The entire west half of the block is owned by the First Baptist Church, which has had its property for sale since it is building a new church home on Marcy Drive.

The east half is occupied by two office buildings and some residences.

Now that the site for the projected federal facility has been approved, next step is for the GSA (the housekeeping agency of the government) to inform all property owners of its selection, and to request right of entry on such properties for final appraisal and eventual ac-

Guilt Pinned Tighter On Lee Oswald

WASHINGTON (AP)-Mountains of newly disclosed evidence pinned securely today the sole guilt of President John F. Kennedy's assassination on Lee Harvey Oswald, the Marxist who said he hated America but found that the Soviet Union 'stunk.'

The 26 volumes of Warren Commission hearing transcript released Monday, bared in full the charges of those who hold that Oswald was only the triggerman for a conspiracy or as his mother testified - a scapegoat for murderers still uncaught

ADMITTED OPINION The testimony revealed that those witnesses offered only admitted speculation, opinion, or unsupported theory.

Most of it was rebutted by the hard evidence against Oswald, piled up remorselessly in thousands of pages of testimony and still more thousands of exhibits.

There were disagreements even among those at the center of the nightmare events of Nov. 22, 1963. Did the dying president speak? No, said the widow Jacqueline, who was splashed said the Secret Service agent in

Integration For The Farmer

The current issue of Farm Journal contains an article by E. H. Fallon, general manager of Agway, Inc., a cooperative enterprise which, among other things, operates a chain of 59 retail food stores.

In this he makes out a case for integration of operation, noting that "the integrator produces for a known market (his own), cuts some of the costs between farm and retail outlet and saves money.'

He goes on to add: "We are going to have more integration and farmers will have to do some of the integrating themselves or other interests will integrate them out of business." He bases this concept on the increasing presence of meat packers in the livestock breeding business; ownership of canning plants and bakeries by retail chains; experimenting in poultry production by some food

The road he is proposing admitted-ly is rocky, for Fallon said experience had driven home many points, among them the intense competitiveness of the retail food business. (The average after-tax profit of 59 food chains in 1963 was only 1.2 per cent of sales.) In business, as in agriculture, costs continually creep up, and with a 10 per cent annual increase in items, the problem of space is ever present. Buying is just as competitive as selling. The operator continually has to drive for a greater volume in sales, and "it's a rough business, run by professional marketers, and no place for amateurs," he added. Finally, observed Fallon, "you've got to have highly competitive management and adequate capital; in a word, you've got to be as good as your competition." And in this he has put his finger on the key to success or

The Anniversary

The first anniversary of the tragic death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy has come and gone with a vast wave of remembrances.

Most of them were in good taste and with due respect and reverences. Unfortunately, there were many cheap gestures which touched on the maudlin, which were as superficial and unworthy as some of the legion of trinkets which have issued from the assassination of a president. There were some articles, too, written without proper sense of balance or propriety, some of them speculative to the point of crudeness.

Yet, the preponderance of tributes were above this sort of thing and were given with due sincerity and dignity. A few of them were dramatie in simplicity and touching.

John F. Kennedy was a warm and human person, highly intelligent, quick of wit and sometimes quick to temper. In the perspective of time it will become easier to view him objectively and to assess his real place in history in the light of the tides which he may have set in motion, and of the aspirations he may have awakened to action.

Thus far we have fought-and failed to win-with an Army weapon: the helicopter. The suspicion lurks that the "chopper" is an oversold product of public relationists in the services and in the aircraft industry. If so, the implications should not be considered as sinister or unpatriotic. Every modern weapon, from General Billy Mitchell's day to this, has come to attention through militant salesmanship. Right now there are indications of the emergence of another weapon - the river boat.

THE WHOLE of Indochina is riverdominated. In the North the Coi (Red) is 720 miles long. In the South, the Mekong flows for nearly 2,500 miles. Both rise in China, have fast flowing currents in their upper reaches and large, populous, rice-producing deltas where they empty into the sea. Hanoi, the Communist capital, lies on the Coi. COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - A romance that literally got off the ground here during World War II has resulted in 20 years of married life largely centering around military aviation.

Ann Waldner of St. Paul, Minn., came to Columbus for training in flying the B17 bomber as a member of the Women's Auxiliary Service Pilots (WASP). Her instrument instructor was Lt. Phillip N. Currier.

IN THEIR losing war for Indochi-na, the French used their amphibious group, called "Dinassault," effectively but indecisively. What it needed to on a river campaign is task force of landing craft and assault troops with jungle training and high firepower. The ideal boat would be swift, shallow of draft, low of silhouette with quiet engines and with crews trained in mining and subsurface demolition.

Our Navy has no vessels of these specifications. The LCM-8, powered by two diesel engines, is so notsy that it panicks the water buffalo and alarms the countryside. The LCVP is thin-skinned and carries a high silhouette. The armored tractor (amphibious) is too slow.

