Reason For Ration

Texas is now preparing for another major upgrading of its public schools comparable to the state system's reorganization under the 1949 Gilmer-Aikin law. Gov. Connally's Public School Study Committee, created by the 1965 Legislature and headed by Houston attorney Leon Jaworski, will report its recommendations in 1968 for expected action in the 1969 legislative session

Probably the single most contro-versial issue to be faced in that effor will be over the ratio of cost, for improving the schools qualitative-ly and quantitatively, to be borne re-spectively by the local school dis-tricts, the state and the federal government. This issue was anticipated by Jaworski in a recent address to the Texas Association of School Boards and Administrators meeting in Austin Jaworski charged that some school districts-he indicated a minorityare relying excessively on increased state and federal aid and not exerting as much local effort as they should to finance their fair share of existing educational programs. He urged every district "to re-examine its level of (financial) effort and its management practices to help bridge this critical period in public educa-

That is fair enough, but we hope it does not presage any move by the state committee toward recomm ing a substantial statewide shift of the cost burden for improvement from state aid to local support. The Texas ratio of state aid to local support is, it must be conceded, excep-tionally high. However, there is a good reason for that.

All of Texas' local governmental units, including the school districts, are exceptionally dependent on ad valorem property taxation. Most oth-er states allow their cities, particularly, broader tax bases so they can cope with mounting urban problems. If Texas school districts had to increase the local-support share of ed-ucational costs, that would seriously overburden the property-tax source, unless the state should get out of property taxation and allow cities to increase their revenues from other sources. Both of those adjustments have long been advocated, but so far not adopted. And so long as that sit-uation prevails, the ratio of state aid to local support in financing the pub-lic schools must be kept high. Perhaps, in the meantime, some yard-stick can be devised as to comparable efforts by localities.

Off To A Good Start

The Texas Air Control Board au-thorized by the 1965 Legislature was not named by Gov. Connally until last March, but his choices created an able and expert body that has gotten off to a running start.

In just seven months, the new board has adopted rules after public hearings, launched research and urban surveys (including one here), queried industry on air-quality standards, applied for a federal grant, adopted a tentative budget ($97,000), set up a staff, expanded an air monitoring system, and worked out directions for a state program. If such vigor is sustained. Texas will be able to check air pollution well before the situation here gets anywhere near as bad as it already is in many other states. The new board is made up of four experts (including Corpus Christi City Manager Herbert Whitney, who for many years was city manager at Big Spring), and two "public" members appointed by the governor, plus three ex officio members: The state health commissioner and the Texas Animal Health Commission and Industrial Commission executive directors. The board will depend heavily on the State Health Department for staff work.

Under the state's Air Quality Act, any citizen complaint, as well as a staff finding or similar report, may set off an investigation. Persuasion will first be used to gain correction by an offender, and many industries commendably have already pledged voluntary cooperation. Otherwise, a board order can be enforced by a civil proceeding with a penalty of $50 day for noncompliance. Procedure is provided for appeal to the courts of board orders.

The Texas Air Control Board will encourage local governments to undertake air-pollution control programs. The new state law does not supersede related city ordinances, though the latter must conform to board regulations.

Consequently, the stage apparently is set for an effective statewide pro-gram to keep air pollution below lim-its dangerous to human, animal and piece of unfinished business left behind by Congress was legislation designed to make its own operations more efficient. plant life, as the law requires. This is a most welcome development, and by no means premature: The time to which measures were passed in assure that the air pollution problem the final days before adjournwill be kept manageable is before it becomes so serious as to cause a public outcry that would compel hasty, costly and often mistaken corment, some members spoke out strongly on the need for Congress to get its own house in rective action.

He will be feted by his wife, daughter and four other grandchildren, who will probably cluster around him eagerly to help him blow out his birthday candles on his favorite cake-a plain angel food. And there will prob-ably be a small present or stick of gum for each of his grandchildren, for even on his birthday, Gramps will pass out treats to others.

