MEN WANTED FOR PASSING FORGED CHECKS ESCAPE

Were Placed in Hotel

Last Sunday afternoon sheriff J. J. Nance received a telephone message from officers at Del Rio asking him to look out for two men traveling in a Cadillac coupe who were wanted for passing forged checks.

Several hours later the men reached town and stored their car in a local garage, then went to the hotel for a room. Soon as the officers learned that the men were in town they went after them. However while the officers were searching the car, the men escaped. So far they have not been found.

On searching the men belongings two quarts of whisky and a quantity of dope was found and the car was placed in the hands of Federal officers.

T. S. T. A. CAMPAIGNING FOR NEW MEMBERS

Fort Worth, Texas: Terrell County will be called on to enlist her public school teachers as members of the Texas State Teachers Association. Plans for a campaign for 30,000 members of the Association have been completed. Miss Clyde Duncan of El Paso is heading the campaign in the 16th Congressional District, of which Terrell county is a part.

G. J. Henshaw of Sanderson, Superintendent of Terrell county schools, will head up the campaign in the county. Each of the 18 districts is expected to enroll a minimum of 1000 members.

Can the Two Factions in Education, the Cultural and Practical, Be Harmonized?

RICHARD BURTON, University of Minnesota.

SEE three things operating against the welfare of a rightly conceived organic science of popular education. The three are: the fevered chase of the "practical" in education, resulting in no less than a revolution within the generation between 1885 and the present time; the abuse of the so-called democratic ideal; and, as a direct consequence of these two in union, the failure honestly and clearly to see and say that two distinct types of training, the scholarly and the practical, are being commonly lumped together.

It is high time to ask if a college is a machine from which any and every kind of information should be handed out as you turn the crank, or has it for its object intellectual attainment and the pursuit of learning for its own sake? To make the inquiry is not to say that both aims are not legitimate, nor is it to forfeit a claim to sound Americanism. It is simply to ask that we clarify our muddled thinking, and substitute a clear perception of what we are about for a mush of vague conceptions.

Logic demands that we acknowledge that hordes of people in a country like this need all sorts of practical training, and that institutions providing it, and so labeled, should be furnished them, leaving to real colleges (thus clarified by the proper drainage), the business of taking care of those who want truly collegiate work, and are capable of doing it. In the perverted desire to give everybody anything he wants, or thinks he wants, in pseudo-education, we have fallen into the danger of giving least to the few intellectual aristocrats who refuse to be standardized and find most difficulty in fitting into the scheme.

Here, subtly pervading the whole conception of education, is the astine assumption—equally egregious in education and in politics—that all are equal in brains, if only they are given equal chances. The truth is that in education, politics, life at large, brains are exceptional. Making education universal, and all but coercing people to go to college, does not in the least alter that primary fact. It is the business of democracies to remove all artificial and unnecessary bars to personal welfare and progress, but not the bar of nature.

"What a blessing if our colleges had the backbone to say to inquiring youth, 'Almost anybody can go to college, but this doesn't mean that everybody should.' How wonderful if some college, by inheritance the beneficiary and guardian of the sound academic ideal, should speak right out and say that its aim was aristocratic; to prepare the saving remnant to rule the rest of us! But what courage it would take in what we call democratic America!"

High School Geography Course Is Declared Vital in Modern Education

DR. GILBERT GROSVENOR, National Geographic Society.

The failure to teach geography in high schools is one of the anomalies of American public school education.

Geography is a basic subject. It enters into history, science, literature, and even the languages. It is a cultural subject of abiding interest and lifelong intellectual fascination. It is a vocational adjunct to many kinds of business and the professions.

A knowledge of geography is essential to understanding the news, and better teaching of geography would stimulate intelligent reading of newspapers.

A direct service to schools the National Geographic society now renders is the issuance of weekly sets of bulletins to some 20,000 school teachers for use among about 750,000 pupils. These bulletins, which constitute a gift to American education, supplement geography texts with up-to-date, interesting, informative, illustrated bulletins on geography. They add to the zest of the study, they enliven it by making contact between the day's news and geographic facts; they take the subject out of the laboratory and make it a part of life.

The National Geographic society, with its membership of nearly one million, has broader facilities for popularizing the use of maps than any other single agency in the world.

In the last several years the society has distributed a total of nearly 11,000,000 large maps, printed in six colors, and sent to members along with their National Geographic Magazine.

