On this day the conscience of the manhood and womanhood of America is expressed at the polls. In this county there will be four columns on the official ballot. You can always hear the fellow blabber about the candidate being elected and ask him if he voted and the answer will be no; so lets not any of us be stay-at-home slacker voters.

To make this picture it cost the Paramount people over a million dollars, they used 3000 actors a 1000 Indians and the live stock included 100 oxen, 1000 horses, and 500 mules. Months of research work went into the production and it is evident from start to finish.

"Chinook Wind"
This is a name given to a strong, warm wind and dry south or west wind descending the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains into Montana and Wyoming, evaporating or melting the snow and bringing great relief in cold weather. The name was probably given it because it blew from the territory occupied by the Chinook Indians.

Barbless Hook Teaches Both Good Sportsmanship and Good Technique

By H. T. PULSIFER, in Isaak Walton League Monthly.

SOME ten years ago, in the late summer, I was paddling across a mirror-like pond in the woods of Maine. It was a pond famous for its fighting trout and their skill in evading the angler's lure. For an hour or so I had cast in vain, and then suddenly from behind a lily-pod a great fish rose and struck at my dry fly with that rush which never fails to thrill the angler's heart, no matter how many times he may have seen it. When the fish wearied, I drew it toward the boat.

"That's too fine a fish to kill so late in the season," I said. "I'll slack my line and let him escape." I slacked the line, but nothing happened. I was forced to net the fish and extract the hook, which was deeply embedded in its tongue. Even though the hook was released as gently as possible it was no use. When I put the fish back in the water he sank, belly upward, to the bottom.

"No more fishing for me today," I thought. "I can't go on killing fish that I don't want to keep."

It was soon after this that a veteran angler introduced me to the barbless hook. . . . It is a curious thing that so many anglers who have had no experience with the barbless hook regard it as the hobby of extremists. It is nothing of the kind. It is a serviceable and effective angling instrument which not only protects the fish that are returned to the water but also teaches anglers better angling practice. With the barbless hook a slack line means a greater chance to lose the fish. Careless habits, of which anglers who never use anything but barbed hooks are too frequently guilty, are almost impossible with the barbless hook. I know nothing other than the barbless hook which teaches both good sportsmanship and good technique.

If we are to preserve our angling for future generations, we must see to it not only that our bag limits are reasonable in size but also that the fish which are not creel'd but which are returned to the water should be given a fair chance to live and propagate their kind. . . . I sincerely believe that all good sportsmen who give the barbless hook a fair trial will never return to the barbed variety.

The World Needs Most a New Understanding of the Knowledge at Hand

By DR. ARTHUR D. LITTLE, Address to Franklin Institute.

The "fifth estate" is that small company upon whose creative effort the world depends for the advancement of science. Our countrymen may well consider whether they prefer participation in government by the fifth estate for the benefit of all, or control of government by labor unions in the interests of labor.

Could the springs of human conduct and the affairs of peoples now be regulated only as wisely as we know how, there would be work and leisure and decent living for all.

The criminal, the defective, the feeble-minded would be bred out, and sane minds and sound bodies bred in. The loss and suffering from preventable diseases or accident would not be tolerated, planning would replace laissez-faire development, production and distribution would attain the levels of efficiency altogether new, and many injustices now existent in human relations would well-nigh disappear.

With the reaction of a freed intelligence on politics, religion and morals we might hope for a broader tolerance, a better mutual understanding.

The world needs most a new tolerance, a new understanding and appreciation of the knowledge now at hand.

For these it can look nowhere with such confidence as to the members of the fifth estate.

New Netherlands Folk Not Seeking Liberty—That Was to Be Had at Home

By MRS. JOHN KING VAN RENSSALAER, in "The Social Ladder."

The Netherlands of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries were the most cultured people in Europe. Their arts and manufactures were unequalled. Plain burghers enjoyed in their homes comforts and luxuries such as were not to be found in the palaces of princes elsewhere. While the nobles of Queen Elizabeth's time ate with their fingers, strewed their floors with rushes instead of rugs, and were just beginning to understand the use of window glass, the merchants of Antwerp and Amsterdam had rich carpets beneath their feet and sat down to dine in houses much better than the average farmhouse of today, with all the table silver of modern times.

Nieuw Amsterdam was sent over, literally piecemeal, from le pays bas, the Netherlands, and was assembled upon the toe point of Manhattan island. Brick and tile for the houses, furniture, utensils, tools and machinery were exported from the Netherlands, and out of them the town was fashioned—a Dutch dorp, transplanted in sections across the Atlantic.

The Dutch home authorities were equally systematic in selecting the human materials that were to compose the colony. The men and women who came to the New Netherlands were not folk seeking liberty in a new land. That was to be had at home. They were a cross section of the social structure of Holland, the most enlightened nation of that day, sliced off and shipped overseas.

