SANDERSON WINS TWO FROM MARFA

The Sanderson Eagles went to Marfa last Friday, and played 2 games with Marfa's Short Horns and won both. The first game was played indoors, and Sanderson won by the score of 14 to 2. The Marfa five could not solve the defense of the Eagles, and were able to get only 3 shots at the goal within the 15-foot radius only one of which was made. Six men were used by the Eagles in this game, and all played an excellent game. "Duff" Kessler was high point man, counting 6 points on 3 field goals. W. Grigsby was not far behind with two field goals for 4 points. M. Mitchell counted for 1 field goal, and K. Harrell made the other 2 points by the same route. Jansa starred on the defensive, giving his opponents few shots near the goal. The game played Saturday morning was a better game, being played on a larger court. The Eagles got off with long end of a 26 to 18 score. In the first quarter the local five dazed the Marfa quintet by a succession of goals counting 14 points to the Short-horns 1. The ball was in the possession of the victors the greater part of this 10-minute period. In the next quarter, Sanderson again outplayed their opponents making the score 22 to 9. But in the last

Thus the balls follow a circular course much like the orbit of the earth in its rotation around the sun. The apparatus is being operated by Dr. Heyl from another room in order not to affect the experiment by the heat from the body.

LATE FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Farm Butter Making.

The care and handling given the cream from the time it is separated until it is ready for the churn is termed the ripening process. For best quality of butter, cream should be only slightly sour—four-tenths per cent acid. With this acidity it will appear smooth and shiny. To get the desired condition take the fresh cream and cool to about 70 or 75 degrees and allow to get mildly sour; then cool to churning temperature and churn. It is often desirable to churn the cream from two or more milkings. Cream to be churned at one time should all be mixed several hours before churning time. Bring cream all to one temperature before mixing. Do not mix fresh warm cream with older cream until the warm has been cooled. Cream while being held should be stirred frequently to prevent the development of lumps of curd in the bottom of the vessel.

Cream should be brought to the churning temperature before the churning is started and no hot water used to warm it up after the churning has been started. To know the correct temperature, a dairy thermometer is necessary; in fact, they are indispensable, if an even quality of butter is to be made from day to day. The churning temperature must be determined by experiment but should be such that the butter will churn out in a flaky form in from twelve to fifteen minutes. It will vary with the kind of feed and time of the year, but will be somewhere close to 69 degrees Fahrenheit.

After the butter is all churned from the cream, it should be removed from the buttermilk or the buttermilk drained off and the butter washed with water that has been made about the same temperature as the churning temperature of the cream. Do not use ice water. Water of the temperature of about 40 degrees should not be used for washing butter.

After washing, salt, using 3/4 ounces of good dairy salt to the pound of butter and thoroughly distribute the salt through the butter by working. Work the butter until the salt and moisture are evenly distributed. Butter that is not sufficiently worked is often streaked or mottled, while over-worked butter is salty or greasy.

After working, the butter should be printed into rectangular one-pound prints and wrapped in parchment paper (not oiled paper). The wrapped packages should be put into paste-board cartons. It is then ready for market.

Suggestions for Sweet Potato Growers

In the preparation of the seed bed for sweet potatoes, the grower should select a spot not previously used for bedding purposes. Fresh soil should be used from wood land or from good grass land, but by no means from barn lot or old potato fields. The ground should be sloping so as to drain from excessive rains, and to avoid standing water about it. The manure used should be carefully selected from feeding lots or pens which have had no potato refuse thrown into them, either as waste, or feed for the stock, for diseases may be conveyed to the manure by both of these methods. Finally the bed should be protected from chickens and other barnyard animals, as these often distribute disease germs from their feet or in their excreta, so as to contaminate otherwise healthy seed beds.

The potatoes used for seed should be selected for two points, first, soundness; second, true-ness of type. Only perfectly sound and healthy potatoes should be set in the bed, as any disease present in the roots will develop and cause losses both in failure to form the necessary slips, and in making such slips as develop unhealthy, so that disease is planted at the same time as the slip.

The seed potatoes should be smooth, of good form, and not less than one inch in diameter. Before planting the seed potatoes should be disinfected by immersion in corrosive sublimate solution (1 ounce to eight gallons water) for five to 10 minutes, depending on the temperature, and immediately rinsed in clean water, and spread to dry in a clean place, or planted immediately. The above solution should be handled in wooden or fiber pails, as it attacks metal rapidly. Use strict care to avoid accidents by children, chickens, pigs, etc., finding the solution or the dry chemical.

