NOT SO SIMPLE

Why do people patronize one store — and pass right by he doors of another store?

The head of an association which represents food chains gave a general answer to that question in these vords: "People like to do business with people they like. t is almost as simple as that - but the processes by which ou get people to like you may not be simple. Public opinion is the combination of many likes and dislikes, many attitudes, many acts. Public opinion determines where people spend their money day after day; public opinion influences what stores will be profitable, what stores will fail."

Different people, obviously, want and seek different kinds of good, different kinds of services, different attractions of many sorts. Back of all the promotional and public relations activities of the merchant, from advertising to improved employee training, is the desire to attract as many people into his store as possible - in other words, to make people like him. And that will always be true so long as we have a free market and open competition.

WE'RE EATING MORE BEEF

Americans are eating more beef now than at any time in history, according to the president of the American Meat Institute. This is a reflection of current record beef supplies

The figures are impressive. During the first half of the vear, our per capita beef consumption amounted to about 74 pounds on an annual rate basis. This compares with an annual rate of 58 pounds during the same period last year, and is slightly above the record rate reached way back in 1909

Total meat production for 1953 is forecast at the huge figure of 23,700,000,000 pounds, which includes an 18 per cent increase in beef and veal production over last year along with a 10 per cent decline in pork production. And the outlook is for still further increases in total production for 1954

This is good news for the consumer — we are a nation of meat eaters, and medical research has proven that a diet with a high meat content has a definite favorable bearing on mental and physical vigor so far as the majority of the people are concerned . The producer, on the other hand, has had to cope with the problems of sharp declines in livestock values. The ultimate solution to this problem lies in increased demand to match increased production. They know the long-term interests of all are best served by the Davis, of Putnam, were in Baird Opin. Mr. Authony called at The