Our student roster—that is, our membership—reaches to every community of the United States of 50 or more white persons, and to 152 nations, colonies and mandatories; to every country, in fact, which has a postal system. Some of our members have to be reached by reindeer sleds, mule-back and camel caravans, in coolies' pockets and by queer water craft.

The National Geographic society, Mr. Grosvenor said, is a university of geography in a large sense. It is conducting an elective course—a great class in geography. Its course is patronized by millions of pupils of all ages.

Predicts the Rebuilding of Cities to Meet the Newer and Speedier Life

WALTER P. CHRYSLER, Automobile Manager.

The city of tomorrow will be as different as the cars you see on the street today are different from those of 25 years ago. Three influences are at work in America to make our transportation facilities just as different.

Those influences include electricity, motor vehicle use, and radio. The year 1950 will regard 1925 as one marked by a great wave of city rebuilding and replanning, and the reconstruction is going to mean heavy taxation.

The family of tomorrow will live in a small house or apartment, but that home will be absolutely fireproof, scientifically heated, illuminated by electricity, and thoroughly comfortable.

In the city of tomorrow there will be no ice man. Refrigeration will be done in every home by electricity. Every home will be equipped with radio. Motion pictures will be broadcast, as well as much of the news of the day.

Universities will broadcast instruction by radio, churches will broadcast their messages, and telephoning will be done by wireless. Pictures sent by electricity will be one of the fine arts. Great cities will be made up of small towns and business will be decentralized.

Tomorrow streets will be 120 to 340 feet wide and capable of handling six to eight lines of traffic. The same will be true of county and terminal highways leading into centers of population, such as our Lincoln highway, Dixie highway, Sheridan road, and like arteries.

In addition there will be great, wide arteries of travel running directly to the city center. I believe that in most cities rail traffic will be underground. There will be no surface or elevated trains. Instead there will be overhead motorways for all vehicular traffic. Tomorrow the pedestrian will reign supreme on the street level and need fear little other than the dropping of monkey wrenches and like impediments from passing airplanes.

Tells Why He Can Now Eat Hearty

"A letter which I read in the paper about Carter's Little Liver Pills fitted me down so closely that I could not help trying them and am very happy I did." So writes Mr. Frank J. Trumbull of Jersey City, N. J., whose letter goes on to say, "I had heard about Carter's Little Liver Pills for years but never knew they helped overcome poor appetite and sour stomach, until I read about another man in the same plight who took Carter's with good results. I tried them and can honestly say that they freed me of nasty gas on stomach, so that I can now eat without getting bilious, and they improved my appetite fully 100%. You can rest assured that from now on I will boost Carter's Little Liver Pills whenever I can."

Made Good on His Nerve

By ROBERT E. HEWES

(© 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

MASON found an air of suppressed excitement in the office when he reported for work. He had not yet unlocked his desk and glanced at his mail when Carney, the auditor accosted him.

"Heard the latest," breathlessly inquired Carney.

"No," Mason shuffled his mail as if more interested in it than in any news current in the office of Moody & Co.

"The old man's going to open a branch in Kokomo?"

Mason pricked up his ears. "Kokomo, eh? He lit a cigarette. "Well, good territory."

"Yet bet and good job for somebody. Wonder who'll be manager?" There was the slightest suggestion in Carney's voice.

"Well," Mason tilted his cigarette and ripped open an envelope. "I should know who'll get it?"

Carney shrugged expressively as he turned back to his books. The others, after a commonplace word or two and noncommittal answers from Mason, also turned.

Left alone, Mason shoved aside his mail and became absorbed in his thoughts. Kokomo, eh? Not so bad. Small enough job in itself, but it meant opportunity. If a man made good, possibly Chicago some day, and who knew, maybe in time even New York?

Starting as an office boy Mason, on sheer nerve, had persuaded the old man to put him on the road. As a salesman Mason made good on nerve. It was a classic around the office that an Iowa merchant had once dumped a stock of Moody & Co. goods in disgust. The next week Mason casually wandered in and tried to sell the speeches merchant a new stock of the same goods!

Marcus P. Moody was usually in an ill humor. He was in all of that today. As Mason stepped into his office after a perfunctory knock, the old man glared over his spectacles, pen poised over a sheet of paper.

"Well, well," he ignored his assistant sales manager's "good-morning."

