By Local Retailers Some Weeks Ago

Floydada Smallest City To Receive Service Of Sales Expert

Classes for the study of retail selling and the problems of retail store service in general will be organized Friday at 2 p. m. at the county court room. Approval of plans for the school was given some weeks ago by local retail business heads. Laura J. Wilson, with the Division of Extension, university of Texas, will teach the school. Two to three sessions will be held weekly according to preliminary plans and two types of classes will be taught:

(a) for retail grocers; (b) for dry goods and ready-towear dealers.

How many classes will be organized depends on registration and interest among local retailers, it was indicated Monday when Miss Wilson conferred here briefly at the Chamber of Commerce, where Secretary Herwin E. Strickland, has made preliminary arrangements. Miss Wilson is a graduate of the Prince school for store service at Boston, Massachusetts. She has taught classes in many parts of the country including Marshall Field's in Chicago, Macey's and Wanamaker's in New York City.

This week she is completing classes in Plainview. Fairmount, Precinct 10: Geo. Pigg questionnaires will be mailed out as presiding judge and W. I. True; per instructions. Order numbers ing tonight it will be arranged to have classes in the different stores

How the available funds of the State Highway department for highway construction this year and next is likely to be spent was pointed to the past week by an announcement that "military" roads asked for by the national government in the vicinity of Dallas would require something more than a million and a half dollars this year. Similar amounts are to be spent in San Antonio, Houston, Waco, Corpus Christi, et cetera. Which means that other counties will have to do for themselves or wait for the national defense program to run its course. Everybody is for national defense but there are some queer tails being tied on to the old dog.

A scientific truck load limit law has been introduced into the legislature, and reports last week said it had been approved by the committee on highways and motor traffic. Just what the provisions of this bill may be we do not know. However, an organization calling itself the Dirt Farmers' congress has given approval to the bill as introduced in the house. The present load limit law is being enforced just about the same way that the prohibition law was enforced. Its absurdities under present conditions plainly indicate how antiquated the law is and unfit for conditions as they are.

The likelihood that the average independent trucker is fairing better now than he will when a scientific law is passed. We may take it for granted, for one thing, that the railways are going to ask for several thousand permits (taking the state as a whole) in Texas and that much of the freight is going to be hauled by them on Diesel-motored vehicles that use the highways. Their competition will be keen for the trucker, who will find his present equipment outmoded and he will be faced with the immediate necessity of increasing his investment to meet the demands of the law and the competition he will run up against.

Dilapidated buildings in the residence section and cross-eyed, goth-eyed, run-down-atthe-heel awnings in business districts where a bit of paint to take the place of the awnings would be worth a great deal more, are being campaigned against in several West Texas towns. In Floydada we boast of many pretty homes and well-kept premises, but many of these can't be seen until after the eye is already full of unsightly ones, that need paint and nails and some elbow grease removing unsightly and unneeded odds and ends scattered about the yard. And downbuildings where the owners or occupantswhoever is responsible - allow the lack of his face and he charges. paint and unsightly skew-jawed awnings to and see what you think

A bill that will change the set-up or rather details for the control of liquor sales in Texas has been introduced by Judge Deen, who recently went to Austin as representative of the 120th district. It is not unusual for liquor bills to be introduced in the legislature here the same as in every other state in the union. Liquor is always a problem, public and private. Nobody has ever been, probably everybody never will be, satisfied with the way liquor is controlled wheresoever they may live. However we can take some consolation from present-day geography in the matter. Fortunately in Texas we have the time and other matters are not pressing down on us so seriously that we cannot give attention to our social problems in the democratic way. In all of Europe including England there is not time for such. There matters of actual existence are so pressing that other issues have been cast aside. There matters have gone so far toward chaos that whatever are the beliefs of the man in power toward the particular problem, his thought had one making beauty and pleas- cowchip fires where cooks were fryis made law by the flourish of a pen and a proclamation pasted on the walls. Are we thankful enough for our good fortune? Isn't thankful enough for our good fortune? Isn't other day. The put-put of a with their chuck box lids let down it wonderful that we have the opportunity to motor came on the cool wind. A on their one leg, tin plates and cups quarrel about and discuss our social problems? Whatever your viewpoint on the liquor control problem and the hundred and one others, isn't it wonderful that you live in America?

Some will be out of patience with Judge Deen for filing such a bill when, as they believe, he should have introduced a bill banning alcohol from the confines of the state. On the other hand he will be a radical and a witch hunter to others for introducing any bill at all. To these it will be a travesty on the state that, with so many other pressing matters at hand, he should waste his time attempting a change in a law that is not going to make matters any better or any worse. And so it goes. Two years hence the matter will be fought out on the hustings, if the folks are still interested, all over again.

