AILMENTS OF YOUNG GIRLS

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound School Teacher's Experience

Evanston, Wyoming.—"A few years ago I had troubles every month such as girls often have, and would suffer awfully every time. I was teaching school and it made it hard for me as I had to go to bed for two or three days. One day my mother suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it did wonders for me. In the course of a year I married and after my first baby was born I got up too soon and it caused a displacement. This troubled me so that I could hardly walk or do my housework. I knew what the Vegetable Compound did for me before so I took it again. It strengthened me and now I have five little kiddies. The eldest is six, the baby is five months old and I have twin boys three years old and a boy of five years. I do all my own housework, washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I owe my health to your wonderful medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

Tee Quickly Felled

Rapid felling of trees by a novel method was accomplished at Morden, England, in order to make way for the extension of the City and South London railway from Clapham Common into Surrey. By means of a monkey winch—an apparatus used in the Australian bush—an elm tree 65 feet high was brought to the ground in ten minutes. The winch was secured by a steel cable to a small tree and another cable connected to the elm. Two men steadily tightened the cable and the tree fell. It was estimated that by old methods it would have taken three men three days to remove the tree and its roots. By the new method the roots were pulled out intact.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it. A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend for almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper in your order. Medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

LATE FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Grain Sorghums as an Emergency Crop for 1925.

During the present severe and prolonged drought the farmers of a large part of Texas, especially central Texas, where they have been depending on corn for their grain crop, are at a loss to know what to plant to take the place of corn. On account of the lateness of the season, and a lack of moisture in the ground, it is not advisable to attempt to grow corn. The only kind of corn that would be all advisable to plant are the early maturing types such as "June corn" and "Sar-cropper," advises T. O. Walton, Director of Extension Service, A. and M. College of Texas.

As an emergency crop to take the place of corn, the grain sorghum such as kafir, milo and fetterita may be substituted. It should be remembered however, that the extension service is suggesting these crops for the corn growing sections of Texas, only during the present emergency. They are better adapted to the western and south-western parts of Texas, under ordinary conditions because the heads are more subject to blast in the central and eastern sections of the state. The blasting, that is, the heads falling to fill out—is due to small insects which seem to do their greatest damage when wet weather prevails during or just before the blooming period.

Types of Grain Sorghum.

Some of the best types of grain sorghums are, Standard Black Hull Kafir, Dwarf Yellow Milo, and Spur fetterita. The milo and fetterita mature in 90 to 110 days, which adapts them to short seasons and low rainfall. Kafir requires about 120 days to mature. Kafir and fetterita make more juicy stalk. However, all of them may be used as forage in case they do, or do not mature seed.

The grain sorghums differ from the sweet sorghums mainly by having larger heads of grain, the stalks not being as sweet and juicy and not growing as tall. The grain sorghums are grown largely for the grain, whereas the sweet sorghums are grown for forage.

Growing the Crop.

Time of Planting.—There is no particular planting date for grain sorghums as all that is necessary is to plant them in time so that they can mature before frost. They have been planted as late as July and August with good results.

Sowing the Seed.—The grain sorghums are grown very similar to corn in rows spaced about three and one-half feet apart, with plants from ten to twelve inches apart in the row. If the weather continues very dry, the rows may be spaced even further apart as better yields have been made during very dry seasons with rows as far apart as seven feet and planted thicker in the drill. From two to three pounds of good seed is ordinarily sufficient to sow one acre.

The seed can be planted with a corn planter by using sorghum plates. It may be necessary to close some of the holes in the sorghum plates in order to get the desired amount per acre. Blank plates may also be used by drilling three-sixteenths inch holes in them.

Cultivation.—Cultivation is also similar to that of corn. It should be often enough to destroy weeds and to keep a mulch on the surface. Grain sorghums grow slowly when young and are easily injured by weeds. The spike tooth harrow is a good implement to use for the first and often for the second cultivation. If the soil crusts or bakes so that it is hard for the young plants to come through, or weed seeds are germinating, it is well to break the crust and kill the young weeds with a harrow, and then follow with a second harrowing before the plants are large enough to be worked with a cultivator. The harrow teeth should be set slanting so that they will not pull out the young plants.