Mason knew his boss well enough to come to the point quickly and without unnecessary circumlocution.

"I hear, Mr. Moody, you're intending to open a branch in Kokomo."

"Not only intending to open it, but going to open it!"

"Have you decided upon a manager yet?"

"If I have, I'm not announcing it."

"I'd like to speak for the place, sir!" Deliberately, with dangerous precision, the old man first laid down his pen, then removed his spectacles. He looked at his stenographer, arrested in her typing, as if seeking to corroborate his hearing right. Before the old gentleman could explode, Mason held up his hand.

"Now, now, Mr. Moody," he hurried. "I know what you're going to say, but give me a chance. I realize it is an unheard of thing for a man to ask for a promotion to a management in this organization. But I know I can make good on the job if given a chance. In addition, I have what I believe to be the most necessary of all qualifications for the position—nerve!"

Old Moody was by now slumped down in his chair, staring at the thoroughly at-ease young man before him. For a full minute there was silence, then Moody turned to his stenographer.

"Miss Harris," he spoke crisply, "will you ask Mr. Reynolds to step in?"

Mason tried to conceal his triumphant feeling. For he did feel triumphant. Reynolds was the sales manager, who ranked practically equally with Mason. Whenever the old man called the two of them in his office together it meant some important matter.

As Reynolds entered the office, the old man sat up with a snap. Reynolds looked from the boss to the nonchalant Mason a little nervously, almost apologetically. The stenographer slipped in behind the sales manager and to her desk. Mason smiled approvingly. In an hour, he reflected, she would be informing the whole office how he had hearded the lion in his den and walked off with the bacon.

"Reynolds," the old man barked crisply, "as you know, we are to open a branch in Kokomo. Also, as you, and Mr. Mason here, probably do not know, Mr. Palmer, the manager of the New York branch has resigned."

The old man paused. Reynolds and Mason exchanged glances. The latter was a trifle less nonchalant.

"Reynolds," the old man took up his spectacles and adjusted them on his nose with great precision. "I had decided to send you to Kokomo. Instead, you go to New York."

A dead silence fell over the office as the old man turned his gaze to Mason. "Mason! As you say, it takes nerve to get what you want, whether anyone else thinks you should have it or not. Your action this morning is, as you have suggested, an unprecedented one. However, I am rewarding your nerve."

He paused and dipped his pen in his ink with the little flourish he always assumed as a dismissal. "Per your specified request, I am sending you to—Kokomo!"

Wanted Lion's Share
"Your wife seems the kind of woman who is always bound to have the last word."

"Oh, I wouldn't mind that. The trouble is that she seems always bound to have 90 per cent of the words that precede the last."

SINNERS in HEAVEN

By CLIVE ARDEN

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Co.

PART FOUR—Continued.

"This was our wedding ring," she whispered.

The involuntary start which the other gave was quickly controlled. She met steadily, albeit with some apprehension, the girl's searching look—seemingly to probe to her very soul, proving its faith.

"Yes," she encouraged. "You—married him? Tell me everything; will you?"

"You understand?" The searching look never relaxed. "You do understand?"

The appeal in that passionate regard and question brought quick response.

"Dear," she replied, pulling her down on the couch by the fire, "I understand. You loved each other and acted in accordance with—honorable convictions, in extraordinary circumstances. Is that enough? What more can I say?"

Barbara drew a breath of inexpressible relief. Holding fast to that sympathetic hand, she recounted with simple fervor the whole history. Nothing was omitted up to the present. When her voice ceased, there fell a long silence. From somewhere in the house came a merry laugh; an opening door let out a brief flood of dance music.

Then a piece of coal dropped into the fender, and Mrs. Field moved.

"Ah, my darling!" she cried. "It is bitter . . . I know . . . I know . . ."

That was the first of many talks together during that Christmas season, which brought with it such acute memories.

On the afternoon of Boxing day, as the girl sat alone, Hugh suddenly appeared—a grave-faced Hugh, with the bewildered "doggy" look still in his eye. She rose to meet him, with some embarrassment.

"Mrs. Field's with the old people. She said you were alone," he blundered, in explanation. "Bab—I've missed you, old thing!"

The simple directness touched her. She, too, had been conscious of a gap in the surface of her life, among the old haunts of their childhood, which had added to her wretchedness. Impulsively, she gave him her other hand.

"I have missed you, too, Hughie!"