Our Civilization Has Made It Possible for the Weaklings to Survive

By ALBERT E. WIGGAM, in New York World.

Modern society is immoral, and about the most immoral thing about it is its morality.

It is a question whether the miraculous achievements of modern science in combating disease are resulting in race improvement or in race deterioration.

As a matter of fact this is not a scientific age. Although modern science has made a scientific civilization possible, in our collective management of human life we are guided not by scientific knowledge, but by blind superstition.

There is no scientific basis for the belief that human society is evolving into a better state.

Society is not an organism and cannot evolve. Man is evolving, but he may have to go back to savagery in order to continue his evolution.

Savagery produced great men. It weeded out the unfit and only the greatest survived. It was in the jungle that man developed those qualities of leadership which made it possible for him to establish civilization.

But our civilization has made it possible for the weaklings to survive. Eventually it tended to destroy leadership. We transferred authority to the weak and unintelligent and called the deal democracy.

TEXAS FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Roup in Chickens.

While roup may be found in the poultry flock throughout the year, yet the worst epidemics occur during the shifting weather conditions of fall and spring. Roup is easily recognized since it causes the formation of a runny mucus which appears in the eyes and nostrils thickening and gradually clogging up all the breathing tubes of the respiratory system. Eventually the mucous secretion turns into a cheesy substance clogging the nostrils and eyes and often forms in the opening of the windpipe, causing the bird to lose appetite and die. An offensive odor is always present in roup and the cheesy matter sometimes starts forming in the eyes, causing the loss of sight.

Roup is a contagious disease. Therefore, one of the best methods of preventing it is to avoid infection. In purchasing new stock always buy from uninfected flocks. Quarantine all new stock or birds returned from show rings. Do not introduce the disease germ by visiting the neighbor's infected flock or use implements and utensils which have been exposed to infection. Feed the birds well and keep them in dry and well ventilated houses, being careful to provide natural surroundings and highly sanitary conditions. Isolate all birds at once which show the slightest trace or indication of the disease, and watch them carefully during the day and while on the roost. It is extremely important in the prevention and control of the disease that birds, showing the symptoms commonly known as "big eyes," be instantly separated from the flock and their heads dipped into a 2 per cent solution of potassium permanganate. Disinfect the entire house once a week, including fixtures and birds, with a mixture composed of equal parts of water, kerosene and kresol or zenoleum, applying with a fine mist sprayer. When signs of the disease are noticeable, spray once a day as directed above, taking special care to place the disinfectant on the heads of the birds. Disinfect all drinking water with a stock solution of potassium permanganate, using enough to give the water a light wine color.

Some of the most common causes are over-crowding of roosts, dirty and filthy quarters, lack of fresh air, roosting on the floor, lice, weakened condition from any cause, direct drafts while on the roosts, damp quarters and litter, sudden change of temperature and lack of attention. The greatest cause is lack of plenty of fresh air at all times without drafts.

Sunshine in abundance is one of the best roup and cold cures and preventatives known. Give your birds an opportunity of running out at any and all times. It will keep them strong.

Cull every month and especially early in the fall, disposing of all weak and inferior specimens. It has been noticed that the smallest and weakest birds in the flock are always the first to catch cold. Birds in a weakened condition on account of lice are apt to be attacked with cold and roup. Apply blue ointment (poison) to kill the lice. It has been our observation that pens fed wet mash were more liable to contract colds than those fed dry mash, also, that a draft upon the floor, especially if it strikes the flanks of the birds, is a very common cause of colds. A deep, dry, loose litter has been found to make a very good floor, while cement floors have proven very injurious.

Our opinion is that plenty of fresh air, sunshine, dry quarters, strong stock and a daily disinfection, such as previously described, will do more to prevent roup and colds than anything else.

While it is not considered practicable to give individual treatment for roup yet an exception may be made in the case of very valuable birds. Sometimes a cankerous growth in the windpipe may be removed with success. A bird with a noisy, rattling breathing, upon examination will reveal a cheesy formation in the windpipe, almost entirely closing up the opening. Experience teaches that this operation should be performed quickly to prevent suffocation. The following method of performing the operation has proved successful: First, open the mouth wide, pull the tongue out as far as possible and hold in that position. This brings the opening of the windpipe within easy reach. Have a piece of broom straw handy for use in an emergency in case of strangulation. With two fingers mercilessly force out the cheesy matter and swab out the inside of the throat with peroxide of hydrogen. This operation may be performed in a few minutes and the bird generally recovers very rapidly unless otherwise affected. Another individual treatment which consumes very little time and has been found very satisfactory, is to dip the head of the affected bird into a 2 per cent solution of potassium permanganate.

