Cosden Deal Affects Community

A 35-million-dollar transaction is news enough in itself, but the announcement that W. R. Grace & Co., plans purchase of all the assets of Cosden Petroleum Corporation is more than business news in Big Spring.

It carries a tremendous impact upon all the community's economy, since Cosden, as the largest industry in the city Yor so many years, has fulfilled its civic responsibilities to a measure not frequently found in industrial-community relations.

This is not to say that the picture necessarily will change, and indeed all citizens are hopefully anticipating that a fullfledged Grace operation will be of the same vast benefit to the community.

The Grace proposal to purchase the remainder of Cosden's stock (it already owns 52.6 per cent) was not entirely unexpected. The larger company has had a vital interest in the local concern for several years, indeed made a bid for a merger twice before setting out to acquire a majority of the common stock.

A tax situation had led some to believe that Grace would eventually take the final step, and this is what has occurred. The proposal apparently means that Grace will take over every item owned by Cosden, will extinguish the Cosden corporate entity, but very likely retain the brand name for marketing purposes. This all could be subject to revisions, of course, Any move affecting a concern that employs probably a thousand people in a community the size of Big Spring (Cosden's total personnel numbers about 1,150), and has an annual payroll of nearly seven and a half million dollars is a move vital to the very lifeblood of our city.

And, because of its headquartering here and the nature of its administration, Cosden has had a very intimate relationship with Big Spring affairs. Its officers are always available to anyone who cares to see them; its relationship with its employes has been of the very highest standard; its concern with things affecting Big Spring's welfare has always been present

We feel that the Grace leadership is well aware of this, and certainly would want such a status continued.

Grace already is a part of the community, through majority control of Cosden and through its new ammonia plant. It now is due to become a bigger part, and we hope the future is bright for both company and community.

Huge Slice Of State's Money

Those who like to toy with labels would be more accurate to call Texas an "education state" than a "welfare state." The current state biennial budget (1962-63) illustrates the point.

The state will spend during the next two years $2.8 billion, 16.7 per cent more than in the preceding two years. More than a fifth of that is state-administered federal aid

Of that total $1,096,980,000 will go for the public schools and state-supported colleges. In Texas, 39.7 per cent of state spending is for education, against a national average of 31.1 per cent. Texas' current state education budget is $226 million more than the one for 1960-61, an increase made possible mainly by the new sales tax. Federal aid to Texas education, at all levels, was only $24.5 million last

In contrast, only 16 per cent of the current state budget will go for public welfare, rather low for a large industrialized state. And federal aid contributes a whopping $168 million share of that.

The state sales-tax boost to the Texas educational program seems likely to take some of the steam out of this state's support for President Kennedy's new general federal aid to education bill, a question on which Texas opinion has been sharply divided anyway. However, there is likely to be continuing firm majority support for the existing federal education aid programs.

Around The Rim The Right Time And Place

There's a time and place for nearly everything. By the same token there are times and places where prudence should govern one's actions and words.

Once upon a time a fire broke out in my town. The blaze was on the roof of a three story building. It was a spectacular sort of fire with the flames from a superstructure on the roof soaring high into the sky. There was a good wind and the firemen had their hands full.

I had climbed up on the roof of the building. I was accompanied by a young reporter who was not noted for either his thoughtfulness nor for his tact. Indeed, he was a brash, reckless youngster, apt, always, to say exactly the wrong thing or do the wrong thing at any given time.

WE WALKED across the roof toward the center of the blaze. A lone fireman, grasping a squirming high pressure firehose, was training a stream of water on the flames. He had about all he could do to handle the hose which twisted and fought to break his grasp.

He saw us approach out of the corner of his eye and nodded. We stood watching the fire, shielding our faces from the heat with our hands.

