SANDERSON LOSES CHAMPIONSHIP OF DISTRICT BY ONE POINT

The local high school Eagles went to Alpine last week to enter the District Basketball Tournament. There were only four teams represented this year, these being Sanderson, Marfa, Saragosa and Alpine.

Tournament play began Friday at 10 a. m., with a spirited game between Marfa and Sanderson. The Marfa five was outclassed and outplayed from the first whistle to the last, although the spirit of fight manifested made the game an interesting one from the standpoint of the spectator. Marfa got the lead in the first minute of play and maintained it for about three minutes. Then the Eagles' offense began working and by neat teamwork soon topped Marfa's lead and kept it throughout the remainder of the game. The game ended with Sanderson leading 24 to 11.

The outstanding star of this game for the Eagles' was Grigsby. He played a good defensive, as well as offensive game, and his quick floorwork enabled him to get away from his opponent, or else advance the ball up the floor. He showed unusual stamina, and fought throughout the entire period. Jansa played an excellent game at his post as standing guard. He was largely responsible for the few shots the Marfa quintet got within reasonable distance of the goal, and upon finding that he with Mitchell formed a defense not easily penetrated, the Marfa offense began to try long shots without success. White played his usual good game at his post as forward, and was responsible for a good share of Sanderson's score. He was known to the Marfa team as a man to be feared when he became within range of his basket, and was well covered (Continued on last page)

On Wednesday, February 11 Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Savage of this city celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, with only the immediate family being present. Mr. and Mrs. Savage have many friends here who wish for them many years more of happiness.

Mrs. Carlton White spent several days in El Paso.

The County Commissioners held their regular meeting Monday with the county judge, presiding, and the four precinct commissioners present. The following business was transacted:

Approved the county treasurer's quarterly report.

Accepted the bid of the Sanderson State Bank as county depository for the next two years.

Granted an extension of franchise to the Sanderson Ice, Water & Light Company.

The tax rate was made the same as last year.

The officers salary was set for the next two years.

The final contract and bonds for the construction of Section C of the Highway through Terrell county was approved. With the completion of this section Terrell county's highway will be completed from the Pecos county line on the west to to about 7½ miles of the Val Verde county line on the east. The plans for the construction of this remaining 7½ miles have been completed by the county engineers and are in the State Highway Dept. for approval. It is believed that these plans will be finally approved and construction begun within the next 60 or 90 days.

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

Law for an Automatic Return to Taxpayers of a Reasonable Surplus

By MARTIN B. MADDEN, Speech in House.

FOR the fiscal year 1925 the estimated surplus is $68,000,000 and for 1926 it is $374,000,000. Whether this surplus will be realized depends very greatly upon the action of congress. If new obligations are not undertaken which will increase the present estimate of expenditures and if the new revenue act produces a satisfactory amount of revenue, there is every prospect that it will materialize.

Personally—I do not speak for anyone except myself when I say what I am about to say—I would like to see some permanent law placed on the statute books of the country providing for an automatic return to the taxpayer of a reasonable surplus over the working balance whenever that surplus may accrue. I have an idea which I would like to outline. It is to this effect:

That we might properly pass an act which would not interfere with any other tax legislation that might be thought proper, requiring the secretary of the treasury at the end of every fiscal year to report to the President of the United States the amount of the surplus, whatever it might be, if any, over and above a safe working balance, and then after the receipt of that report from the secretary of the treasury the President should be required to direct the secretary automatically to return to the taxpayers whatever their proportion of the surplus might be, without any further application of law. That seems to me a sensible business proposition that would be inaugurated in any man's business if he was controlling the business entirely himself.

Imperative Need of Well-Trained Men in Conduct of Boy Guidance

By ROY HOYER, Director, Notre Dame University.

Until recently the only requisite considered necessary for a boys' worker was interest. Fortunately, the realization of the imperative need for well-trained men has been gaining, until today boards responsible for the conduct of boys' work organizations are insisting upon certain educational and experience qualifications in addition to those of character.