WHILE THE U. S. has generally neglected military river study, and has given the Navy and Marines no "doctrine" on the subject, the Soviets brought out a short work in 1957 en-"Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos." It stresses the "great role" of the Col and Mekong rivers in these

THE WHITE HOUSE attitude is that Viet Nam, while a pressing problem, is not the theatre in which we will win or lose the struggle against communism. The policy, in addition to observing MacArthur's dictum against land war, is to make the involvement too deadly for guerrilla bands and too costly for Ho-Chi-minh's supply lines. If we can dominate the rivers, both these missions are within reach of accomplishment.

Billy Graham

How can I, a young Christian, know what is right and what is wrong for me to do?

Your question is one I am most happy to try to answer because it is one asked me in person so frequently. First of all, let me urge you to see that the Christian religion is not a negative religion. It is not because a person does not do certain things that he is a Christian. We are Christians because we believe in Christ as our Saviour. The Christian faith is a positive faith and its message is a positive one - faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and trust in Him as the Lord of our lives. This does not mean that a Christian has license to do as he pleases, for freedom does not mean license. There are certain things which are basically sinful and from these all Christians should turn away. There are other things which are questionable and Christians should avoid them. There are other things you may feel perfectly right, but if you do them you know they will hurt your influence. For the sake of those who would be affected, you will be wise to abstain from them, too. The surest way to know what to do, or not to do, is to ask God to be your guide. Think of Christ as a living presence and ask Him will He do this with you, gives you the assurance of His pres-ence, go ahead; if not, stay with that is what it is) forms be-inflammation a chance to sub-Him. Most mines are anything but beautiful. Generally they are dusky manmade caves shored up with heavy timbers, muddy underfoot and prone to drip icy water on the visi-

There is one exception. You may never get a chance to go down into a zinc mine. If you do you will see fantastic sights.

ZINC COMES from an ore called galena. Galena is a crystalline substance, basically gray in color, but flecked with hundreds of scintillating fragments which reflect light like so many diamonds.

My friend had been chamber of commerce secretary in Miami, Okla., a great zinc and lead mining center. I was there on a chamber of commerce junket.

The towering derricks and mountainous slag dumps of zinc and lead mines had caught my eye.

MY FRIEND asked if I would like to go down into a zinc mine. I told him I would. He managed for two pair of coveralls and we promoted some cloth caps. We drove out to a mine and, to my surprise, stopped half a mile or more from the buildings which apparently housed the above ground operations.

In the midst of a grassless tract was a small structure, topped by a small derrick supporting a maze of pulleys and cables.

WE WENT INSIDE the building and stood on the brink of a circular hole about four or five feet across. Out of this hole emerged what at first glance seemed to be an iron bucket. There was a slit in one side. My host signaled for me to step inside the bucket. He joined me and the man at the controls pulled a lever. We dropped at what seemed to me to be the speed of light for five or six hundred feet. Then the bucket came to rest. A sizable tunnel led from the point into the main workings

THE MAIN tunnel of the mine was enormous. It must have been more than a hundred feet across. The floor was almost as smooth as if it had been made of concrete. The ceiling towered 50 or 60 feet overhead.

The entire tunnel was brilliantly lighted. The walls were solid galena which sparkled in the lights like a fairy place. Instead of dirty timber or rusty iron to support the high domed ceilings, the miners had left vast columns of the ore itself, extending upward to the ceiling like huge pillars of jewelled metal.

A small railroad ran down the center of the tunnel and from time to time, a string of tiny ore cars, pulled by a little engine would rattle past us.

HERE AND THERE in the vast expanse I saw men climbing up tall stepladders. From the top the ladder, they would peer at the ceiling, focus-ing highpower lights on the galena crystals overhead. They would then take a long crowbar and punch it against the ceiling.

Their efforts would be rewarded by a sudden crash of tons of rock. These men were making certain that none of the mass of ore overhead slipped and crushed the miners who moved about like ants below.

It was delightfully cool. There were no odors such as you encounter in coal mines. There was no dust except an occasional faint puff when one of the loosened slaps came crashing down. If there was any water, it was kept pumped out.

THERE WAS NO dinginess such as one usually associates with a mine. Instead there was the long corridor, brightly illuminated, stretching away into the distance. And as far as you could see the galena crystals twinkled and flickered.

Away ahead of us we could hear the rumble of the big machines used to loosen the ore and the vague rattle of the hoists came vaguely to our

Finally we returned to our little iron bucket. Again the man flickered a lever far over our heads. And our bucket was suddenly projected upward. Before you could get braced you were back in the little shack. And my friend was asking me if I had enjoyed my visit. When I caught my breath I told him

I had. I'd like to go again. -SAM BLACKBURN

Richard Starnes Our Generation's Place In History

WASHINGTON - The generation of Americans that shared the tragedy of Nov. 22, 1963, is destined to hold a very special place in the history of mankind.

They were, of course, the society that produced the gifted young man whose life was taken in a monstrous-ly savage act. But if they achieved an eminence in civilization by bringing forth such a man as John F. Kennedy, they earned celebrity in the places of darkness by nurturing the likes of Lee Harvey Oswald.