This young reporter fellow fumbled in his pockets and came up with a cigarette. He then ransacked his pockets again looking for a light, Finding none, he raised his evebrows to me in a sort of silent question. Did I have a light? I shook my head. I thought that would end it. That he would put the cigarette back into his pocket and forego the smoke. I should have known him better,

BLITHELY HE strode over to where the sweating fireman was struggling with the room. The subject was scaring the wits stubborn hose and battling the swirling flames.

The reporter tapped the fireman on the shoulder

"You golda match. Mac?" he asked. The fireman reacted as many would. He lowered the hose to the roof and tried to pin it down with his knees. At the same time he reached for a pocket where I suppose he had matches.

Just at that moment the blaze in the superstructure got a new lease on life and the blaze roared out with increased fory.

Then it dawned on the fireman just how utterly absurd the situation was. Here we were on the blazing roof of a three story building. Here he was trying to fight down a roaring fire. And here was a fellow, standing fifteen feet from a veritable inferno, casually asking for a match,

The fireman took a deep breath. Then he began to cuss. I listened in shocked amazement. I have heard experts swear in my time, including the renowned mule drivers of the old days.

BUT NEVER have I heard so masterful a job as was performed by this justly irritated fireman.

The brash reporter appeared to be stunned by the storm he had loosed. He backed away, his mouth hanging open. Then he turned on his heels and walked to the ladder. Before I could make a move he was on his way down.

I figured I had seen all there was to see on that roof. So I went back down the ladder, too, leaving harassed smoke eater to reign in lonely grandeur on top of the blazing building. It seemed that departure was advisable. - SAM BLACKBURN

The Presidential Control Panel

Marquis Childs

How has President Kennedy faced during his first year in office? What has he learned in this "biggest job in the world"? What are his gaing, his frustrations, his regrets? These and other things are evaluated by Marquis Childs. following a private session with the President, in a series of the articles of which this is the first.

WASHINGTON-The members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the President's military aides filed out of the Oval Room on the second floor of the White House and chat briefly in the big hallway that is furnished as a pleasant living space. It is shortly before 5:30 and near the end of another Presidential day,

THE COLD, clear high noon when the youngest elected President in America's history stood before the Capitol Plaza which was deep in snow to take the oath of office seems a long time ago. How has the year that has passed changed President Kennedy's concept of the office? How has it changed the man himself?

With the crisp, almost terse directness that is characteristic, the President discussed these things with this reporter over a cup of tea in the Oval Room. At the outset he spoke with quiet pride of the room itself which, with its softyellow walls, off-white ceiling and furniture done in complementary shades, is part of the transformation his wife has worked in the White House. She had spent the whole day with a television crew recording the historic aspects of the President's house about which, her husband notes, she has made herself an authority

WHAT HE HAS learned about the office in a year of ordeal by crisis is a confidence in his own ability to reach judgments based on his own past knowledge of men and events. You learn to question the presumption that this man must be right because of the uniform he wears or the impressive office he holds.

He feels that 14 years in the House and the Senate was a good preparation in understanding, even though in the first months he failed to appreciate it. You come newly into the office and you face a control board as complicated as that in a jet transport plane and each control button has an impressive label on it. You are told, for example, that an invasion against Cuba must be launched before June or it will be too late to overthrow Castro and if it is set afoot at once the chances of its success are high. You act on that presumption.

ON LAOS the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of State favored going in with force supplied by the United States and the other SEATO powers. The President waited. He weighed the situation in the scales of his own judgment-the fact that it is a landlocked, primitive jungle country with a tribal people resistant to war.

He decided for a neutral and independent Laos and he is high in his praise of W. Averell Harriman for the success he has had thus far toward that goal. It may still fail. But the President believes that his judgment was right.

THAT IS perhaps the major change at the end of the first year-his confidence in his own powers and his knowledge of what he can and cannot do. To say that he is enjoying the uses of power might be an exaggeration. But rewards and satisfactions are evident which were far from certain in the first months.