The course at Notre Dame university has been made a department of a school of education. Since the primary object of the course is not to prepare men only for some one particular field of boys' work, but on the contrary to train experts in the free-time problems of the boy, every program and activity of value have been included.

Of course, eventually each student is going to follow some one specific type of work, and so during the second year of the course he is given ample opportunity to specialize. In planning the course it had been felt that to train a man for any particular type of work, as for example scouting, it is necessary for him to have a thorough conception of the Y. M. C. A., the playground, the community center, the school, the church, the juvenile court, the big-brother movement, the boys' club, the woodcraft league, the civic and fraternal organizations, and the host of others in the field, not to mention the social agencies that deal with defective and dependent boys either directly or indirectly.

The Migration of Superior Individuals From the Rural Communities

By PROF. HORNELL HART, Bryn Mawr College.

The migration of superior individuals from rural communities to the cities is likely to depress seriously the ability and energy of the farming population. Surveys of social conditions in rural districts in the East and Middle West indicate deterioration in the recent decade. The average age at which a man migrates to the city is twenty-three years and for a woman twenty years.

On the other hand to summarize such findings as can be drawn from available data, it seems probable that the rate at which urban population is outstripping rural is likely to decline rather than increase in the future.

As to the growth of population in individual cities: If chambers of commerce should become scientifically interested in ascertaining the factors which actually determine the growth of cities, instead of engaging blindly in publicity and propaganda, they might promote the working out of basic principles as to the influence of rail and water transportation facilities, topography, location of industries, rates of wages, costs of living, rents, births and death rates, efficiency of city government and other factors in influencing the speed of urban development.

Man of Future Is Sure to Lose Teeth and Hair, Fingers and Toes

By PROF. E. E. RAYMOND, Harvard University.

The future man is as certain to lose his teeth as the ape man of the past has lost his tail. The ape man used his teeth to tear sinews, break nuts and as weapons of offense in fighting. Civilization had done away with these conditions.

Hair is a defense given us by nature against cold. Civilization gave men coats and artificial covering. Baldness is ever on the increase while it probably never existed on ancient man.

That man will lose certain of his fingers and toes also seems to be a biological certainty. When man climbed trees to escape from animals his toes were needed to give him footholds. Now they are quite useless. The shape of the human skull and man's erect position are designed to promote an increase in the size and height of the brain.

These changes will not be until man has passed through a series of evolutionary phases which probably will consume 40,000 to 75,000 years.

The Population of the World Is Doubling Itself Every Sixty Years

By PROF. A. B. WOLFE, Ohio State University.

The population of the world is doubling itself every sixty years and we shall be pointedly confronted with the choice of reducing our birth rate or our standard of living. Only inferior lands, limited in extent, remain for settlement. In the main, future improvements are to be looked for in the fourth decimal place.

The engineering and economic problems are confused. Some things technically possible are possible economically only at prohibitive cost and lower standard of living.

In the absence of an effective method of adjusting international differences we are, as the world now reasons, caught on the horns of a dilemma. If we do not breed like rats, regardless of economic consequences, we shall be in danger of attack by other and envious nations, in which unlimited multiplication will have afforded both a reason and a means for aggression. And if we do so breed, we shall reach the subsistence level, in which death will continuously reap a fat harvest without any foreign assistance. Economically, every nation will be caught in a vicious circle.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

By CLIVE ARDEN

Copyright by The Hobbs-Merrill Co.

With only the birds for witness, the sound of the surf for choir, the rattle of the eastern sky for altar, simply and from their hearts' depths these two lighted their torch. The few chief sentences from the marriage service were chosen by Barbara for their only rites.

There would be many, away in the world, to scoff, many to condemn. But no outward consecration of ground, no army of ordained priests, could have rendered more sacred that moment when the hush was broken by their low-voiced avowals. Perchance the "Destiny that shapes our ends," seeing all things, reading all hearts, who had flung these two together upon this far garden of His own creation, and given them there the one supreme gift which is part of Himself, would understand and accept their vows:

"To love and to cherish till death us do part. . . . And thereto I plight thee my troth. . . ."