Hugh clearly had something on his mind.

"I wanted to say," he blundered on, "to tell you—I was a rotter—that day! I've been thinking the deuce of a lot lately, Bab! And I wanted you just to know—you can count on me any time to—back you and Croft up, I mean."

It was clumsily expressed; but she understood what the effort cost him, and the genuine feeling behind it. Hugh looked at her diffidently, then away through the window, speaking quickly and huskily. "And I wanted you to know that if—later on, perhaps—you felt you could marry me, after all—" he paused, glancing at her, "I shall always be there—just the same."

The eyes that met his were swimming in sudden tears. "My dear!" she cried. "But it can never be now—"

"You need not say anything, or bother about it," he said simply.

Impulsively she pressed his hands against her cheek; then he drew himself free. Hugh intensely disliked scenes. Having said what he wanted, he turned the subject. "Mrs. Field told me to have tea with you. She said there were loads of muffins! Let's sit on the hearth-rug and toast them, as we used to do."

So they sat together on the floor toasting muffins, the barrier breaking down between them. Thus Mrs. Field found them on her return; and a certain look of relief crossed her face.

It was one of those days when everything goes wrong. The village "help" did not come; and Martha therefore considered herself too much overworked to complete any one job. Lunch was late, the soup tepid, the potatoes were hard, coffee was lukewarm. The clogging of the well-oiled wheels of this small grove naturally resulted in "nerves" on the part of Mrs. Stockley. These, working up gradually, found relief in an explosion, when Barbara announced an afternoon's golf with Hugh. "Surely there must be work of some sort for her to do in this tragedy of an unhelpful household? This led to a heated argument, which took a sudden deflection down an unexpected channel.

"Of course, if you have renewed your engagement with Hugh—"

"I have not. I never can."

"And why can you never marry Hugh?" her mother asked testily. "Is it still because of that ridiculous infatuation? Barbara, I insist upon your forgetting such nonsense."

"You don't understand, mother. I can never forget."

"No," agreed Mrs. Stockley with some heat; "I do not understand; and I think it is time I did!"

She turned to her sister, as usual, for support, which was speedily forthcoming.

"Barbara," began that worldly woman, her curiosity at last given legitimate rein, "how far did this infatuation go? What can you never forget?"

The girl looked at her, startled, at a momentary loss. Her sensitive face, an enemy to subterfuge, flushed angrily.

"Ah!" exclaimed her aunt meaningfully, "I thought from the first there was something wrong."

"What do you mean, Aunt Mary? There was nothing—wrong!"

"Then why maintain such mystery? Why are you afraid to talk of the matter—to tell the truth?"

A rush of loathing, contempt for all the suspicious minds about her, recklessness, which, in impulsive natures, has far-reaching effects, swept the girl away. After all, what did their feelings matter? What their opinions to the man whose memory she had tried in vain to shield from vulgar calumny? Barbara turned and faced the two women, tossing back the hair from her brow.

"You shall have the truth!" she cried, with suddenly blazing eyes. "This 'infatuation' you talk about went—to the end. He returned my love. We became husband and wife."

The silence was awful. A dormant volcano could not have seemed more vibrant with foreboding. The two women sat, bereft of speech, gazing blankly at the girl, who faced them fearlessly from the hearthrug. From Mrs. Stockley's face every vestige of color had fled. She looked suddenly old; her features were haggard.

Then Barbara, as she had done twice before, held out her left hand.

"This," she said, breathing fast, "is my wedding ring. He was my husband."

The tension broke. Mrs. Stockley gasped, and her sister gave a snort of contemptuous laughter.

"Husband!" she mocked. "Pray—who was the priest? Where was the church? Or—had you a native registry office?"

The sarcasm was to the girl merely as the heat of an extra candle to one already enveloped in flames. She ignored the speaker, fixing her eyes upon her mother.

"Do you understand, mother?"

At that moment the sight of her mother's deathly face struck, like a blow, upon her heart. Her anger subsided as quickly as it had arisen; in its place a huge pity arose, making it suddenly imperative that the woman who had borne her should be saved the suffering of misconception.

Impulsively she moved forward, stretching out both hands.

"Mother!"

Mrs. Stockley rose slowly to her feet, ignoring the hands, still staring at her daughter as if she were some hideous snake seen in a corner of her comfortable room.

"You!" she muttered. "You—my daughter—you dare to face me with those—lies?"