Farm Paragraphs.

Gather up the farm tools and store them for the winter. You will need them next spring when time means money. The winter weather will not help farm machinery which has been left in the open. Oil up and clean up the machinery and store in a dry place so that it will be ready for use next spring. The boll weevil has made life miserable for you, now make life miserable for him by destroying his hibernating winter quarters and save yourself worry next year.

Relieved of Catarrh Due to La Grippe

Thanks To PE-RU-NA

Mrs. Laura Berberick, over 70 years of age, 1205 Willow Ave., Hoboken, N. J., writes: "A severe attack of La Grippe left me with a hoarseness and slime in the head and throat. I had chronic catarrh. Finally I bought a bottle of Pe-ru-na which was of great benefit. It gave me blood and strength. I have no pains in head or back, nor noises in the head. The slime has gone and I can sleep. My weight has increased. I am cheerful and happy, thanks to Pe-ru-na, which I shall always keep in the house and recommend to my friends."

On the sand, not a score of feet away, the dying embers of a tiny fire were flickering.

Bunker and Carr had seen the gleam almost as soon as Nellie. Swiftly they dropped their oars into the water, checking the boat's way. "Here they are, all right," remarked Bunker, not without satisfaction.

The skiff grated on the sand and half a dozen dull forms sprang up, dimly visible in the circle of firelight. In a foreign tongue some one spoke what was evidently a challenge.

With a cry, Carr tried to back away. But before he could make a single stroke hands stretched to the gunwale and drew the boat high.

Carr shrugged his shoulders. "We're caught!" he muttered. "Who are they?" he asked Nellie.

Nellie leaned forward and addressed the leader of the party in the foreign tongue he had used. Then, without waiting for a reply, she turned to Carr and Bunker. "They are friends," she said. "Some of the people who live here, I think. Everybody here speaks Danish, you know. We had better get out and I will talk to them." She stood up, took the hand that one of the men extended and jumped lightly ashore.

Carr and Bunker followed. Beside the fire Nellie halted and turned to a man who seemed to be the leader. "I am Miss Archman," she said, in Danish.

The man saluted formally. For several minutes the two talked. Then Nellie turned to her companions. "I don't understand what he says very well," she explained. "I've tried to tell him about the mutiny, but he doesn't seem to understand me, either. He says that the captain is up the mountain somewhere, but he has just sent a messenger to say that he is on the way back. I asked him about our people, but he says he hasn't seen any of them. I'm not certain that he belongs here. He doesn't know who Overlord Dorth is and—"

"Overlord Dorth?"

"Yes, Dorth rules the island. I haven't had time to tell you of him. I'm afraid these people are intruders. And yet—"

"Didn't Captain Bunker say that a ship was following us?" broke in Carr. "These men look like marines and—"

Nellie caught her breath. "Marines?" she cried. "Oh! They can't be! They can't be—"

She broke off as the men faced round and stood at attention. The flickering flames shone on what were undoubtedly uniforms.

A line of armed sailors was approaching. As Nellie faced about, a man, obviously an officer, strode into the circle of the firelight. When he saw Nellie he saluted. "Good evening, madame," he said in Danish.

"Good evening!" Nellie replied in English. "Do you speak English?"

"I speak it a little." The officer's words were precise, but his accent was good.

"I'm so glad. I speak Danish very badly. I am Miss Archman—"

The man's face changed instantly. He whipped his hand to his cap. "Miss Nellie Archman?" he questioned eagerly.

"Yes, but—"

The officer spun around. "Stand back!" he ordered to the men, who were crowding inward. "Lieutenant, withdraw your men to a respectful distance." He swung round again. "The gracious lady will pardon?" he said. "I did not know. What is the gracious lady's pleasure? I am Captain Strindberg."

The flickering firelight danced on Nellie's bewildered face and in the no less perplexed countenances of Carr and Bunker.

"I am glad to meet you, captain," faltered the girl. "But I don't quite understand what you mean. Is—"

"I and my men are at the gracious lady's service. If she will lead us to her father—"

Nellie's face clouded. "I wish I could," she exclaimed. "He must be worried to death."

"He is here? He is well?"

"Oh, yes! He is here—that is, near here; and he is well. But—Oh! I don't know what to say. You are in the service of Overlord Dorth, are you not?"

"Overlord Dorth? D-orth?" Abruptly the officer's face brightened. "Surely, surely, gracious lady. I ask nothing better than to serve him."

"Then—then— You must know about my father—Mr. Archman, you know—and how we came down here, and what—"

"Your father, Mr. Archman! Pardon! The gracious lady has not yet seen Overlord Dorth?"