When drawing slips from the bed, these should be dipped for 10 seconds into a solution of corrosive sublimate (same strength as above given) for removing possible contamination from the soil. The excess water should be shaken from the slips, and they may then be handled as in ordinary cases, except that care should be exercised to avoid contamination from old soil, or dirty sacks or boxes.

In planting, select fields upon which no sweet potatoes or yams have been grown for at least two years past.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Every one who save me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much."—Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

The mountain peaks enveloped them. Try as they would, they could never quite free themselves from it.

Distractions of any sort became urgent; but to find them, in this small island, was no easy matter. However, Alan, after mentally viewing the land, took what frail material there was and wove it into ropes of support. That the ropes might break he could not foresee.

He turned once more, in pathetic hope, to the natives.

During the months since their first visit to the settlement, he had come to occupy the unique position of a semi-divine Overlord. His orders, issued at first in the spirit of bluff, were obeyed. This at first surprised, then amused, him. After a time, it afforded him intense interest. His orders regarding cleanliness, receiving extraordinary consideration; irrigation work had been undertaken. Now, he plunged with new zest into this novel training of prehistoric minds. He ordered the cultivation of taro to be re-instituted; tapestry-weaving from reeds to be revived. All this originating from fear, not inclination, slowly awakened the natives' interest, which increasing, caused much of their lethargy to vanish.

Within a few weeks, the last signs of a threatening new epidemic of sickness vanished, and the settlement became more wholesome. This being attributed to the what man's magic, their fear blended into a crude awe and affection, which struck Alan as pathetic. Gradually his visits became hailed even with delight. For, in matters of dispute, Chimabohol appealed to him, relying more and more on his counsel. And, swayed by none of the opposing elements, he dealt with a severe justice, yet humaneness, which they found both novel and attractive. Withal, he braced them, stimulating their latent powers, much in the same way in which he had stimulated Barbara, by the mere force of his own vitality.

Her own interest in these people grew apace. From Alan she learned some of the dialect, very soon being able to speak a little herself. Sometimes she brought the children odd bits of ribbon or lace, which produced an excited uproar. Weeks later, she used to see these scraps adorning some woman's dark form, with ludicrous incongruity.

But, among these "children of nature," as among other children, not of nature but of civilized education, there existed under-currents of strife, ambition, ill-feeling. These were responsible for a division of which Croft soon became aware. The more savage factions waxed impatient for Baboona to be their chief. Only the superstitious awe in which a chief is held saved Chimabohol from being despatched unceremoniously to the spirits of his murdered sons. The result of that would have been civil war, and deadly peril for the two white people. For Baboona and his friends were not partial to these strange newcomers who forced them to work and frustrated their savage tendencies. Croft knew well the risky ground on which he trod. For reasons of strategy, therefore, he forbore, save for a drastic warning, to take any steps in retaliation for Christmas day's attempt upon his life. "Bali-devils" from the white woman, in swift retribution for what he had contemplated, had frightened Baboona enough for the present. His black face was seldom seen, nowadays, far from the settlement.

Roowa and Meama, since their child's recovery, had regarded the "white chief" with little less than worship. And this fact gave Alan the idea wherewith to cause distraction in the increasing difficulty of the life he and Barbara now led. It was, both knew, such frail aids were welcomed.

After a short consultation with Chimabohol, Roowa was commanded to take up his residence in the north, to help the "white chief" in work upon the land, while Meama served his "wife."

The ruined huts were strictly tabu, haunted by the spirits of those slain there. Roowa, proudly radiant, began to build a new hut, to which Meama and his two children could be fetched.

Within a short time smoke arose from Meama's cooking; and two small black figures danced, like imps, among the palms.

"I wonder," suggested Barbara, when they strolled together one night, "if we ought to teach them Christianity."

Alan looked down, smiling at these lingering instincts of the parson's daughter; but shook his head.

"If they learn gentleness, kindness and cleanliness, don't you think they are acquiring the spirit of it?" he asked. "These will permeate, paving the way, if you think it necessary to teach them Christian creeds later. But don't upset their old faiths yet—they are not ready. It's always a dangerous thing. If it's hurried, it is fatal."

She thrust her arm through his. "You're awfully wise, Alan mine! You seem to know just how to manage the natives. Why is it, I wonder?"

"Because I care for them. You can usually understand those you love, if you try. See how well I manage you?" She laughed; then felt his arm. "You know, you're getting thin Alan."

"Hard work."

"I have noticed it in your face, too. You mustn't work so incessantly—there's no need."

"Isn't there? Ah, Barbara! I think there is."