If power is the corrupter that it is said inevitably to be, the signs are not visible on the surface. The President can repeat what he said at the time of the hairbreadth election to the effect that defeat is an orphan. And he can add with a good-natured grin that if Richard Nixon had been elected by a switch of 60,000 to 70,000 votes he would be a political genius today

ANOTHER GAIN in the trial run is the intimate understanding the President feels he has gained of the men in his official family. When you sit down before that control board to pilot a jet aircraft for the first time you scarcely have even met before the officers you have asked to serve as flight engineer, navigator, and so on. You do not know really what their prejudices and temperaments arehow they will react in a given situation. Above all, the lesson is one of patience. There are all kinds of how-to-do-it books and manuals on the Presidency. One of them much talked about a year ago was Richard E. Neustadt's "Presidential Pewer-the Politics of Leadership." But beyond theory it is the on-the-job training for that which, apparently, there is no substitute, as this President has discovered

THE CONGO and the secessionist province of Katanga and what to do about it has recently absorbed more of the President's time and concern than any other problem. It has drawn more White House mail than any other subject, and the President is acutely sensitive to public reaction. He has worried along with it from day to day with a firsthand knowledge of what was happening and now he has some hope that it can be resolved.

In the same way he has followed the crisis in the Dominican Republic and he recites the names of the leaders in the crisis and their ups and downs with the same intimate knowledge. One of his advisers would have gone much further in trying to overthrow Moise Tshombe .: When nationalism which pre-The blind submission to Russia

THOSE WHO have been following the philosophic and pragmatic possibilities of the A-weapon will note that the cobalt bomb, considered the real killer-chiller some eight or 10 years ago, is no longer mentioned. It was replaced, speculatively, by the neutron bomb, just as lethal but so much more tidy.

However, the neutron bomb may face the same fate as its cobalt brother. By 1970, the "asteroid bomb" may be perfected. At the end of this decade both the U. S. A. and the U.S.S.R. may have the rocket or missile power to nudge a small planet or asteroid out of its orbit and send it crashing into a predetermined spot on this globe.

Even the most cheerful headlines on this subject can be deceptive. "Ample Food Seen in Atomic Attack" I read only a week or so ago.

I should have stopped at the headline, for the first paragraph of the story explained that "surplus food and plenty of livable housing" would be left after a massive nuclear strike "because so many people would have been killed in the attack."

That is surely achieving plenty the hard way. Facing nuclear facts is one thing, but in the interim dying a thousand deaths is hard on most of us, especially the kids, (Copyright, 1982, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

Holmes Alexander Applying The Publicity Machinery

WASHINGTON - President Kennedy's State of the Union message began with the proposition that the federal government owes health, education and employment to all-and that our national preservation is owed to the 104-member United Nations and to the imperative necessity of reaching some atomic disarmament treaty with our mortal enemies.

HAVING LISTENED to this address in the press gallery, overhanging the full membership of House and Senate, your reporter does not for a moment believe that either a majority of the journalists or of the legislators would accept the presidential propositions.

Will this program, then, be summarily dismissed by the fearless, universallyrespected American press? Will it be dumped into limbo by the free-elected, conscientious 87th Congress? These are strong possibilities. The one factor that prevents their being inevitabilities is pop-Dear Dr. Molner: I've heard ularity (I do not say popular) pressure. about bad teeth causing people to > FOPULARITY OR publicity pressure in this country, notably since the ascendency of electronic demagoguery and Madison Avenue, is an ageless phenomenon, at least as old as the legend of Icarus, who attached himself to wings, a primitive flying machine, and "flew" to self-destruction. It is the old, old story of the Machine overcoming the Man.

The point is too familiar to need much laboring. Given the radio machine, F. D. Roosevelt was able to surmount Congressional objection, Constitutional authority and quasi-sacred traditions. He accomplished what historians concur in calling a "revolution," which Mr. Kennedy is still riding. F.D.R. established the political machine of the Federal government. He made himself the only lifetime ruler that the U.S.A. ever had, having flaunted the gentleman's agreement against third terms. Today, with opinion-taking and opinion-making becoming a major industry, the Machine again is poised to overwhelm the Man.