"Yes, I've seen him, and I am to see him tomorrow. I was to have seen him today to hear something important that he wants to tell me. But he wasn't strong enough."

"He is not ill?"

"stranger here, Nellie," he declared. "How he got here, I don't know, unless he came on that ship Captain Bunker was so troubled about. Don't tell him anything—"

"Silence!" Strindberg roared the order. "Silence! Who are you?"

The young fellow shrugged his shoulders. "I go by the name of Carr," he answered. "This lady is to be my wife and I advise her—"

"Your wife! You are a fool. This lady is not for such as you. She—"

But Nellie interposed. "Stop, Captain Strindberg," she said, with sudden impetuosity. "Stop! This is a matter with which you have nothing to do." She turned to Carr. "Forgive me, dear," she said. "I don't know who or what Captain Strindberg is, but I have no choice except to trust him. Our ship is in the hands of mutineers; my mother and friends are lost; my father is probably a prisoner; and we ourselves are fugitives. If this gentleman really means harm to a feeble old man like Overlord Dorth—"

"Harm! No!" broke in Strindberg. "I am glad to hear you say it. At any event I cannot stop you. This island is small and you will soon find him no matter what I do or say. Captain Strindberg, I will tell you everything so far as I know it. Then I will ask you to help us."

CHAPTER XVI

Until Daylight

Lord George descended into the ravine with extreme caution. He could see the ground where his next foot-step was to be planted, but he could see little more; and he could not be sure that the next stone on which he put his weight would not give way beneath him and send him crashing to the unknown depths below. Moreover, he was by no means certain what he would find if he reached the bottom in safety.

The map had come into the possession of the party mysteriously—as mysteriously as the first map had come. Might it not, like that first map, be a forgery, deliberately designed to lead astray, if not to betray to ruin and death, those who trusted it? Certainly it seemed queer that it should be necessary to descend into such a pit in order to reach a road that seemed to lead up the mountain.

Lord George suspected all things. He believed that at any moment he might have to fight for his life; and he moved silently as a shadow, with an automatic pistol clutched in his right hand.

At the bottom at last, he found himself standing on a broad, flat rock in front of which the ground seemed faintly luminous. Hesitantly he stooped and put out his hand and touched water. He had halted on the edge of a stream or inlet—probably the last, as he quickly ascertained that the water was salty. It appeared to be twenty or thirty feet broad.

Hesitatingly he faced seaward—then jumped, as a sparkle of light flashed to his eye. It was the merest flash, gone almost before it was seen, but it was as conclusive as a bonfire. Some human being was at the bottom of the ravine, close at hand. Silently he crept toward the spot.

The way was not long, nor the walking difficult. The path was well trodden and free from obstructions, and he moved along rapidly. Almost instantly he heard voices, one of which at least, though low, was wrong with pain.

"Something's wrong," the speaker wailed. "Something's wrong. She'd have come back else. What shall I do? What shall I do? Nellie! Nellie! Nellie!"

The voice broke; then went on. "Flash your light, Olaf!" it ordered. "Flash your light."

An electric torch flashed, revealing the tossing waters of the bay. Again and again it flashed. Then the voice spoke again, hopelessly. "It's no use, Olaf. Something's gone wrong and I'm helpless. If she's lost the way—But she hasn't lost the way. She'd have called out if she had—if nothing were wrong."

Then another voice spoke. "What can have gone wrong, Mr. Archman? It is your ship and—"

Archman! Lord George started. So it was Bess' father upon whom he had chanced. Well and good! He slipped his pistol into his belt and took a step forward.

"Good evening, Mr. Archman!" he said quietly. "I'm delighted to find you!"

Two suppressed exclamations and a sudden thudding of feet came from in front. Lord George could barely see the men, but he knew that they had faced around. "Don't shoot!" he called laughingly. "I'm alone and I'm a friend. I repeat, Mr. Archman, that I am glad to find you. Your wife and younger daughter are waiting for you only a few yards away. We came down on the El Rio."

"My wife and Bess— Who are you?"

"I'm a Johnny Bull—Lord George Caruthers. Flash your torch on me and satisfy yourself, if you like. Ah! Quite right. You see I'm alone. Now, if you'll allow me, I'll come nearer and explain."

There was a pause; then Archman spoke quietly. "Come nearer if you like. If you are from the El Rio, God knows you are welcome."

Lord George came forward briskly. "I'll cut it short," he said, "for I fancy we're all in a hurry. It's this way." Swiftly he told about the voyage of the El Rio, the shore excursion, and the mutiny he had witnessed from the mountain top.

"At this point Archman groaned. "Good Heaven!" he breathed. "Nellie's on board?"

"Nellie? Your daughter?"