HE GREW UP around Cincinnati, Ohio, and spent some 30-odd of his 75 years as owner-operator, with his brother, of a feed and grain store in a tiny little hamlet called Cherry Grove, some half-hour's ride from the hills of Cincinnati.

This is how I best remember Gramps, for as Grandchild No. 1, I was prohably more spoiled and petted for my first 10 years than any of my brothers and sisters who were to fol-

I REMEMBER when I'd spend a weekend with my grandparents, and a special treat to me was to ride into the city with him in his green feed truck, delivering grain to people in the suburbs. Grandma would fix us a picnic lunch, perhaps some peanut butter sandwiches and hot chocolate for me and more palatable food for Gramps, and we'd be off in the truck for a whole Saturday. It seemed to me that Gramps knew just about everyone and everything to know about the area in which I grew

HE ONCE MANAGED to get me a ride on a red caboose in the back of a train and together we got off some miles down the road and drank our hot chocolate in a wooded park. I've forgotten just how far we went, but I was always impressed with the ride in that red caboose.

My grandfather celebrates his 75th ... There was never a little girl who loved chewing gum more than I did-Gramps always carried a six-pack of chewing gum with him or made certain that it was the number one item on our marketing list.

AND OH, how I did love to go to the market with Gramps. He knew just where to get the best meats at one place and the freshest fruits and vegetables at another. He still does. And he'd visit with everyone in the grocery. "This is Rosie's daughter," he'd proudly say, and look around for a grubby-faced little cherubim who usually had her hand on her pennypurse and was headed for the candy department.

BIRTHDAYS and Christmases were a special event for me, because it seemed as if Gramps knew exactly what I wanted. And so did Santa, strangely enough. When school started, it was Gramps who took us kids out shopping and bought all of us some new school clothes. And even later, when I was quite the grown-up teenager, he'd usually be the best au-thority on the right color or style for Gramps always felt that no child was ever too small to learn anything. So, when I begged and begged to be allowed to play Canasta with my grandmother and him, he taught me all the tricks of the game - and sometimes, but not often, I'd win. When I got older, I was allowed to play with the grown-ups who stopped by for an evening of Canasta and talk.

IT SEEMS but a brief hour to grandparents since little girls grow up and move away and maybe don't write or visit as much as they used to. But that's when they finally appreciate grandparents.

Holmes Alexander They Pressed A Mite Too Far

> Maryland won their Democratic primaries for no other reason than the backlash.

> > IT NEEDS to be asked-do we have here a persisting controversy in American politics? The Slave State question lasted from Jackson's time through Lincoln's, and was only re-solved by war. The Prohibition wrangle ran from Wilson to Franklin Roosevelt, and was ended only by repeal.

There are two viewpoints on the permanence of the open housing issue. Within the administration brain trust, there is a disposition to rationalize the defeat of Title Four. If a man's home is a status symbol, and nothing else, the ardor to protect it will fade away, and the backlash will subside. The new housing developments are economically, not racially, discriminatory. You can buy homes for $60,000, $40,000, $12,500, depending on your purse. The mobility of the population, it is said, will dampen the heat, and we won't have the likes of Maddox and Mahoney with us for long. BUT THE OTHER viewpoint finds that the home's sanctity is inviolate, and having been successfully defended by political backlash, will be repeatedly defended by the same weapon. That weapon, in the hands of skilled manipulators like George Wallace, can be effective on many other racial matters in the years ahead, and domestic tranquility will be hard to recapture. Whatever the viewpoint, one conclusion is indisputable. It was a bad day for the republic when the invaders of privacy pressed a mite too far. (Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

More Asian Support Sought

MANILA -To call this an Asian summit conference is a concession to the pride of the small Asian countries participating. The hope is that out of that pride will come a willingness to unite in support of the conflict in Viet Nam and to contribute a much greater effort for the long pull ahead.