Insect Control.—Some of the best things to do to prevent damage from blasting of the heads by the sorghum midge, are (1) The use of pure type seed from which the stalks all head out about the same time; (2) Cutting out the early formed heads in case some of them have formed before the main crop, as they would make breeding places for the midge; (3) Planting grain sorghums at least 300 yards away from the sweet sorghums; (4) Keeping down Johnson grass.

Pure type seed on account of uniformity of heading, should be used by all means to guard against insect attacks, as well as to increase the yield especially since it requires only two to three pounds of seed per acre. Planting grain sorghums on a uniform type of soil, is also important for the control of the midge, because on that type the heads would set more uniformly.

Sources of Seed Supply.—In order to get in touch with sources of pure seed it is suggested that the farmers take the matter up with their county agent. It is also best for the farmers of one community to pool their order as by doing so, they should be able to obtain seed at a less cost and also save in the freight rate.

Harvesting.—The crop may be harvested (1) Heading by hand; (2) Heading with a grain header; (3) Harvesting the whole plant. P and fl.

THE NEW LIFE

SYNOPSIS.—Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selma DeJong, daughter of Simon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selma, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In 1891, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selma perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself.

Chapter III

Every morning throughout November it was the same. At six o'clock: "Miss Peake! Oh, Miss Peake!" "In up!" Selma would call in what she meant to be a gay voice, through chattering teeth.

"You better come down and dress where it's warm here by the stove." Peering down the perforations in the floor-hole through which the parlor chimney swelled so proudly into the drum, Selma could vaguely discern Mrs. Pool stationed just below, her gaze upturned.

That first morning, on hearing this invitation, Selma had been rocked between horror and mirth. "I'm not cold, really. I'm almost dressed. I'll be down directly."

Maartje Pool must have sensed some of the shock in the girl's voice; or, perhaps, even some of the laughter. "Roel and Jakob are long out already cutting. Here back of the stove you can dress warm."

Shivering and tempted though she was, Selma had set her will against it. "I won't go down," she said to herself, shaking with the cold. "I won't come down to dressing behind the kitchen stove like a—like a peasant in one of those dreadful Russian novels. . . . That sounds stuck up and horrid. . . . The Pools are good and kind and decent. . . . But I won't come down to huddling behind the stove with a bundle of underwear in my arms. Oh, dear, this corset's like a casing of ice."

"But I won't dress behind the kitchen stove!" declared Selma, glancing meanwhile at that hollow, grotesque drum. She even stuck her tongue out at it (only nineteen, remember!). When she thought back, years later, on that period of her High Prairie experience, stoves seemed to figure with absurd prominence in her memory. That might well be. A stove changed the whole course of her life.

From the first, the schoolhouse stove was her bete noir. Out of the weller of that first year it stood, huge and menacing, a black tyrant. The High Prairie schoolhouse in which Selma taught was a little more than a mile up the road beyond the Pool farm. She came to know that road in all its moods—ice-blocked, drifted with snow, yawning in mud. School began at half-past eight. After her first week Selma had the mathematics of her early morning reduced to the least common denominator. Up at six. A plunge into the frigid garments; breakfast of bread, cheese, sometimes bacon, always rye coffee without cream or sugar. On with the cloak, muffler, hood, mittens, galoshes. The lunch box in bad weather. Up the road to the schoolhouse, battling the prairie wind that whipped the tears into the eyes, blowing the drifts, slipping on the hard ruts and icy ridges in dry weather. Excellent at nineteen. As she flew down the road in sun or rain, in wind or snow, her mind's eye was fixed on the stove. The schoolhouse reached, her numbed fingers wrestled with the rusty lock. The door opened, there smote her the schoolroom smell—a mingling of dead ashes, kerosene, unwashed bodies, dust, mice, chalk, stove-wood, lunch crumbs, mold, slate that has been washed with suds. Into this Selma rushed, untying her muffler as she entered. In the little vestibule there was a box piled with chunks of stove-wood and another heaped with dried corn-cobs. Alongside this a can of kerosene. The cobs served as kindling. A dozen or more of these you soaked with kerosene and stuffed into the maw of the rusty iron pot-bellied stove. A match. Up flared the corn-cobs. Now was the moment for a small stick of wood; another to keep it company. Shut the door. Draughts. Dampness. Smoke. Suspense. A blaze, then a crackle. The wood has caught. In with a chunk now. A wait. Another chunk. Slam the door. The schoolhouse fire is started for the day. As the room thawed gradually Selma removed layers of outer garments. By the time the children arrived the room was livable.