"Yes! We heard this afternoon that a ship was lying here. Nellie heard it first and left at once, saying she was going on board. I was detained. As soon as I could, I hurried after her, but when I got there she was gone—gone in the only boat—and darkness had shut down. I could see the lights of the ship, but I couldn't make anybody on board hear me, shout as I might. And I had no boat, you know. I sent back for one, but it couldn't be brought until low tide. I am expecting it now; but—Nellie has been gone for nearly six hours. God! It drives me mad, mad! You—you know who was on the El Rio. Tell me, why should the men mutiny? Captain Bunker is not a hard master—"

"I don't think it was a question of discontent. Things have been happening all the way down." Lord George told of the attempt to signal, the discovery of the destroyer lying in wait, and the passage of the Danish-speaking sailors. Somewhat to his surprise the story seemed to encourage Archman.

"If that is all," he breathed; "if that is all—all will be well. Already they guess that—that—no matter! They will treat Nellie with all respect. Take me to my wife and to Bess." He made a step forward.

Abruptly the third man, who had not yet spoken, broke in. "The moon!" he said. "She came!"

Archman drew a long breath. "Maybe we would better wait," he said. "The moonlight will reach the El Rio in a few minutes. And if the destroyer is near—"

FARM STOCK

MANY DEVICES USED TO EXERCISE BULLS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many a valuable bull is rendered useless by improper care and management, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The importance of exercise is often underestimated, and many bulls, after their value has been proved, are found to be sterile or slow breeders, due largely to close confinement and lack of activity. This is more true of dairy bulls, perhaps, because of their temperament, which makes them more difficult to handle.

Regular exercise helps materially to keep the bull in good condition. Any method that will make the sluggish bull take exercise regularly and without overwork is satisfactory. The main point is for him to get it. In some countries bulls are yoked like oxen and used to pull a plow, to haul manure, or to do other farm work. Where there is only one bull, special hitching arrangements for work on a cart may be made. Thus the bull not only gets his exercise but at the same time does useful farm work. A treadmill is sometimes used, but is not always satisfactory because the bull sometimes learns tricks for stopping the machine and needs to be watched.

A pen large and roomy enough for exercising may be all that is needed for some bulls, but others are lazy and need to be forced to exercise. A young bull turned in the lot with an older one will usually cause the older one to take his "daddy dose." The younger bull will usually be active enough to keep out of danger if the pen is large enough to prevent his being cornered. The owner should use his judgment as to the merits of this plan.

Bulls may be induced to exercise themselves with an empty barrel or keg by hunting or rolling it around the pen. The keg may be left on the ground or hung by a rope or chain long enough so the bull can butt it with his head. A block of wood, with the corners removed, will serve the same purpose. Some bulls spend hours playing with contrivances of this sort, while others pay little attention to them.

When an exercise pen is not available, it is a common practice to tie the bull to a ring which slides on a suspended wire or cable 75 to 100 feet long and high enough above the bull's head to prevent him from getting his feet over the lead chain, which should be 12 to 15 feet long. A revolving sweep will give the bull some exercise, if he will use it.

Many Animals Inspected During Year Just Ended

Slaughter of nearly 80,000,000 animals in establishments operating under federal meat inspection during the year ended June 30, 1924, is shown by figures recently compiled by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. The exact total is 79,814,000, which is more than 6,000,000 more animals than were slaughtered during any previous fiscal year.

Hogs were the most numerous of all classes of stock, there being 54,416,481 of these animals slaughtered. This number, nearly three-fifths of the total, is also a new high mark.

Calves slaughtered during this record-breaking year numbered 4,977,948, which is also the largest number on the records of the United States meat inspection service for any year. Cattle and sheep killed under the supervision of government inspectors numbered 9,188,652 and 11,505,001, respectively.

This record slaughter of animals indicates an increased total meat consumption in the United States, as would be expected with the growing population. It also shows what a comprehensive service the United States Department of Agriculture renders in the inspection of the nation's meat supply.

Live Stock Facts

The loss of little pigs will mean the loss of big profits.

The wise stockman recognizes that careful attention to little details pays well in the end.

Too much skim milk or too much thin slop tends to produce a "pot-bellied" type of pig. Middlings should not make up too much of the ration for either the sow or the pigs for it causes the pigs to scour.

Pure breeds of good quality do better in the feed lot than scrubs or common stock.