ONLY A SMALL fraction of the peoples of Asia are represented at Manila and in three of the countries -South Viet Nam, South Korea and Thailand-a military oligarchy has only limited popular support. It is this that makes something of a mock-ery of all the talk about "free Asia," freedom, independence - the words that come so glibly from the speeches of the delegates.

There are winds of change blowing in Asia and they carry hopeful straws

Billy Graham

I know a minister who has one of the wildest daughters in town. Why is it that some minister's children turn out to be anything -G.S. but Christian?

The fact that a child is reared in the parsonage doesn't automatically make him a Christian. Each of us must find God for ourselves. I have a young son who doesn't eat like I would like him to eat, but I've found out one thing: I can't force him to take food. Some ministers try to "force-feed" their faith to their children. While the Bible says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," this doesn't mean that the child can be forced to be a Christian. Our decision for Christ must be voluntary, and not through pressure exerted by others.

Some minister's children rebel against religion because members of their congregations set up standards for the minister's children, they don't set for their own. Thus the children of the pastor are caused to feel they are different and abnormal. I've heard church people say, "Watch what you say, you're the preacher's son," or, "You mustn't fight or get angry, you're the preacher's son." Thus, the child feels restricted, set apart, and unlike his fellows. It is easy to see why such children; unless these things are carefully explained by their parents, become rebellious against the church. But the Bible says, "When he is old he will not depart from it." A child can never completely throw off the influence of a loving, devout parent.

for a future that will not be dominated by dictatorships of the left or the right. After he visits Thailand President Johnson will go to Kuala Lumpur, the capital of Malaysia. This is the only country on his tour not represented at the Manila conference and it is one of the most hopeful of the new nations struggling to achieve a workable economy. WHILE MALAYSIA has no intenstrong Western orientation and with this has gone a vigorous program of social reform and a carefully planned industrial buildup.

IN JUNE in Seoul, Malaysia was one of nine countries forming the Asian and Pacific Council to promote a wide variety of cooperative endeavors. Japan was the dominant power and if a New Asia is to take shape it will be through this organization (ASPAC) or something even more far reaching that may grow out of it. The leadership of Japan, soon to be the third industrial nation in the world second only to the United States and the Soviet Union, is essential, and that leadership is rapidly becoming a reality.

AMERICAN policy-makers understand this. They have given full behind-the-scenes backing to the new council which will meet again at the ministerial level next year in Bangkok. They have deliberately stood aside to let Japan and the other Asian partners take the lead.

That is the rule for the American delegation at Manila. Rarely before in his political career has Lyndon Johnson sat still so long and listened to so many others make speeches. He is determined to be the benevolent auditor as America's Asian partners in the cruel war so close geographi-cally and yet so remote psychologi-cally from this bursting-at-the-seams capital have their say.

AS MORE restrained men such as President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines understand, the escalating war can engulf the budding prospect of a New Asla. Draining more and more of America's resources so urgently needed for the tasks of peace in a revolutionary world, it has begun to seem endless.

A Rebuff To Self-Government WASHINGTON - The strange story after Mr. Johnson had left on his Asian trip?

of a bill passed by the legislature of the Territory of Guam and then vetoed by President Johnson has escaped general notice. In fact, it looks as if the administration tried hard to keep the incident from getting any public attention.

IN ENDEAVORING to enact the bill, the 75,000 people of Guam had sought to exercise the right - given to all states under the Taft - Hartley Act - to determine for themselves whether workers must accept compulsory unionization. The bill, which was twice passed by the Guam legislasimply said that "no person ture, shall be denied the opportunity to obtain or retain employment because of non - membership in a labor organization." The freedom to make this choice today is enjoyed by 19 states. Congress recently was urged by President Johnson to take away from all states the power to pass any right-to-work law. But the President's recommendation was swept aside

MR. JOHNSON, under an existing statute, had 90 days in which to make up his mind whether he would veto the bill passed by the Guam legis-lature or allow it to become law. The measure had been vetoed by the territorial governor - a presidential appointee. But by a more than twothirds vote the legislature overrode that veto. This left it up to President Johnson to intervene or not as he pleased.