She looked up quickly; but he had turned his face seaward; only the grim set mouth was visible. The woman in her thrilled to him, for she understood. Clapping his arm tightly, she laid her face against it.

"Dear!" she murmured.

"We have been here nearly a year," was his only response.

"I know."

They walked on in silence a while, passing near Roowa's hut. Just outside the entrance the native and his wife sat close together, the youngest child asleep in the man's arms, both too much absorbed in low-toned conversation to notice their approach. The natives' love may be little above that of an animal for its mate; but it contents them.

Barbara's clasp tightened, as these two couples from all laws looked upon the group.

"They are very happy. Alan, I often watch them."

"So do I—my G—d!"

She glanced up in surprise at the passionate tone in his voice.

"I sometimes wish I had never brought them here," he continued. She was silent a moment; then drew his hand swiftly up to her face. With her lips against it, she whispered, so low that he had to bend down to catch her words:

"Do you ever look at—their little ones—and think—supposing—if—only?"

"Barbara! I do."

He turned and drew her into his arms. "I have thought of it all—over and over again! I think of nothing else."

The relief of speaking, for once, about the theme which lay heavy upon their hearts caused discretion to be thrown to the winds. "It haunts me!" she cried passionately, clinging to him. "It haunts me day and night. I can't bear to see them. I've tried—"

"And I, by heaven!"

Loosing her abruptly, he threw himself down upon the rock outside the hut and bowed his head in his hands. What was passing through his mind she could only surmise by the chaos of emotion which, now the barriers were down, surged through her own. All these weeks both had struggled to forget the problems menacing them. But the very straws at which they had caught proved to be, so to speak, serpents in disguise. For nature, crude and unattuned, ruled this island. By her inexorable laws these primitive people were guided, unabashed, in all good faith. And among these subtle forces working around them, undermining the very ground beneath their feet, the two were flung together in a solitude, a familiarity, so maddeningly yet so entrancing, that their senses were inflamed at every turn. Escape was impossible. Wherever they moved they were confronted with their own rising passion. Regarded as man and wife they shrank now from visiting the settlement together. Throughout the days each constantly surprised the other's furtive, hungry, troubled regard. Conversation became often strained, demonstrativeness between them a danger. Throughout the night each lay listening to the other's movements and breathing, through the frail bamboo partition. No longer could they shout careless badinage, hold midnight talks. . . . But, since the building of the palisade, neither had dared put into words the fear rising ever higher in their hearts.

He uncovered his face at last, and looked up at her, a grim defiance in his eyes.

"We can't go on like this. It's damnable! Barbara—come here."

Hesitating a little, not understanding the unusual expression of his face, she went toward the hut he held out. He caught her roughly by the arm, pulling her down to her knees at his side, gazing into her eyes for several seconds without speaking—searching, proving her in some inexplicable manner.

"How much do you love me?" he demanded, at last.

She looked startled at his peremptory tone. "Why do you ask such questions?" But she collapsed against him. "With my very life," she whispered passionately. "I should die if I lost you now."

He strained her close, pressing hot lips to hers. "How far would you go with me? How far?" he muttered eagerly.

"To eternity!" she murmured, half faint with the sudden passion sweeping them both away. The arms holding her were trembling.

"If we never get rescued? How far then? How far, Barbara?"

"Only a little stifled gasp answered them!"

All the soft night odors of the forest were stealing down to the beach, blending with the pungent smell of hot earth, mingling with the languorous murmur of the tide. Close in his arms, a weak craving to surrender, to capitulate before the forces arrayed against them both, swept over her. It was easy to let all else go. . . . Twice she opened her own lips, but no words would come; only her eyes told him that which caused his senses to reel. His grip tightened, so that he hurt her; but the pain was an exquisite joy.

The animal in man, longing fiercely for its mate, had been let loose in Alan, stronger for all these months of temptation and repression. The future at this moment lay in his hands—and he knew it, exulted in the knowledge. . . .

Half unconsciously he rose to his feet, lifting her, unresisting, with him. Her warm young body lay acquiescent, at his mercy. He took a step toward the hut; cast one dazzled look round the darkening beach—

From Roowa's dwelling the faint cry of a child came to them, wafted upon the soft night breeze down the bay. . . .

The girl heard it, and raised her head. The man heard it, and caught his breath. Their eyes met.

She slipped from his arms with a long quivering sigh. They stood facing each other, struggling with the turbulence of their emotion.

"Reverberations! Do you—remember?" she whispered, at last.

He made no reply, continuing to gaze upon her face, and she went on speaking, almost to herself, standing before him with the darkness closing around her.