The hands dropped and clenched at her sides. "They are not lies! It was impossible to get married according to English law. We therefore performed the ceremony for ourselves. We took the same vows—it was perfectly honorable."

Miss Davies broke in with another harsh laugh.

"Did he actually succeed in stuffing you with all that, to cloak your immorality?"

"Aunt Mary! How dare you?"

"Oh! it's always the same! Haven't I dealt with hundreds of cases in my work which have been 'perfectly honorable'? Fools! Dupes! You weak women believe anything!"

"You—y-you—" Barbara choked, in her furious indignation.

"Immorality!" Mrs. Stockley caught at the word. "Immorality? In one of our family? My own daughter?"

"You got off lightly," broke in her sister, watching the girl narrowly, through her longnettes. "Without paying the price! Most girls are not so fortunate. But I suppose you took good care to prevent—"

"Yes!" cried her mother almost hysterically, "suppose there had been children?"

"There would have been," she replied with unnatural calm, her eyes burning in an ashen face. "That is why I was so ill at Singapore."

For a moment both women were again bereft of speech, Barbara turned to the fire and stood gazing into its depths.

"Ha!" gasped her aunt, at last. "I always thought there was something suspicious in that illness."

Then the girl flashed round, contempt ringing in her voice.

"Yes, Aunt Mary, you would! People like you would find something suspicious in—an archangel. Oh!" she cried passionately, "I know all the disgusting, vulgar gossip concerning Alan and myself! I knew it before I reached England. Now, I suppose, you will all purr in your self-righteousness, thinking how wise you were—"

"Barbara!" spluttered her dumfounded aunt.

"Oh, yes, you will! But—turning blazing eyes upon Miss Davies' furious face—"you are all wrong! How can you tell what was right and what was not—out there? What do you all know of real, fundamental life? What experience have you had of—love, temptation—any problems—that you should dare—dare to judge? You all carry out your religious observances to the letter—but what about the spirit of it all?"

The two women were staggered by her furious flow of words.

"I understand," cried Mrs. Stockley, in weak impotent rage, "that you have disgraced our name! Sin cannot be excused. Whatever the man was—and thank heaven he is dead!—you should have shown strength. You—you—are nothing but a—wanton!"

"Mother!" the girl recoiled, as if she had been struck, catching at a chair for support.

Her mother broke into a storm of hysterical weeping.

"Go!" she cried, between her sobs. "Leave the house! I—I refuse to own you! Go to your friends who—condone immorality—who encourage sin."

John Jenny Grant—

"Mother!" she cried again, with white lips, "you don't realize what you are saying—"

"I do! I do!—Go!" Weakly she stepped her foot, then sank into her chair, burying her face in her handkerchief.

A wild caricature of a laugh broke from Barbara's lips. She looked at her mother's shaking form, then at her aunt's rigid figure and hostile countenance.

"Very well," she said slowly, "I will go." As if dazed, she put up her hand to her head, and gave one look round the familiar room. Presently the drawing room door closed, with deliberate quietness, behind her.

Barbara's sudden appearance at the flat brought Mrs. Field little surprise. She had heard the rumblings of the storm approaching in Barbury, had seen the lowering clouds; but, with rare insight, she forebore to interfere. Some storms, being inevitable, are best left to themselves. "Forewarned and forearmed," one's work comes later with salvage and reconstruction. Not a whole regiment of engineers could pull down the wall encircling Mrs. Stockley's horizon; of that Mrs. Field was certain. In time, when the shock, and—above all—the talk, had subsided, a few bricks might, with infinite tact, be drawn away, allowing an occasional glimpse of wide open lands beyond. . . . But that would not be yet. . . . In the meantime it was the girl's quivering soul which needed infinite delicacy in handling; which wavered, struggled, sank gradually lower into the dark wilderness of morbidity, from which those who get lost therein take long to discover a way out; and, when they do, find the burrs and thorns still sticking to them, never to be quite shaken off.

"Very Well; I Will Go."

Margaret Field had been through all this herself, years ago. No words, she knew, could help. She watched the girl closely, but made no attempt to force her. Putting back the clock of her own days, she entered the black pit with her, understanding her darkness.

Barbara went away. She gave no address. "I want to feel cut off from everything and everybody who knows me—for a time," she said, when her friend expostulated.