BY MANIPULATION of his popularity. the President could conceivably overcome the good judgment of press and legislators. I say "President" in the generic anybody in the presiden-

The President could only do this by exciting greedy passions, and by organizing a bandetti of ravening minorities. He could not do it at all if the U.S.A. remained resolutely a representative or republican form of government. It stands to reason that the chosen leaders of the people are, generally speaking, superior in knowledge and ability to the people themselves. While it's tiresome to harp on the republic vs. democracy theme without some specific reference, the point is well taken when purposefully applied. Congress is a better judge of the New Frontier programs than the "people" are. As Madison put it in Federalist Paper Number Ten:

". . . IT MAY WELL happen that the public voice, pronounced by the representatives of the people, will be more consonant to the public good than if pronounced by the people themselves."

Most observers in Washington do not expect the President to turn to the machinery he knows so well in order to beat down the better judgment of seasoned lawmakers like Speaker McCormack, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Mills, Senate Finance Chairman Byrd and Senate Armed Services Chairman Russell. Controversial school legislation, expensive medical care, radical trade treaties and foolish disarmament ventures are not probable at this session.

THE PRESIDENT HAS a duty to report on the State of the Nation, but only Congress may properly do anything about it. The President has a lot of power at his

At that time the boys' and girls' gymnastics groups will perform along with a show by the ballet and tapdancing class.

Indian Guide stunt night is the feature activity Thursday. The boys will perform dances and short films at movie establishstunts and will display crafts made in connection with Indian Guide work, Leach said. The public is invited to the show.

SYLVIA WENE, bowling star:

"There is no reason why a woman can't be every bit as good as a man on a bowling alley. The women have a pair of natural prerequisites. Timing and rhythm are the two biggest factors in bowling. Where most men try to overpower the ball, women just naturally have those two most necessary traits . . . Bowling's a wonderful recreation and a fine sport for women. It's healthy exercise and, on top of that, it's slenderizing. What more does a woman want?"

JIM MURRAY, Los Angeles writer:

"There are over six million people who attend horse races annually in the state of California and they are like no other breed, animal, vegetable or mineral, anywhere on earth. They are the largest congress of philanthropists in the western world. Thanks to the cut the state takes on their wagers, they donate to charity, build schools, finance county fairs, underwrite employment for boys handicapped by size and restore wildlife. The next time you see an elk grazing on a state preserve, just remember that behind every elk stands a guy with frayed cuffs and holes in his shoes smoking a cigar he has just rescued from an ash can by the $2 window . . . They get back 85 cents on the dollar, but they don't complain . . . They look unhappy, but they're where they want to be, doing what they want to do-lose. GARY PLAYER, pro golfer from South Africa: "Financial opportunities for a golfer in America are amazing. I think this is why the American pros are so friendly and helpful, even though they're playing for such big stakes. There seems to be enough for everyone."

GENE WOODLING, Washington outfielder:

'Some of the unions that are having trouble should see how much can be done by just talking, like the ballplayers did with the owners. You know me-I'm a red neck. If there is something to gripe about, I yell longer and louder than anyone else. But we players have it so good we don't know what to ask for next. And it's all been done because we've been willing to give in on certain things if the owners need a favor, and they lean over backwards to help us. I don't know why baseball officials don't publicize our pension plan more. It's the best in the world, and if a kid knew what a great deal he could get in baseball maybe he'd want to go into the game rather than into another business."

ALEX KROLL, Rutgers All-America footballer, after performing the Senior Bowl game:

"This is a different type of game the Southerners play; it is tougher football-and I like it. I'd like to play it. Up East, we' throw a block or attempt a tackle. Say we fall on the ground. Well, that's as far as it goes most of the time. Now, you take Billy Neighbors (of Alabama) out there on the South team. You knock him down and he gets up, trails the play and makes the tackle. That's the difference in the game, a second effort."