Why did the President wait 88 days before sending a letter stating that he chose to disregard the wishes of the legislature? Why was the President's letter to the governor of Guam not made public at the White House, but only a brief notice about his veto action posted on the bulletin board

David Lawrence

ENTIRELY APART from the pros and cons of the controversy over compulsory unionization, the broader question at issue is the right of a territorial legislature to write its own laws and to have them struck down only if they are in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The Washington Post, which gen-erally supports the administration, had this to say editorially:

"President Johnson has given a rebuff to self - government in vetoing the right-to-work law passed by the territorial legislature of Guam. . . .

"THE QUESTION is whether he is wise to enforce in Guam a restriction he could not impose on the states. The veto of Guam's wishes will seem to many to be the antithesis of the self - government and home rule that ought to be our objectives in the territories."

President Johnson has been proclaiming the doctrine of self - determination as one of the main reasons why American troops are fighting in Viet Nam today. But the people of Guam, who waited from 1898 to 1950 before the shield of colonialism was lifted and a territorial government established, are being denied now the right to decide for themselves whether a private organization shall be given by law the privilege of re-stricting individual freedom.

THE FUNDAMENTAL principle has been that the people of a territory shall be trained in self - government. But the lesson being taught them now is that they can be deprived at will of the right to enact the same laws as appear in the statute books of 19 states.

MERCURY THIEVES ARE AT IT AGAIN IN AREA OILFIELDS

Mercury thieves, who have been tapping oil field meters for the precious metal, have moved into Howard County, Sheriff A. N. Standard said today.

Three meters were robbed of about nine pounds of mercury sometime earlier this week. The looted meters were in the Vincent oil fields.

Standard said that 14 other meters in Borden County have been reported drained about the same time. Recently there were reports of mercury thefts in Dawson County, he said

The sheriff said that he understood the stolen mercury costs about $9 a pound on the open market and probably sells for higher prices on the black market.

The sheriff said that tapping the meters is a relatively simple thing to do. The important factor is to make use of either a plastic or glass container. The mercury will amalgamate with other metals and destroy metal containers.

Plains 20 at the time. They missed. In the dressing room later, the game officials conceded they had made an error in calculating penetrations and they were, in fact, even at 4-4. Plains had a 16-14 edge in first downs, which would have decided the game had it ended in a tie. Rip Sewell, the Plains coach, said later that the Cowboys the story on the penetrations. In Ricky Elmore, the Plains team boasts one of the best extra point kickers in West Texas. Plains had stopped the game following its third touchdown to check on penetrations and got a five-yard "delay of game" pen-alty, as a result. A third quarter fumble on the opposition's two-yard line by his fullback cost Spike Dykes' Belton ball club a victory over Seguin last week. Seguin won the game, 12-7. Dykes is the former Coahoma coach.

Belton had marched 62 yards when the bobble occurred.

College football scouts from all over the nation are likely to be after Abilene Cooper's Jack Mildren but they'll have to wait until the spring of 1968, when he'll earn his diploma.

Mildren, who'll try to bomb the Big Spring Steers into mission tonight, will be back to haunt 2-AAAA teams again in 1967. He's one of four junior backs coach Merrill Green will start against Big Spring.

One of the basketball players coach Tex Winters at Kansas State University is counting on this season is Ray Willis, 6-1. who performed for Cameron Junior College in Oklahoma last Winter knew he couldn't get much help from his last year's freshman team, so he went out and recruited both Willis and 6-7 Fred Arnold of Marin Junior College, Calif., after last season. Winter concedes that both have a good chance to crack his starting lineup.

Lubbock High School, which meets Big Spring twice in basketball the coming season, has three lettermen back from last season. Coach Max O'Banion says this is the shortest and least experienced club he's had in five years there. The returning veterans for the Westerners are 6-2 Gary Steward, 5-11 Tom Mattison and 6-2 Jom Sawyer. The Westerners were 18-11 last year.