"The vast harmony in which each note has unlimited effect upon every other note. You taught me that. Do you remember? Life's harmony, you said. We—we are forgetting."

He turned away and walked to the lagoon, standing there for several minutes, his back toward her, his hands covering his face. When he returned, he had, she could see, regained his self-control. Coming close, he laid his hands upon her shoulders.

"Are we perhaps troubling over what may never happen? Barbara—there might be no—no 'reverberations.' There are not, always."

She smiled at him, a smile that was almost maternal. "That's true. But—"

She broke off, a little catch in her breath, her eyes dwelling dreamily upon the face above her own, as if picturing something far off and passing beautiful. . . . "But it wouldn't be fair," she muttered to herself.

A flush mounted to his cheek in meeting and interpreting the look which, momentarily, his own eyes reflected.

"The thought of you troubles me most," he owned. "The question of 'fairness' is an open one. This is a grand free life for anybody who—" knows no other. But the world might think it unfair. But the world doesn't count with us. We are savages now. But you—you! Oh, my darling. . . . Nature is so hard on women."

Her face was hidden on his breast. He went on diffidently, whispering into the dark hair.

"The question of 'reverberations' shall be yours entirely. Do you understand? If you decide not to face it all—"

"Ah! no, no, no!" She raised her head quickly. "Alan, I love you for that. But I won't shirk! Don't ever think I mean that." She turned her luminous eyes seaward. "Imagine a little home with just you and me—and a dear little nest all our own. Oh! it's cruel, cruel!" Passionately she gripped his shoulders. "I long for it all—I ache inside. Sometimes I dream we have it together; and then—then I wake up—"

"But we can have it, here, now," he interrupted eagerly. "Only the forms would be absent; the spirit would be there. Surely, in these circumstances, we can make our own laws?" He took her clinging hands in his. "Barbara, have you thought over the matter? Faced it squarely?"

Best Way to Use Phone

Telephone companies for many years have reiterated the advice that users should talk directly into the transmitter, but recent tests have for the first time set forth in concrete terms the result of disobeying the injunction. It was found that to talk with the lips six inches from the transmitter was equivalent to inserting another 200 miles of line between the speaker and the listener. The best results were obtained, the tests disclosed, when the mouth was only one-half inch from the transmitter and facing directly into it, thus avoiding deflection of sound waves.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

EXCUSE-US TWINS

This is the story of two strange children who lived in the land of Not At All.

All, and who were called the Excuse-U-S twins. They were given these names because they were always begging to be excused, and everything that was said to them they took just exactly as it was said—or at least they acted that way.

And this is also to be the story of six of their adventures—all packed into one story!

One fine day the Excuse-U-S twins, a boy and a girl they were, by the way, came home with a ragged, dirty, most untidy, miserable small child.

The child's shoes were covered with mud and his coat seemed to shake the dust as he breathed.

"Why, children!" exclaimed the mother. "What in the world have you done? Who is this strange child?"

"Excuse us, mother," said the Excuse-U-S twins. "but you know you said the other day we didn't half appreciate what you did for us, and that you wished you had a poor little child to do for as you do for us. You said a poor little child would be grateful."

"And so we made this one come with us."

And the mother of the Excuse-U-S twins had to get the child back to his home as soon as she could, and gave him some of the twins' suits and sweaters and explained to his mother as best she could that she hadn't meant to kidnap the child.

But the very next day the twins were found covering themselves with silver polish.

They were smeared with it—all over—covered!

"What in the world have you done now?" said their mother with horror, and you can hardly blame her for that.

"Excuse us, mother," they said, "but you know you told us you wished we could be brighter, and we saw this silver polish down at the store, and it said on the outside of the bottle that it was guaranteed to make the dulliest object bright."

"So we tried it."

Time passed by a little more quietly for awhile, but one day the mother had a caller who loved "natural" children. She liked children to romp and use slang and she hated children who were too polite and too well-behaved.

The mother of the Excuse-U-S twins knew that her children would just suit this caller. So she called them in. But didn't those wretched twins just behave so unannaturally well!

They said, "Yes, please," every few moments, and, "Yes, mother dear, whatever you wish, and whatever you think is best for us."

And of all the times, this was the one time when their mother did not wish to have them so polite!

Afterward, of course, they said: "Excuse us, mother, but we thought you wanted us to have nice manners."

A while after this they came home with a lot of starving, moth-eaten-looking cats, and when their mother asked them what they had done this for, they said:

"Excuse us, mother, but you said we must be kind to creatures helpless and less fortunate than ourselves, and these cats surely are less fortunate."