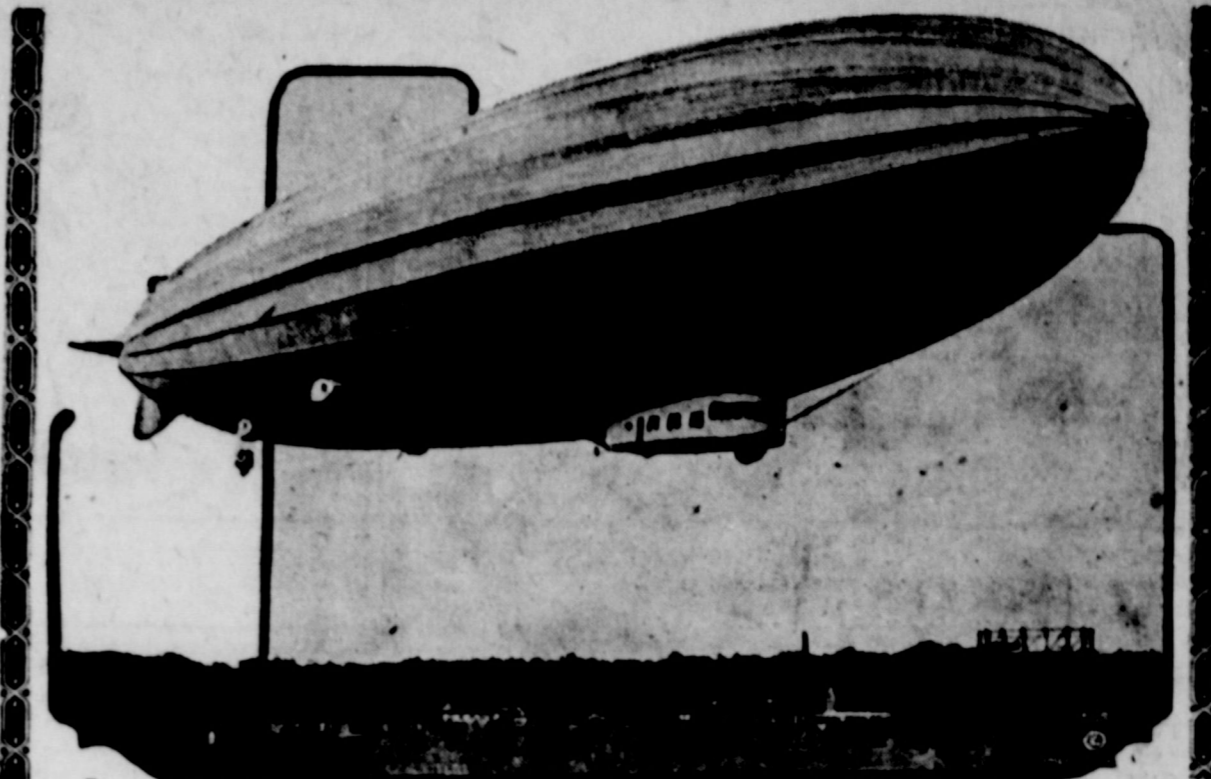

It is poor economy to stint the feeding of the suckling sow. The cheapest gains are made by the pig in feeding the sow liberally.

A canvass of live stock feeders over the entire country shows that pure breeds make about 40 per cent more product for their owners than scrubs or common stock when fed in the same way.

do look like birds of the Ibis family,

"I've never thought it worth while to bother about changing the name."
"I might have changed my name,"
she added coyly, "if your name had been different, Mr. Ibis Stork. But your name was the same as mine, and so we both kept it."

"Yes," said Mr. Wood Ibis Stork,
"we have the same family name."

"And, after all, it is very convenient.
When a young Miss Stork weds a young Mr. Stork she doesn't have to tell her friends what her new name is to be."

"She doesn't have to say:
"Now, shall I have my linen marked with my own initials or with those of my husband?"
"Of course she hasn't any linen to mark, but if she had any it would save a great deal of thought."

"Yes, we have many relatives. There is Cousin Black Stork from Europe and Cousin Stork from Africa, with his quiet suit of feathers and his bright red and blue trimmings about his face and beak."

"These cousins in Africa built big nests out of sticks, and the people about all love him just as the Stork
family is loved in Europe."
"Many and many a story has been written about my European cousins."

"Then there is Cousin White-Necked Stork from both Asia and Africa. His family is a well-traveled one."
"People say travel broadens one, but it never broadened Cousin White-Necked Stork or his family. Not but what he isn't ever so nice, but he isn't any wider or broader now than his great-great-grandfather was years ago."

"They're all about the same size."
"I have a black-necked cousin, too.
His family comes from Australia, as a rule. He is very handsome with his black and white suit and his fine looking white eyes."

"Oh, he belongs to a splendid looking family. He is here in the zoo, too."
"Yes," said Mrs. Wood Ibis Stork, "it is nice that he is here and he can tell us news of his family and of life in the old days back home from where he comes."

"There is Cousin Marabou Stork
from Africa," said Mr. Wood Ibis Stork, and there is Cousin Indian Adjutant. He is very ugly."
Mr. Wood Ibis spoke in a very low voice.