MEN OF THE future who concern themselves with the past will regard us with awe and curiosity for harboring this great historical contradiction, if for no other reason. They will find abundant examples to support their theory that we were a schizoid society. We fought the bloodiest war in all the bloody history of the world, and then lifted up our former enemies, fed them, and restored them to the society of nations. We reached towering pinnacles of prosperity and tranquility, and used every foul deed of murder and intimidation to deny the benefits of our affluence to the 10 per cent of the American people who were born black.

IF THE 21ST Century citizen looks back at us in bewilderment, we can hardly blame him. He will comb the endless river of words in the Warren Commission Report, trying without success to find the answer to the one unanswerable question - why?

What motivated Lee Oswald? What was there in midcentury America that created the coiling miasma of hate and fear that nurtured Oswald? Why was hate so powerful a force a year ago in Dallas that all the apparatus of government could not protect the nation's handsome young

THEY WERE a violent sort, the historians of a future century will decide. Look at what happened to Oswald himself. And look at the swift vengeance that was Jack Ruby's reward. Crime, violence, blood and fire, lynching, legal and otherwise, hate, fear and suspicion - These were a way of life. Of course, they will find no sane motivation in all the mountainous volumes compiled by the Warren Commission, because it was an act of brutal madness that was commonplace in that day and time. It just happened that this particular murderer sought out a victim of more than ordinary celebrity. AS GOOD historians are bound to do, they will go far beyond the official record. They will try to recreate the mood of the city of Dallas that sunny, barbarous day. They will pore over our films, our books, our newspapers and the primitive fare that was available to us on television. They will read that President Kennedy was cheered by large crowds as he opened a two-day tour of Texas with motorcades through Houston and San Antonio. In Houston he made a ringing defense of his space program, larded with a bit of political oratory designed to help heal a rift in the Democratic party in Texas. And in Washington it was announced that on December 2nd President to Dr. Molner in care Kennedy would present the $50,000 Enrico Fermi Award to Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer.

THAT, NOTE WELL savants of another century, was an act of courage. For Dr. Oppenheimer was a nuclear scientist whom many Americans had once condemned as a security risk, and in November, 1963, he was still the bete noire of large numbers of doctrinaire conservatives.

But the newspapers of December 2nd contained no set-piece photograph of the smiling young President hand-ing Dr. Oppenheimer a certificate and a check. Instead there was a photograph of President Lyndon Johnson placing a wreath of roses on a fresh grave at Arlington National Cemetery, whose gently rolling fields enfold the nation's heroes within sight of the capital they helped to pre-

THERE ARE other clues that will bè useful to investigators who try in years to come to part the mists that so quickly gather around the events. large and small, that take place in other times. In the United Nations. for example, the interminable wrangling (still debating the Arab refugee problem, they were) was momentarily interrupted when the United States and the Soviet Union joined in presenting a draft proposal on the peaceful use of space. No one looking at the world as it was late in the year 1963 would have been justified in any boundless optimism. Still, in all the clouds of darkness, there were some fissures of light seen dimly.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY, so woefully inept (and betrayed by pompous and self-important bureaucrats) at the time of the Bay of Pigs, had been sure-handed and brave in the Cuban missile crisis. It all might have gone up in smoke right then, but it didn't, and the generations unborn are sure to take due note of Mr. Kennedy's role during that time of danger.

But the real lesson contained in the huge, inhuman mosaic of assassination is something else. The bright ones who occupy a world of peace and dignity a century hence will recognize it at once, and to them it will surely be the most compelling and important fruit of the whole shameful act. THE FACT John F. Kennedy's generation is too close to understand is that the most instructive truth to emerge from the Dallas murders is that - in the long perspectives of history - nothing was truly changed. We will, all of us who lived through Nov. 22, 1963, properly be arraigned as a violent, hateful, imperfectly civilized breed. But they will have to give us our due on the other side of history's ledger. The Republic endured. The instant the sorrowing emergency room staff at Parkland Memorial Hospital told the world that John Fitzgerald Kennedy was dead, a trusted and respected successor automatically became the most powerful ruler on earth. The machinery of our civilization did not falter for the wink of an eye. In all the sorrow and the shock, in the trauma that shaped and changed us all in countless subtle ways, there was no panic, no convulsion, no rending of the fabric of our institutions.

HISTORY WILL note that in death John Kennedy reaffirmed the dawning truth that once was uttered b another soon-to-be-martyred President - that government by the people shall not perish from the earth. (Copyright, 1964, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.) Ott

Agents Target Of Affidavit On JFK Death

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amazement at what he called the slow response of Secret Service agents when the assassin's bullets rang out in Dallas was expressed to the Warren Commission by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough, D-Tex.

He indicated they didn't act as fast as trained infantrymen or Marines would have done. Yarborough was two cars be-hind President John F. Kennedy's limousine when Kennedy was assassinated Nov. 22, 1963. The car in between was a spe-cially equipped one carrying eight Secret Service agents.
