home, not knowing of the wide response to help her.

Rock-n-Roll Is Blamed For Youthful Riots

CLEVELAND — Police Lt. Ray Moran blamed it on the youths being as he put it, "bumped up on this rock 'n' roll trash."

Manager Jack Silverthorne of the Hippodrome Theater in downtown Cleveland said rock 'n' roll had nothing to do with it. "We could have been playing 'The Robe' or 'The Ten Commandments' and if an element was looking for a fight it would find it," he said.

Whatever the cause, sporadic fighting at the theater last night sent 14 teen-agers to hospitals with cuts, scratches and bruises and ended with the theater being closed for the night shortly after 9 p.m.

Hundreds of teen-agers were fussed out of the Hippodrome before Lt. Moran ordered a halt to the night of the showing of "The Girl Can't Help It," featuring musical talent of the rock 'n' roll variety.

No arrests were made.

Silverthorne said it appeared to be "groups against groups."

Anthony Agresta, 16, a Mayfield Heights High School football player, heard someone say, "Okay, boys, let's get 'em." Then said Agresta, "I saw one of them jump down from the balcony. He must have come down 15 feet."

Agresta said his overcoat was taken off and torn and his sports boys, let's get 'em." Then said he went home in a bloody T-shirt.

Texas Shares In Fanfare Of Inauguration, On Lesser Scale

WASHINGTON — Texas shared in the fanfare of President Eisenhower's second inauguration today, but on a lesser scale than four years ago.

At the first Eisenhower inauguration, marking the first time a native son of Texas had become President, there were a dozen Texas units in the big parade. One float carried a replica of the house in Denison where he was born.

But the only Texas entries in today's parade were the Arlington State College's crack marching unit, "The Sam Houston Rifles," and the 96-piece boy and girl Richardson High School Band from Dallas County.

Texas Secretary of State Zallis Steakley represented Gov. Daniel at the inauguration. Mr. and Mrs. Steakley rode in the inaugural parade and attended the ceremonies.

Former Gov. Shivers, who supported Eisenhower in 1952 and

King Saud Sails Toward U. S., Parley With Ike

NAPLES, Italy — King Saud of Saudi Arabia sailed today toward the United States to tell President Eisenhower what four of the leading Arab countries think of his Middle East doctrine.

The Egyptian government announced that Egypt, Syria and Jordan had commissioned Saud to tell the President they reject the "vacuum theory" in the Middle East, major premise of the Eisenhower doctrine.

The Egyptian announcement said the four countries were resolved never "to become a sphere of influence for any foreign power." They took that stand at two-day talks in Cairo ending Saturday with a decision by the other three to supply Jordan with a 36-million-dollar annual grant to replace a British subsidy.

The announcement said the four

Texas Enjoys Mild Monday

By The Associated Press

Texas enjoyed a mild Monday, but a cold front taking shape to the northwest threatened more cold weather.

Skies were cloudy Monday except over West Texas. Light rain fell at College Station, Waco, Mineral Wells and Fort Worth. Galveston had fog.

Predawn temperatures ranged from 67 degrees at Brownsville to 39 at Salt Flat.

Fairly strong winds whipped over the state.

Scattered showers were forecast for East and North Central Texas. The colder air was expected to reach Northwest Texas Tuesday.

Sunday's high readings ran from 82 at Alice to 62 at Dalhart.

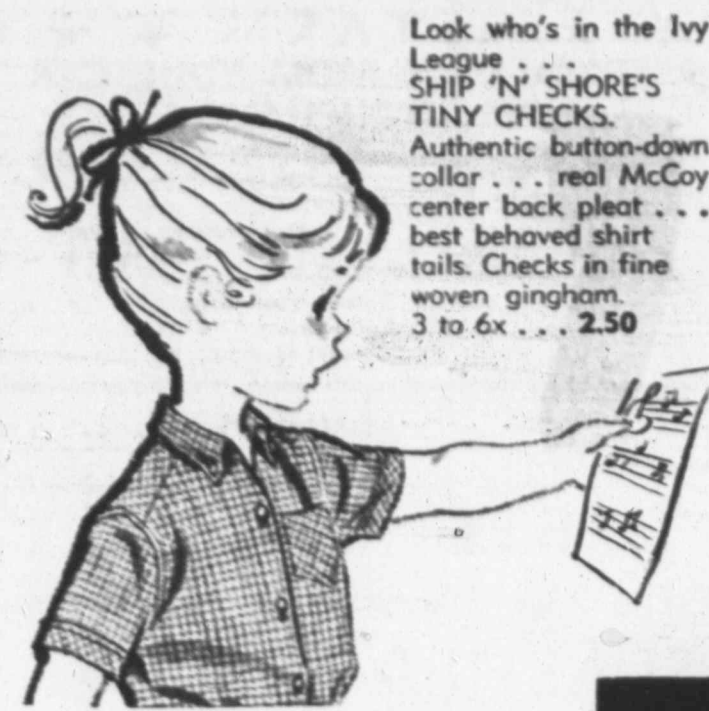

Victoria reported .67 of an inch of rain, Lufkin .06, San Antonio .82 and Brownsville .81.

New Study Tells Sex Of The Unborn

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 21 — Using a new amniotic fluid study technique, University of Minnesota, doctors say they have been able to determine the sex of unborn babies 44 of 44 times.

Dr. Edgar L. Makowski said a sample of the fluid, which encases a baby before birth, is drawn off and studied microscopically. Cast-off cells are stained so that their nuclei can be studied. Studies have shown that the chromatin sex bodies are low in nuclei taken from a baby boy, high for a girl.

Dr. Makowski said the technique is advisable for use only in research and should not be used simply to tell parents whether they will have a boy or girl.