A good while passed by without anything happening until one afternoon they stayed out much too late, and as usual had an excuse.

"Excuse us, mother," they said, but you told us fresh air made us grow, and so we stayed out to get taller."

But the sixth adventure or prank of theirs—and their mother said she surely hoped it would be the last—was when they came in one afternoon looking very dirty.

There were streaks of dirt everywhere.

Their faces and hands were smeared with mud and dirt.

And when their mother exclaimed with horror, they said:

"Excuse us, mother, but you know you said the least we could do was to scrub behind our ears. And behind our ears we are beautifully clean."

And this was true. While the rest of their faces were dirty, behind the ears they had washed most carefully.

But the Excuse-U-S twins had certainly not failed in having excuses!

Stepped on Her Tongue

Emma, aged four, suddenly burst into tears at the dinner table. "Why, Emma, what is the matter?" asked her mother.

"Oh," sobbed the little miss, "my t-tooth stepped on my t-tongue!"

FOR GIRLS FROM SIX TO TEN; ACCESSORIES ARE IMPORTANT

All the busy little people who spend much of their time housewrecking during their earliest years seem to grow even more busy in the interim between their sixth and tenth years. But much of their time is spent out of doors and clothes are designed for them to stand any amount of wear and tear. Little girls are just as active as little boys and all their play frocks are made of strong materials on roomy and very simple lines, usually hanging straight from the neck and having kimono sleeves. Little time is spent on purely decorative touches for these everyday practical dresses.

But the little miss has other occupations besides romping and must learn it all the time for, out of the realm of fancy, their designers bring new conceptions to make them decorative and ingenious. Handkerchiefs, gloves, neckwear, bags, footwear and millinery grow more and more interesting.

In gloves the demand for fancy wrists and cuffs continues both in kid and fabric varieties, although the plain glove comes somewhere near to sharing popularity with these newer types. The long silk gloves for spring have tucks, lace inserts, embroidery, little frills and wrist straps among their attractions, presaging the coming of, more or less, short-sleeved frocks. Two of these pretty and very practical designs are shown here.

Excuse us, mother, but you said we must be kind to creatures helpless and less fortunate than ourselves, and these cats surely are less fortunate."

A good while passed by without anything happening until one afternoon they stayed out much too late, and as usual had an excuse.

"Excuse us, mother," they said, but you told us fresh air made us grow, and so we stayed out to get taller."

Sanderson Wins Over Marfa

half Marfa came back fighting and outplayed the Eagles throughout most of the half. They scored 9 points to the Eagles' 4 in this period.

The first game was a practice game, and in comparison with the one Saturday it deserves that name, for the latter was the hardest game for the local high school team this season. The Marfa boys showed a real fighting spirit and played a good clean game of basket ball.

Every man playing for Sanderson realized at least one point in Saturday's game. Kessler was again high point man counting for 8 points from the field. Smith scored 5 points, 2 field goals and one from the foul line. Grigsby, Jansa and Mitchell counted four points each from the field, and K. Harrell counted 1 point from the foul line. Mitchell and Jansa were the stars on the defensive giving their opponents no chance to shoot for an easy marker. Kessler and Grigsby were stars on the offensive, with Smith showing up brilliantly during the first half.

The line-up was as follows:

Church News of Sanderson

Tomorrow being the first Sunday of the month there will not be any preaching services.

Rev. D. Adams filled his regular appointment last Sunday preaching two excellent sermons. Fairly good attendance for such a cold day.

First bell for Sunday school rings at 9:30 a. m. and lessons begin at 10. Everyone cordially invited to be with us.

The W. M. U. met last Monday with Mrs. C. D. Strange for Bible and foreign mission study, Japan. Hostess serving tea and cookies. Next meeting February 9 with Mrs. Druse, all welcome.

A nice large Sunday school class room is being added to the Presbyterian church. Carpenters are at work this week and they hope to have it completed by the end of February.

The Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian church met with Mrs. John Stovell last Monday with 13 present, a social meeting. Two interesting contests were the features of the evening. Mesdames Morris VanZandt and John Stovell were hostesses serving lemon and coconut pies, tea, coffee, salted nuts and mints. A very enjoyable evening was unanimously voted. The members also voted to purchase a new carpet for the rostrum at the church. Hope to have it down by the time the class room is completed.

A letter was read at the Auxiliary meeting from the hospital in China where the members of the society sent sheets and other furnishings for the hospital use, acknowledging the receipt of same. Next Auxiliary meeting will be with Mrs. W. E. Lea February 10.