A remote Cornish village, trailing its whitewashed cottages down a precipitous narrow lane bordered by little cobbled ditches wherein ducks waddled and talked together—winding round a corner between fragrant gardens that merged into gray walls of houses and banks which, in summer, oozed ferns from every crevice, burst forth into fires of purple-red fuchsias and bulged out into great clumps of hydrangeas; pausing for breath, while the lane dropped to the old inn in the valley below, the white and gray cottages straggled along on either side the stream gurgling over its stony bed between rolling coombs in the valley behind, to the harbor which was its goal. . . . Such was the retreat in which Barbara found herself.

The chance memory of a friend's rapture had led her weary footsteps thither—to a small gray house near the river, kept by a bright young woman and her true-hearted husband.

Here, unknown and unnoticed, away from the stings of malicious tongues, the inquisitive world—not even seeing a newspaper—she wrestled with the questions and doubts and miseries of her heart.

"If the joy of your own personal love is withdrawn," Margaret Field had said, one day in London, "the seed is never lost. You may think it is for a time; but, later, it shoots up, nourished by experience, growing into a strong plant which will develop into a flowering tree of many branches."

The truth of that, too, was dimly in her mind as she watched the stars come out above the harbor—in her heart the tired peace of one who, giving up tilting at windmills he can never conquer, lays his hand upon the plow which needs it. If solving the mystery of suffering could never be accomplished; if her own personal keynote to happiness were lost; then content she must be to hold but the hand of fellowship to those companions in bitter waters—to help find it for the world starving for love.

Perhaps—who knows?—that is the answer to the riddle.

As darkness fell, she turned down the path over the rocks; crossed the little bridge spanning the river; and made her way to the gray house, from which cheerful lights beckoned.

She fumbled with the handle, turned it; opened the door; then stood for a moment blinking confusedly; for something big and dark had loomed up in the small passage, hiding the hanging lamp.

A great cry burst suddenly from the girl's lips. . . . In the dark she turned ashy white; swayed; clutched vainly at the doorpost; and would have fallen, had she not been caught by arms that held her so strongly that they stopped her breath. . . .

Alan stood on the threshold.

VIII

It was only a small sitting room, with an oil lamp and a crackling fire. But all the worlds and all the heavens were enclosed within its walls to the two who clung together in their rapture.

Wonderingly, almost reverently, the girl passed her hands over the arms that clasped her—touching the dark hair and bronzed cheek half-fearfully, scarcely believing in their reality, looking upon him with bewildered, darkened eyes almost afraid to trust their own sight. The tall broad-shouldered figure had lost not an inch of its uprightness, nor had the head lost its old dominant poise. The few extra lines round the smiling lips and glowing eyes were swept up into the radiance which seemed to envelop him. Yet, in the dark clothes of civilization, he appeared subtly strange to the half-clad, barefooted overlord of savages of other days.

"Yes," he said at last, catching her hand lightly wandering over his arm. "It's all real. Solid flesh—no ghost!"

He raised her chin in the old possessive way, and looked long into the thin face and dark-ringed eyes, which told their own tale of suffering endured; then he pressed her head to his breast and held her close again in silence, as if defying any fate to separate them now.

"But," she stammered faintly at last, "how is it—why—I don't understand—?"

"Why I'm not sleeping with my father, as you all surmised? Well—that is your fault."

"Mine?"

He nodded. "When Baboona was about to send me to my gods, you conveniently sent him, instead, to the shades of Valhalla—that last bullet, you know!"

Her eyes opened wide, and she caught her breath.

Get Loans From "Aunt"

In Paris and other big French cities the pawnbroker is called "my aunt." In France one needn't blush in doing business with the pawnbroker, for he is the state; that is, the government conducts the pawnbroking business. It does it very well, too, if I am to believe the testimony of some Americans who have "traded" with "My Aunt" while awaiting delayed remittances from home. "My Aunt" has had a good year's business. She does little business nowadays with the working-man, for he is always in work. The center of poverty has moved. It is the white-collar brigade which, unable to make both ends meet, resorts to "My Aunt." Oddly enough, "My Aunt's" shop in Paris is on "the Hill of Piety," not a misprint for pity—A. B. L., in World Traveler Magazine.

FARM ITEMS

(From S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Farmers Make Money on Ton Litters. The idea of producing a ton of pigs from one litter in one hundred and eighty days originated in Indiana in the year 1922.