Their voices did not falter. The small tin ring encircled the girl's finger; they stood silent a while, with locked hands. Then he drew her toward him, and very gently their lips met.

"My wife!" he breathed.

Barbara bathed, dressed, and got breakfast with no thought of fatigue after a sleepless night. Her heart seemed almost unbearably full. As she watched the smoke curl up from her own fire, and that rising from Meama's hut, she resembled the primitive woman glomping in this life shorn of all false trappings. Was not Meama likewise cooking food for her man? In the south, too, the native women were so employed. Man and his mate—in palace or hovel, in mansion or hut! All the artificiality hiding the big realities faded away with the worlds beyond the blue horizon.

It was the same with Alan. Like some fine, strong, wild thing, he dived, swam and splashed in the river; then returned for breakfast, ravenously hungry, singing as he swung down the bay.

"I have a great surprise!" Barbara announced. "Here is a tin of 'bully beef.' I saved it for my emergency. Shall we have it for our wedding feast, as a special treat?"

He shouted with laughter. "Lord! To think of 'bully' becoming a special treat for a wedding feast! Bring it along. O wise and thrifty woman."

She ste their "wedding feast" in a mossy shady dell; and even the memory of Aunt Dolly, who unconsciously had provided it, failed to cast more than a momentary shadow across their joy.

Alan lay along the bottom of the boat, his head pillowed in Barbara's lap, as the sun began to sink. "Well?" he asked. "Have you found a desert island honeymoon very irksome? What about the big cities where you expected to 'feel life'? What about your heart's desire?"

She laughed low, passing caressing fingers through his hair. "I have no other heart's desire. You are life itself to me now, Alan. That's why—"You came to me last night!" he suggested softly, as she stopped.

She nodded. The boat drifted idly, caressed by the soft breeze, rocking gently with the tide.

"Thank God you did," he murmured, after a pause. "Everything was becoming unbearable."

She trailed her fingers in the water, lost in thought.

"It was strange," she observed presently, "that the day on which I first began to feel—that you had become to me—should have been my wedding day!"

"Those first months here nearly drove me mad—until I was sure the field was clear," he replied. "Then I meant to wh!"

"Oh, Alan!" With sudden passion she drew his head back against her breast. "If I lost you—my husband—I should die."

He turned in her arms, and pressed his lips to her soft neck.

"Barbara! It means—all that—to you, at last!"

They stayed in the boat until darkness had fallen. Then Alan took the oars he had fashioned, and paddled back to land.

Silence fell upon them as they neared the shore. It was the hour when exterior things diminished to nothingness, and the Big Things were too vast for conversation. He beached the boat, then slipped his arm around the girl and drew her toward the hut.

"Our wedding night, Barbara," he whispered.

Her feet lingered a little, and she paused now and then to admire beauties of scent or sound; the rising moon showed her face tremulous. Outside the dark hut, she drew herself free, turning toward the sea as though loath to leave it. It seemed as though she were silently bidding farewell to some part of her life; and the man behind her stood motionless, his eyes on her averted head, silently waiting, making no attempt to touch her.

At last, slowly, she turned and held out her hands. He took them close in his.

"Come, my dearest," he said.

One night he returned, after a stormy day's battling in the south, with his own optimism gravely shaken. It was, he knew, but a question of days before the threatening mine should burst. The division had widened to an extent which only blood and explosion would, eventually, bridge; it needed but a match to the fuse, and that explosion would come.

Barbara did not meet him as usual. He wondered a little, making his way quickly down to their hut. Supper was ready, but she was not there. He looked into the sleeping hut, but that also was empty. Anxiously he turned his steps toward Roowa's abode. Meama sat outside, suckling a new addition to her family, crooning softly over the little dark form.

She waved an arm toward the east. "The great chief's wife went up to the heights long, long ago! Meama still watching for her," she said.

He strode off up the slope, and the native woman continued her crooning song.

Barbara was seated upon the rocks where, nearly a year before, the dawn had witnessed their simple marriage ceremony. Her elbows were propped on her knees, her chin was sunk in her hands.

