Montoya's Artistry Thrills Local Fans

Carlos Montoya, apparently, has three hands.

Else, how does one explain his astounding guitar technique—except that he is truly an artist?

Montoya, sponsored by the Concert Association as part of its annual series, amazed and thrilled his audience last night in City Auditorium in a program lasting an hour and a half, but stretched to two hours by encores.

His technique was a show in itself—he placed his hands in proper guitar position, held down the strings with one left hand, strummed with the right; and then played the strings with his left hand with the same motions that held them down, and rendered both melody and harmony with his right hand. This is Montoya's orchestration technique, the sound of which is familiar from his recordings, but which one must see to appreciate or believe.

SHY ON STAGE

Montoya has a rather shy stage presence, taking the applause with a smile, a nod of the head and his lips moving with a silent "thank you." A small man, he sits almost dwarfed by his guitar which he holds on his knee. He drapes an arm over the instrument which he plays like a man leaning over a fence.

Flamenco actually is a rather restricted art form. Its base is not wide enough to allow the expansion and variation possible to other musical forms. Thus, the true flamenco artist must turn inward toward the intricacy and delicacy that is inherent in Spanish gypsy music. Montoya has done this.

He is not, however, restricted to pure flamenco, although his program was "pure." He is capable also of jazz and classical renditions.

Montoya's conceptions ranged from the quiet and restful which made one think of a romantic Mexican moon, to a fully orchestrated and sonorous crash of music that brought visions of dancing gypsies. The artist also demonstrated some special effects, giving a good imitation of a regiment of snare drums, and even of a Spanish bagpipe.

The last encore brought a laugh as well as applause, when Montoya said, "I will play for you a blue, in flamenco. I play for you the 'San Luis Blue.'" Listeners realized after this number how a wedding of Negro and Spanish music resulted in a large portion of present Latin American forms.

Montoya's performance perhaps could best be summed up in the words repeated by several people: "Isn't it fantastic?"

Guitar Artist Premieres 'Malaguena' In Show Here

By BOB SMITH
 Carlos Montoya last night premiered "Malaguena de Lecuona," which he will include in an album to be recorded in April. Release is expected in late August.

The platter will be pressed by RCA Victor. The Malaguena number is Montoya's own conception of the immortal Lecuona composition. The guitar artist stated he had not practiced the number before, nor worked it out to concert or recording perfection. It was presented for the first time in public at his performance in City Auditorium, but one could not tell from this that his Malaguena was sort of off the top of his head.

TALK FEST

This reporter sat down for a long talk fest with Montoya at the Beale home on Canyon Street after the performance, and found the artist to be what the Spaniards call "simpatico." We talked over such things as tired fingers and guitar picks and what is the most difficult instrument in the world to play.

Does he ever use picks?
 "No picks! No picks!" And an expression of horror. "A pick is nothing . . . nothing . . . nothing!" Use of a pick brings out a linnny twang to the guitar; it is only the soft strumming of the fingers that brings out the delicate notes of which a guitar is capable.

Do his fingers ever get tired?
 "Oh, yes . . . tired, very tired. We play for perhaps a week, engagements such as this, and then three days rest." After having watched those fingers in action, it was of a mind to agree they might get tired.

And the guitar as an instrument? Capable of the highest artistry, in the right hands; or of the crudest noise making, in amateur hands. "It is the more difficult instrument of the world . . . it is the more difficult than any."

HANDSOME WIFE

I was impressed with the handsomeness of Mrs. Montoya, an American of Scottish descent who has a slight accent of her own. Her appearance belied the fact that she has two sons, 17 and 19 years of age. Mrs. Montoya is a dancer, and she and her husband sometimes practice together at home. In fact, that was how they met, in the Left Bank of Paris.

She likes to tell of the time when their children were babies, and everyone but Papa came down with the chicken pox. "My sons had only a few spots here and there, but I was covered with them from head to toe." She relates that her husband came home each evening, got out the calamine lotion, and "painted me like he would paint a board fence."

Trial Dates Set For Amarilloans

CLEBURNE (AP)—Judge Penn Jackson set new spring trial dates Monday for three former Amarillo officials. All were indicted after hearings last year before the Texas House General Investigating Committee.

Joe Roy Stevens, former Randall County judge who resigned after the hearing, will be tried May 1 here in 18th District Court.