The object of the contest is the economical production of pork. To secure economic production it is necessary to use pigs of good breeding with capacity for large litters, possessing the ability to feed rapidly and top the market when finished.

All farmers in the club work were under the supervision of the county agricultural agents directed by the Extension Service of the A. and M. College, or some officers of the Texas Swine Breeders' Association.

The work of the past two years has proved conclusively that the old method of requiring from twelve to twenty-four months to finish a hog for market is unprofitable and has cost Texas millions of dollars in wasted feed.

The Texas Ton Litter Contests of the past five years proved so valuable and profitable and have been the source of so much valuable information to Texas hog raisers that plans have been made to have a similar ton litter contest for 1925.

General Requirements.

- (1) Any hog owner residing in Texas is eligible to enroll in the Texas Ton Litter Club without cost. (2) Litters farrowed between February 15 and May 25 are eligible. (3) Litters must be nominated and earmarked within fifteen days after farrowing. (4) The owner shall nominate the litter on cards provided for the purpose, showing the ear-mark, date of farrowing, and number of boar and sow pigs in the litter.

Realizing the fact that the value of this work to the farmers of Texas will be determined by the number entering the demonstrations, some of the leading farm papers of the state, such as the Farm and Ranch and Dallas Semi-Weekly Farm News, together with the Texas Swine Breeders' Association and several large business firms, have gotten behind this movement and are offering attractive prizes as well as their co-operation and influence to encourage the farmers to enter this contest.

Church News
of Sanderson

Tomorrow, being the fifth Sunday there is no regular appointment for preaching, unless some one volunteers.

Sunday school convened last Sunday with 104 present but several teachers absent. Good report from all classes. Each teacher is made glad when every member of his or her class are in their places. A hearty welcome to all.

All class contributions and free will donation taken last Sunday at Sunday school will be applied to the indebtedness on the new addition, amount given was $51.33 thank you one and all.

Rev. D. A. Adams preached two excellent sermons last Sunday. The special dust by Messrs
Jack McKee and Dan Duke was well rendered.

The society of the W. M. U.
met with Mrs. E. P. Halley last Monday for a social meeting with 24 present. A short business session was the first feature of the meeting and a rising vote of thanks was presented to Mrs.
Mary Schupbach for the lovely quilt she pieced and presented to the society. The following program on China was then given:

Devotional, Mrs. C. D. Strange-Song on Edison, "Somewhere a Voice is Calling."

Reading, "When Mama Plays
With me," Lillian Ruth Halley.

Paper, Christian Homes in China, Mrs. Franklin.

Reading, "What if the Lights Went Out," Mrs. Leroy Griggley.

Paper, Some of the Customers of the Chinese, Mrs. Gray.

Reading, "Yesterday," Tropha
Fred.

Song on Edison, "Perfect Day"

After the program a social hour was spent. Hostess had prepared an observation contest which was interesting. Carrie Ivy making high score. An excellent free will offering was received. Hostess served chicken sandwiches, potato chips, doughnuts and chocolate. Next meet-with Mrs. Gayle Mussey for Bible study.

A nice little program with scripture verses was well prepared by Jr. Leaguers last Sunday. A vocal duet by Minnie Lee Luckie and Novice White, with Gladys Luckie at the piano, was well presented in all parts.

First bell for League at 2:30 each Sunday. An earnest desire for more members, a cordial invitation to all.

Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian church met with Mrs.
H. R. Laurence Thursday for an all day session to make summer clothing for the Society's adopted orphan, Thelma Demitt.
There were 15 present. All the garments were completed. A delightful dinner was served and thoroughly enjoyed by all.
Next meeting, business and social, will be with Mrs. Daggett next Monday evening with Messames Daggett and Bodkin as hostesses. All welcome.

Bell rings at 9:30 for Sunday school, singing commences at 10 a. m. A cordial invitation to our friends and neighbors to visit our Sunday school and see the work being done by the pupils.

Weekly Purchase Plan

Invest a little each week
for this summer's vacation

Plan now for next July. You'll want a car for fishing, for trips to the country, for Sunday picnics. Small weekly payments out of earnings will soon give you practically any amount you want, and make deposits of any size you find most convenient. Almost before you realize it you will have the car paid for.

165,000 families have already purchased their Fords in this way. Ask the nearest Authorized Ford Dealer to explain how they did it and how easily you can do the same. See him today or write us direct.