Alan approached noiselessly, but she became instinctively aware of his presence. He noticed a strange expression in her eyes as she turned to greet him: a far-seeing wonder blended with a tenderness which seemed reflected in the smiling, tremulous lines of her mouth.

She silently stretched out her hands, and he took them in his, mystified.

"I wondered what had become of you—" he began.

"I felt I must come here. This always seems a kind of sacred temple, our own. . . . Oh, Alan!"

She gazed into his face half-smiling, yet with a suspicion of tears dimming the soft light in her eyes.

"What, dear?" he asked, more puzzled.

She made no reply; but the glory in her face seemed to deepen, radiating toward him. . . . Looing his hands, her arms crept up to his shoulders, round his neck, drawing his head down to her own.

A sudden, vague realization of some stupendous happening caused him to draw her close. "What is it, Barbara?" he murmured. "What are you trying to tell me?"

She tilted her head back a little, and saw the dawning comprehension in his face. A faint smile flickered again across her own.

"Can't you guess—my husband?"

Instantly he was conscious of the same inimitable tenderness in her regard which he had just seen in the eyes of the woman suckling her child. The same mysterious essence of motherhood seemed to emanate from both. With a muttered cry, his lips sought hers; he caught her close, pressing her to his heart as if daring all the forces of nature, all the venom of savage humanity, to take her from him now.

Suddenly, impulsively, she looked up into his eyes.

"Shall you love—it?" she whispered.

A reflection of her own tenderness showed in the smile which answered her. The glory of the sinking sun illuminated his face.

"Shall I?" he breathed. "My dearest—what a question!"

VI

Hand in hand they descended the hill, full of this fresh wonder. After supper, they sat on the shore in the moonlight, talking in low tones of the future, making wonderful plans. . . .

Both possessed that curious sensitiveness to nature which compels one, in any crisis, to make for open spaces, limitless horizons of ocean. . . .

It was after midnight when at last they went to bed. The night breeze had died down, and a peculiar sense of airlessness pervaded the island; the water became calm to oiliness.

Barbara was restless, and lay long awake. The strange stillness with its sensation of false calm heralding approaching tempest, revived her premonitions of disaster. When at last she fell asleep, it was only to be tortured with the same premonitions magnified into nightmare realities. She awoke gasping and sobbing in Alan's arms, and clung to him feverishly. "I dreamed you had disappeared," she cried, in bewildered explanation.

"How could that happen?" He soothed her. "How could my bulk disappear? Don't talk nonsense!"

They breakfasted later than usual, and had barely finished when the clamor of many agitated voices reached their ears.

Glancing apprehensively at each other, they hurried out of the hut. The sky was leaden, hues of angry orange suffusing the horizon, the air oppressive. From the direction of the palm grove streamed a hurrying, chattering crowd of black figures—men, women and children.

Croft's brow contracted, and his lips set. The mine had evidently exploded even sooner than he expected.

Seeing him, a wailing cry arose from the advancing crowd. Weary and terrified, they stumbled forward to the palisade, where the women fell upon the ground, moaning, weeping, waving wild arms, sometimes adding their voices to the unintelligible babble of the men. To comprehend their meaning was at present impossible.

Presently their talk grew more coherent; he was able to make out its drift.

"We will serve thee, O Great White Chief! . . . Thou art merciful! Thou art wise beyond the wisdom of our men! . . . We will work for thee, O Chief! Thou carest not to torture and kill. . . . A-aa! A-aa!"

"Thou hast done much for our tribe. Under thee it will become strong. If thou wilt be our chief. The fruits of the earth will grow, the fish leap up from the water! . . . We love thee, O Mighty Friend of the Gods! We will serve thee! . . . Thus, and much more with a similar burden, did they babble in their eagerness.

Commanding silence, he bade one of them explain the cause of this visitation.

Barbooma, it transpired, soon after Croft's departure the previous evening, had worked himself into a passion. Expressing contempt for the white man and his gods, he raised the tabu. Encouraged by his own adherents, he then declared war upon the white chief with instant death to all who thwarted his designs. This set the fuse alight. An outbreak of murmuring disloyalty to Barbooma warred with the usual superstitious fear of him as their god-ordained chief; while their genuine affection for Croft flared up to white heat. To prove his words, maddened by opposition, Barbooma seized and strangled one of the men who dared openly to rebel.