Selma had seen herself, dignified, yet gentle, instructing a roomful of Dutch cherubs in the simpler elements of learning. But it is difficult to be dignified and gracious when you are suffering from chilblains. Selma fell victim to this morbid discomfort, as did every child in the room. She sat at the battered pine desk or moved about, a little ice-wool shawl around her shoulders when the wind was wrong and the stove balky. Her white little face seemed whiter in contrast with the black folds of this somber garment. Her slim hands were rough and chapped. The oldest child in the room was thirteen, the youngest four and a half.

Early in the winter Selma had had the unfortunate idea of opening the ice-locked windows at intervals and giving the children five minutes of exercise while the fresh cold air cleared brains and room at once. Arms waved wildly, heads, wobbling, short legs worked vigorously. At the end of the week twenty High Prairie parents sent protests by note or word of mouth. Jan and Cornelius, Katrina and Aggie went to school to learn reading and writing and numbers, not to stand with open windows in the winter.

On the Pool farm the winter work had set in. Klaas drove into Chicago with winter vegetables only once a week now. He and Jakob and Roel were storing potatoes and cabbages underground; repairing fences; preparing frames for the early spring planting; sorting seedlings. It had been Roel who had taught Selma to build the schoolhouse fire. He had gone with her on that first morning, had started the fire, filled the water pail, initiated her in the rites of corn-cobs, kerosene, and dampers. A shy, dark, silent boy. She set out deliberately to woo him to friendship.

"Roel, I have a book called 'Ivanhoe.' Would you like to read it?" "Well, I don't get much time." "You wouldn't have to hurry. Right there in the house. And there's another called 'The Three Musketeers.'"

He was trying not to appear pleased; to appear stolid and Dutch, like the people from whom he had sprung. Some Dutch sailor ancestor, Selma thought, or fisherman, must have touched at an Italian port or Spanish and brought back a wife whose eyes and skin and feeling for beauty had skipped layer on layer of placid Netherlands to crop out now in this wistful sensitive boy.

"Selma had spoken to Pool about a shelf for her books and her photographs. He had put up a rough bit of board, very crude and ugly, but it had served. She had come home one snowy afternoon to find this shelf gone and in its place a smooth and polished one, with brackets intricately carved. Roel had cut, planed, polished, and carved it in many hours of work in the cold little shed of the kitchen. He had there a workshop of sorts, fitted with such tools and implements as he could devise. He did man's work on the farm, yet often at night Selma could faintly hear the rasp of his hand saw after she had gone to bed. This sort of thing was looked upon by Klaas Pool as foolishness. Roel's real work in the shed was the making and mending of coldframes and hotbeds for the early spring plants. Whenever possible Roel neglected this dull work for some fancy of his own. To this Klaas Pool objected as being "dumb."

"Roel, stop that foolishness, get your ma once some wood. Carving on that box again instead of finishing them coldframes. Some day, by golly, I show you. I break every stick . . . dumb as a Groningen."

Roel did not sulk. He seemed not to mind, particularly, but he came back to the carved box as soon as chance presented itself. He was reading her books with such hunger as to cause her to wonder if her stock would last him the winter. Sometimes, after supper, when he was hammering and sawing away in the little shed Selma would snatch Maartje's old shawl off the hook, and swathed in this against draughty chinks, she would read aloud to him while he carved, or talk to him above the noise of his tools. Selma was a gay and volatile person. She loved to make this boy laugh. His dark face would flash into almost dazzling animation. Sometimes Maartje, hearing their young laughter, would come to the shed door and stand there a moment, hugging her arms in her rolled apron and smiling at them, uncomprehending but companionable.