"He is really hideously ugly, and not at all like most storks. He looks much like a vulture."
"There is Cousin Maguari Stork
from South Africa, who wears a fine black and white suit, too. He is a fine creature."

There is Cousin Jabro, who looks something like Cousin Adjutant. He doesn't wear any feathers on his head or neck, as he says they'd be in his way. I agree with him about that. He wears scarlet
where the bottom
of his feather collar should be, if he had a feather
collar."

"He has a tuft
of white down on his bald head—but though he has a bald head he's very young—a mere child."

Mr. and Mrs. Stork walked up and down their zoo home.
Then, after they had had their exercise they looked over their nice high house nest on top of a zoo house, and smiled at each other because they were so pleased with it.
They had lived in it for many years
and were so fond of the zoo home nest.

Then they each put one leg under a wing, stood upon the other remaining wing and had a comfortable sleep—
though no one else would have found sleeping in such a way very comfortable!

Her Rebellious Parents

THE business of Amos Bullard had prospered exceedingly of late.
So he built a country house and employed architects and decorators at fancy prices. A young man named Mowray, an interior decorator, had come down to Mount Pleasant, the name of the new mansion and its attached estate, to practice his artistic skill upon the spacious rooms of the great house.

Now among other enterprises which Amos had on hand was the selecting of a husband for his daughter Margaret. In this enterprise he was assisted by his wife with great ability.
In fact, Mrs. Amos took the lead in this particular speculation. Margaret was their only child. She must marry not only a fortune, but a fortune attached to a young man of a social station higher than the one hitherto occupied by the Bullards.

Margaret was of an artistic turn of mind and was always hanging about watching the decorators at work. A harmless eccentricity, thought Mrs. Amos, and then, to be interested in art was, really, rather good form.
The first that Mrs. Bullard suspected that something was wrong was when Tom Mowray began to exhibit a great and growing profusion of dollars in his decorations. One of Mrs. Bullard's friends calling, and being shown the work in progress one day, remarked:
"What a lot of margarites your decorator uses."

"What, the daisies?" asked Mrs.
Amos, whose early education had been neglected.
"Yes—margarites, we call them."
"Margarites, Margaret?" mused
Mrs. Amos, who was a mighty shrewd person; "and Margaret always hanging about watching that young man work!"

"That night she said to her husband:
"Amos, I suspect something." And she told him what and why.
"Nonsense," said Amos. "Marie is too sensible a girl to fall in love with a mere decorator. However, I'll bundle him out of the house tomorrow."
"Let us call in Margie," said Mrs.
Amos, "and find out right now how far this thing has gone."

Margaret was called in. She acknowledged at once that she was in love with Tom Mowray and was going to marry him, if he should ever ask her, and she rather thought he would.
Margie was surprised. Herebefore her will had been law to her father and mother. What did they mean by this unusual conduct?

But the rebellious parents carried the day. Tom was discharged the next morning and Margaret packed off to visit a great-aunt in Oswego. Amos was recounting to one of his business associates this little family incident.

"Tom Mowray?" cried Slater, the business associate aforesaid. "Why, are you sure he is not a son of Old Tom Mowray? Old Tom had a son who went in for art, and his name was the same as his father's."
Amos gasped. Had he, after all,
made the great mistake of his life? Old Tom Mowray was that retired capitalist, that possessor of great wealth, known all over the world. To see Margie the wife of a son of Old Tom would indeed be the crowning of a successful life for Amos. Amos was a man of action. Action, and prompt action, accounted for his present wealth. He took a West Shore train and went up the Hudson to where the feudal castle in which Old Tom Mow-ray had settled down towered above
the woods and the swift-rushing river.

Old Tom received him coolly, merely by bow and waited for his visitor to speak, glancing from time to time at the card which Amos had sent in.
Amos was a little disconcerted; but business was business. "I have come,
sir," said Amos, "to speak with you upon a matter which I apprehend concerns both our families." Tom motioned for Amos to take a chair. They both sat down. Amos told Old Tom of the young decorator, of his daughter and of their having fallen in love with each other. "Now, sir," went on Amos, "I believe that this young man is your son, and namesake. I have been so informed. While undoubtedly your son and my daughter are very much in love with each other, I was loath to have the matter go on any further without consulting you."