Our only impatience with the liquor and anti-liquor folks is that they play impartially in to the hands of the self-seekers, the personal privilege folks, who like nothing better than a good hard fight over liquor or prohibition which keeps the representatives and senators and people all heated up while the special privilege people take theirs. Special privilege, we think, stole about everything there was down at Austin for 20 years while we fought, bled and died for and against prohibition. Fortunately the capitol was too heavy to tote away. But you can't town, it is a shame to see the many good | make a dyed in the wool pro or a dyed in the wool anti see it. You shake the red rag in

U. S. MAIL CARRIERS TRADE RESIDENCES

A swap out of homes, something unusual in local annals, was effected last week-end when Rural Route 4 Carrier Oliver Allen gave title and possession to his home at 714 South Main street to City Carrier Lorin Leibfried for the latter's home on Silverton highway 2 miles north of Floydada

The Leibfried home has a tenacre plot with it that just exactly fits in with Allen's desire to have more room for chicken fancying when he gets home from his route. The Allen home on the other hand offered Leibfried a good place in town to return to in the evening to rest his dogs after a 15-to-20 mile daily tramp delivering the mails.

Both homes are modern, big and roomy and both families appear delighted with the exchange.

Teach Child Good Set Of Habits Early Is A Safety Measure

The more good habits a preschool or very small child can make automatic, the better prepared he will be for loving. That's philoso-phy of Dosca Hale, Extension Service specialist in parent education and child development, who says this will also allow a child more time for other things.

For example, Miss Hale emphasizes the importance of teaching children to look to the right and left before they cross a road or street. Here, adults are poor examples for children, she says, since some studies show that 81 percent of pedestrians look neither way before crossing a street; 17 percent look only in one direction; and two percent look both ways.

These days, crossing a street is serious business, so adults should not make this lesson a game. Instead, parents should take enough time to teach their children safety rules as soon as they are old enough to walk across a street. She says children should be encouraged to look to the right and left and continue to look to the right and left until the opposite curb has been reached. With practice this procedure becomes automatic with the child. The specialist adds that it is necessary for parents to help their children first on streets where there is little traffic; then later on they may try streets with more and more traffic

She explains further that a child likes to walk alone because it gives him the feeling of accom-Something plishing something. Something adults think the child is contrary because he does not want to be carried or led across the street each time. In this case, he is only attempting to carry out nature's way of helping him to live safely and well in the world around him.

QUARANTINE INSPECTORS ARE KEPT BUSY BY WAR

Interruption to shipping between Europe and the United States has not made it any easier to keep dangerous foreign insects and plant diseases out of this country, as might be expected. On the contrary, officials explain that it has brought new problems to the plant quarantine inspectors of the U.S. Department of Agriculture who guard ports against the entry of such undesirable aliens.

Many shipments of seeds, nursery stock, bulbs, and other plants and plant products that formerly went to Europe now come to the United States. These shipments not only keep the inspections up to their pre-war numbers, but they also carry insects not readily recognized by the inspectors, familiar though they are with the more common European pests. Furthermore, plants and plant materials still arriving from Europe are much more likely to be infested or infected than in former years. Under present conditions many European growers are unable to protect their crops effectively with insecticides or fungicides. Also, war has dis-rupted the efficient inspection forces of some of the countries which formerly made sure that outgoing shipments did not contain diseased or infested plants or plant

DOG TICKS LIKE LONG WORK DAY

Using electric light to reverse the seasons in the laboratory, two Federal entomologists have learned new facts about the life and habits of the American dog tick, recognized as a threat to public health because it transmits Rocky Mountain spotted fever. Dog ticks are most active while days are lengthening in spring, and become less active as ociation met Saturday afternoon the hours of daylight shorten. The response to day length (known as regular monthly meeting. Floyd photoperiodism) has been studied with plants and animals, but only rarely with insects, according to Carroll N. Smith and Moses M. Cole who just reported these studies. findings help to explain Their and often fatal disease.

With electric they arranged a light schedule that ed the hours of light as the days shortened to midwinter, and then decreased the added lighting until day and night were again equal Tested by giving them an opportunity to attach to small laboratory animals, the ticks behaved just about as they do in the field in summer, indicating that it is light and increasing hours of light rather than heat that stimulates this pest to activity.

The entomologists started their