This was too much for the peaceful faction. Secretly and swiftly, they conspired together, under cover of night. While the rest of the tribe slept, they stole out—some eighty-odd, including women and children—and sped through the woods to the north.

This drastic move meant a tremendous decision, bound around as they were with age-old superstitions. It was a forlorn, terror-stricken little band which Croft presently addressed. He spoke kindly, trying to allay their fear, feeling a certain relief that the anticipated trouble had occurred so soon. Most of the men, he noticed, were fully armed; therefore it should not be impossible to overthrow Barbooma and, once for all, quell the savage element.

"Whether I can be your chief or not is in the hands of my gods," he concluded with prudent piety; "but rest assured of my protection. Your women and children are tired from the long walk through the forest. Let them come inside our garden for safety and food."

He opened the entrance in the palisade. Awestruck into silence, they filed through, their minds full of the "little blue devils," experienced here by their menfolk. Might these not spring up and burn them even now at the great white chief's command? They squatted in one close group, huddled following Barbara's movements with adoring, wondering eyes, as she distributed food. Their faith in Croft equaled their faith in their god, Bahauka; once within the palisade, their fears of Barbooma sank. Then men, resting outside, kept a sharp watch for any daylight attack. Roowa was sent to attend to his store of native weapons.

Presently the excited visitors in the garden, tired and satisfied, fell asleep.

SanderSON Loses Championship

ered. Mitchell played a good consistent game and he always placed himself in the place he was most needed, and was an indispensable cog in the teamwork of the Eagles. K. Harrell was sent in to fill the place of Mitchell in the latter part of the last half, and showed his ability to stay with his man. Kessler played a fine offensive and defensive game. His man had quite a little difficulty in staying with him, and he played over the entire floor helping advance the ball to shooting distance, where he added several points to his score.

In the afternoon Alpine eliminated Saragosa the only other contender by the top-heavy score of 59 to 16. With Alpine and SanderSON the only undefeated teams left in the race, the final game was set for 10 a. m. Saturday.

With the whistle ten basketball players began fighting as they had never fought before for supremacy of the district. Eagle fought Buck and for 20 minutes the Eagles had everything their way. The Eagles outplayed the Bucks in every department of the game, and piled up 10 point lead in this first half. Every man on the Eagle quintet helped to make the team run like a machine. In this half Kessler, White and Jansa spelled misery for the Bucks. Mitchell and Grigsby played a brilliant game of basketball. The other half was another story, not that the SanderSON five played a poorer brand of basketball, but that the shots from the foul line spelled ruin for the Eagles' lead. Grigsby was forced out of the game by the personal route about ten minutes before the half was up. K. Harrell was sent in to fill his place, and as he ordinarily plays in a guard position, he was out of his place, but in spite of this drawback, he played a good hard game. SanderSON played ball, and played it hard, but the breaks together with the personal fouls gave the Bucks a tie at the end of the regular playing period. An extra period of 5 minutes was necessary to determine the winner, the score at that time being 34 to 34. At the end of this period, the score was 38 to 37 for Alpine. This was a terrible blow for the SanderSON 5 for they had led throughout the entire game until the last few minutes of play.

Although the Eagles came off with the short end of the score, they should have no regrets about this game, for every one of them showed that he was a basketball player of no mean ability, and every Eagle fought his very best until the last whistle. One of these men will be lost this year by graduation, but the remainder of the team remains intact, and next year's team should be as good, and perhaps better than the one of the present season.

The Fordor Sedan is roomy, comfortable, and attractive in appearance—inside and out. In city traffic it handles and parks so easily that thousands drive it who could readily afford costlier cars. On country roads it comes through where heavier cars frequently cannot. Such qualities as these have brought the Ford its well-deserved reputation as the "Universal Car." Ford Motor Company, Detroit.
