Large-scale training programs such as these will give prospective officers the training they are unable to receive during college courses of military science and tactics.

This supplemental course must be passed by the ROTC students to qualify for second lieutenant commissions in the U. S. Army Reserve or regular Army and will prepare them for duty with the active Army forces.

The Cadets entered the three training camps June 23 and will depart Aug. 3.

Forty-five Army ROTC cadets are attending from Texas Tech and among the approximately 1,500 ROTC cadets from colleges and universities in five states, Louisiana, Arkansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas are around forty-six from near areas.

Charles Terrill Julian from Floydada, Texas, who attends West Texas State College is attending the ROTC camp. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Julian of the South Plains Community.

Identification Of Black Bass Is Simplified

Black bass are as American as the coonskin hat and the Fourth of July. They are native only to North America; they are more widespread on this continent than any other game fish, and more Americans fish for them than for any other game species. However, considerable confusion surrounds these all-American fish. Anglers often are wrong when they try to identify the three kinds of black bass — spotted, largemouth and smallmouth.

There are infallible ways to tell one bass from another, and they do not involve complicated counting of rows or scales, or the number of spines in a fin. As you probably have been told many times, there is a simple test to distinguish between a smallmouth and a largemouth. With the mouth of the fish closed, a vertical line running through the pupil of the eye will just nick the inner corner of a smallmouth's mouth, but will pass through the mouth of a largemouth. That is, the lines of the mouth in a largemouth bass will extend back beyond the vertical line.

There is another, less infallible means of distinguishing them. This is by their body markings. A smallmouth has pronounced vertical bars on the sides of its body; a largemouth has a pronounced lateral dark line running from gills to tail. These markings exist only on younger fish; big adults sometimes lose these sharp distinctions. That is, the lateral line of the largemouth may be so blotched and broken as to be almost indistinguishable, or the smallmouth may be so dark in overall color that the vertical bars are hard to define.

After they pass a certain size, there is a marked difference in the shapes of their bodies. A four-pound largemouth simply doesn't look like a four-pound smallmouth. The latter is in every way a sleeker, trimmer fish; the adult largemouth is inclined to be pot-bellied and gross in appearance.

CALCULATING CONFUSION—Intricate units at the Army's 25 machine record centers throughout the world require skilled technicians to make adjustments. Specialist First Class James F. Scibolt of Eugene, Ore., a repairman in Germany, is working on a section of the 25 miles of wiring in the tabulator machine.

To Catch Fish; Use Right Hook

No matter how good or how expensive the rest of your tackle, it's that little hook out there on the end that holds and lands your fish. Or doesn't hook him because of poor design. Or breaks or bends because of poor material.

Anglers should be most particular about trout-fly hooks. Because of their small size and necessarily light wire, they must be of very good steel, with the right temper. Hooks on most lures, being larger and of heavier wire than those used with flies, can be and usually are of somewhat lower quality, but they still serve well enough for practical fishing purposes if they're correctly designed. For regardless of good steel and proper temper, if a hook is inefficiently designed it's bound to cause unnecessary misses. So let's see what is an efficient design.

Jason Lucas, angling editor of Sports Afield Magazine, thinks that with artificial lures (including flies) you'll land most fish with a hook having what comes closest to a plain round bend. It's hard to buy such hooks, but you can generally alter them so they'll be as effective as if originally made round. Hooks on nearly all lures are soft enough so that you can easily reshape them with a small plier. Hooks on better-class lures are much harder, but can usually be reshaped without breaking. Remember that for practical purposes, a bend that's somewhere nearly round will serve just as well as one that's perfectly round.

The most important point about a hook is — the point. There are three types. A "rolled-in point" is curved inward so that it points toward the eye of the hook. It is best for some large hooks, especially in deep-sea fishing, and some fishermen like it on smaller hooks for use with natural bait.

On a "parallel point" the outside of the point is parallel to the shank. Hooks of this type are used on nearly all freshwater artificials, including flies.

A third point is the "outpoint" where it is turned outward, away from the shank. With fresh-water artificials, and especially with the small hooks used for trout flies, a slight outpoint will hook and land a much higher percentage of your fish than will a point of any other type. Every wiggle a fish makes while you're playing him must drive that outpoint in deeper and deeper.

Price Daniel's Family Helping Wage Campaign

AUSTIN, Tex. — When U. S. Senator Price Daniel campaigns for Governor, it's a family affair. Daniel's wife, four children, sister and another are all playing an active role in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mrs. Daniel, the former Jean Baldwin of Houston, is the great-granddaughter of General Sam Houston, so her Texas political heritage runs a long way back. She has been helping her husband campaign since they were married on June 28, 1940, when he was in the midst of a race for re-election to the Texas House of Representatives.

This summer she has been with the Senator on many of his campaign tours, and on some occasions has had her four children along to meet the people and help pass out literature. The oldest son, Price Jr., 15, has an eye on a political future himself. The other Daniel children are Jean, 13, Houston Lee, 10, and John Baldwin, 8.

The Senator's sister, Ellen Daniel, is a volunteer worker at State Campaign headquarters in Austin. She has also traveled with the family.

Their brother, former State Rep. Bill Daniel of Liberty, is chairman of the Senator's statewide Speakers' Bureau and has made scores of speeches and personal appearances in behalf of Price Daniel's candidacy.