Old Tom had watched Amos closely as he told his tale. When it was ended the great capitalist, said slowly:
"Mr. Bullard, you have been misinformed. I have only one son. He is much given to dabbling in art. It is true. But his name is John and he is at present in Italy. Also he has been married two years." The mingled emotion which surged and tumbled together in the breast of Amos caused his face to assume such a peculiar expression that Old Tom—for once in his life—really laughed. Then he said:
"The young man you refer to is my nephew. His fortune will be sufficient and he will make a very suitable husband for your daughter. In fact, as the young people fled to me and asked my advice, I have taken the liberty to have them joined in holy wedlock.
Tom!" The door opened and in came young Tom and Margie—both blugh-ing, but happy. Amos gave them his blessing—got busy with the long-distance and had Mrs. Amos telephone hers. The rebellious parents had surrendered, but as young Tom had a couple of million coming to him, and

After 15 Hard Months— His USKIDE Soles Still Good!

THINK of that! Marcellus R. Abel, a Cincinnati traffic officer, wore this pair of USKIDE Soles fifteen months, in rain, slush, on hot, rasping pavements.

"I have had such comfort," he says, "cool in summer, warm and dry in winter—and they are still good for several months' wear."

USKIDE—the wonder sole for wear. It wears and wears—twice as long as best leather—often longer.

Straightline Is Likely to Remain Through Year

Rumors of new fashions have crystallized into definite facts, and as the new models make their appearance day by day one gains an impression of several influences that have vitally stamped themselves upon the mores
of the season.

There seems to be every indication that the straightline will remain, although in many instances it is given a new aspect by the introduction of gadgets often so placed that the back of the gown still retains the fashionable flatness. Occasionally a frock is shown with certain details of cut and trimming that suggest a raised or normal waistline. These gowns, however, are more frequently seen on slim young girls rather than on women of more developed figures.

The silhouette which apparently is to dominate the fall and winter season demands a perfect supple foundation and women who have gone without some sort of support during the cooler era are now hastening to bring back figures back to the required slim-ness.

A number of new books which were presented to high school library by the Parent-Teachers' Association, Judge Henshaw and Mrs. Mitchell have been received the past week.

A committee was appointed to examine the books in the library in order to find what was lacking. We are indeed proud of the new books, which consist of the best and most modern literature in fiction, drama, anthologies, and biographies.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of gripe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nameless Calomel tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted—adv.

Church News of Sanderson

No services in town tomorrow except Sunday school at Presbyterian church at 10 a. m.

Rev. D. A. Adams filled his appointment last Sunday. Morning lesson from 1st Cor. 15th chapter, 17th thru 19th verses, theme "If Christ be Not." Evening lesson from 5th Matt. theme "Salt and Light," excellent lessons for all.

S. M. U. collected at Mrs. R. Lewellen's last Monday evening. 6 were present. Quilting was the feature of the evening.

Presbyterian Sunday school opened with 114 present. Good reports by the secretary of each class; quite a number of Bibles in evidence, let us all be good in our memory work next Sunday.

The song rendered by the two little virils at Sunday school last Sunday, "Jesus is the Friend of Children" was sung very nicely by them.

W. M. U. will meet with Mrs. Druse next Monday at 4 p. m., a Bible study. A welcome to all.

The Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. J. W. McKee next Monday, a social meeting. A cordial welcome for all.

Quite a large congregation at church Sunday night. Solo "Hold Thou My Hand," by Ruth Holmes was well rendered.

Make South's Idle Lands Blossom Like The Rose

Some of the crops produced on Southern cut-over lands. Top, field sugar cane; below, high grade cattle and Satsuma Oranges.

One of the principal objects of the Forestry Reclamation and Home-Making Conference to be held in New Orleans, November 19-22 is to devise ways and means for putting to some useful purpose the vast areas of cut-over, swamp and overflowed lands in the South. The conference will be held under auspices of the Southern Pine Association, Mississippi and Florida Development Boards and New Orleans Association of Commerce, and the people of every southern state and community are considered to be vitally interested in this movement.

Several million acres of arid land in the West have been made to "blossom like the rose" by reclamation through irrigation projects financed and constructed by the federal government. The South now is asking that she be allowed to share in this federal assistance so that those portions of her idle lands suitable for agriculture also may be made to "blossom like the rose."

Many prosperous localities in the South which have been built up on cut-over lands furnish convincing proof that large portions of the cut-over and "wet" tracts in the So can be made as desirable a culture lands as can be found anywhere America. The South today is the neer country as it is the only sect where low-priced farm homes can be procured. The cost of reclaim southern cut-over and "wet" lands said to be about one-fourth the o of putting western arid lands in a v able condition for agriculture.

At the Forestry, Reclamation and Home-Making Conference in New Orleans the problem of utilizing and tiling the South's idle lands will be considered from all angles includ reforestation, livestock raising, da ing, fruit growing and agriculture all its branches. It is hoped the ference will result in an effe movement that will secure a sion of the federal reclama policy into national scope so tha er sections than the West may fit from such assistance. All po interested in the constructive- ment of the South are invit attend and participate in the Ne leans Conference and all sou congressmen are urged to super purposes.