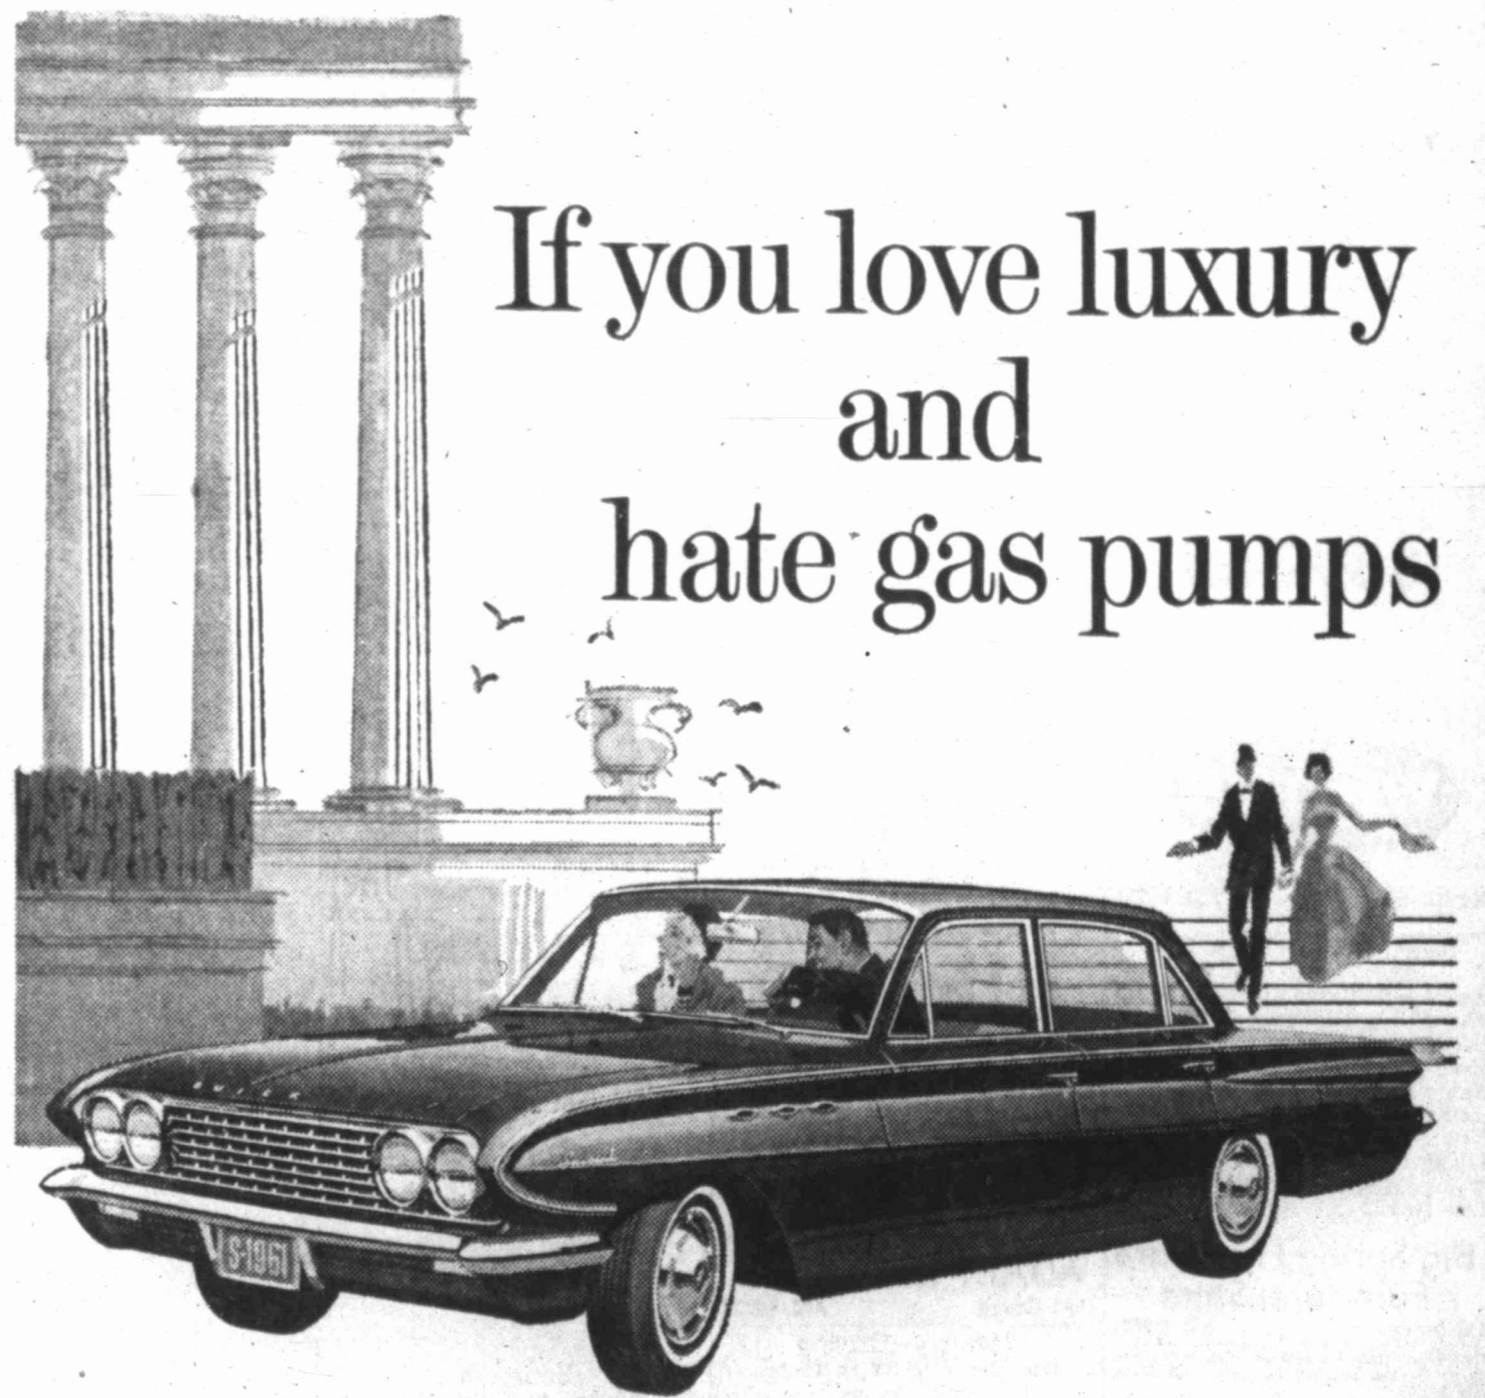

He is charged with perjury and false swearing.

Curtis E. Travis will be tried April 24. He is a former Potter County deputy sheriff accused of perjury.

Another Potter County deputy sheriff, G. R. Bufkin will be tried

May 8. The cases were moved here on a change of venue from Amarillo, which lies in both Potter and Randall Counties.

None of the three men appeared at the arraignment. Shulford Farmer, a Waco lawyer, represented them.