"You make fun, h'm?"

"Oh, Roel! I got no time to sit down." She was off.

Roel slid his plane slowly, more slowly, over the surface of satin-smooth oak board. He stopped, twined a curl of shaving about his finger. "When I am a man, and earnix, I am going to buy my mother a silk dress like I saw in a store in Chicago and she should put it on every day, not only for Sunday; and sit in a chair and make little fine stitches like Widow Paarenberg."

"What else are you going to do when you grow up?" She waited, certain that he would say something delightful.

"Drive the team to town alone to market."

"Oh, Roel!"

"Sure, already I have gone five times—twice with Jakob and three times with Pop. Pretty soon, when I am seventeen or eighteen, I can go alone. At five in the afternoon you start and at nine you are in the Haymarket. There all night you sleep on the wagon. There are gas lights. The men play dice and cards. At four in the morning you are ready when they come, the commission men and the peddlers and the grocery men. Oh, it's fine, I tell you!"

"Here, look." He rummaged around in a dusty box in a corner and suddenly shy again, laid before her a torn sheet of coarse brown paper on which he had sketched crudely, effectively, a melee of great-horned horses; wagons piled high with garden truck; men in overalls and corduroys; faring gas torches. He had drawn it with a stub of pencil exactly as it looked to him. The result was as startling as that achieved by the present-day disciple of the impressionistic school.

Selma was enchanted.

Once, early in December, Selma went into town. The trip was born of sudden revolt against her surroundings and a great wave of nostalgia for the dirt and clamor and crowds of Chicago. Early Saturday morning Klaas drove her to the railway station five miles distant. She was to be with Maartje. A letter had been written Julie Hempel ten days before, but there had been no answer. Once in town, she went straight to the Hempel house. Mrs. Hempel, thin-lipped, met her in the hall and said that Julie was out of town. She was visiting her friend Miss Arnold, in Kansas City. Selma was not asked to stay to dinner. When she left the house her great fine eyes seemed larger and more deep-set than ever, and her jaw-line was set hard against the invasion of tears. Suddenly she hated this Chicago that wanted none of her; that brushed past her, bumping her elbow and offering no apology; that clanged, and shrieked, and whistled, and roared in her ears now grown accustomed to the prairie silence.

She spent the time between one and three buying portable presents for the entire Pool household—including bananas for Geertje and Jontina, for whom that farinaceous fruit had the fascination always held for the farm child. She caught a train at four thirty-five and actually trudged the five miles from the station to the farm, arriving half frozen, weary, with aching arms and nipped toes, to a great welcome of the squaws, grunts, barks, and gutturals that formed the expression of the Pool household. She was astonished to find how happy she was to return to the kitchen stove, to the smell of frying pork, to her own room with the walnut bed and the book-shelf. Even the grim drum had taken on the dear and comforting aspect of the accustomed.

High Prairie swains failed to find Selma alluring. She was too small, too pale and fragile for their robust taste. Naturally her coming had been an event in the isolated community. With no visible means of communication news of her, leaped from farm to farm as flame leaps the gaps in a forest fire. She would have been aghast to learn that High Prairie, inexplicably enough, knew all about her from the color of the ribbon that threaded her neat little white corset covers to the number of books on her shelf. She thought cabbage fields beautiful; she read books to that dumb-dacting Roel Pool; she was making over a dress for Maartje after the pattern of the stylish brown lady's-cloth she wore (foolishly) to school.

On her fifth Sunday in the district she accompanied the Pools to the morning service at the Dutch Reformed church. Maartje seldom had the time for such frivolity. But on this morning Klaas hitched up the big farm wagon with the double seat and took the family complete—Maartje, Selma, Roel, and the pig-tails. Roel had rebelled against going, had been coaxed for it, and had sat very still all through the service, gazing at the red and yellow glass church window.

Selma's appearance had made quite a stir, of which she was entirely unaware. As the congregation entered by twos and threes she thought they resembled startlingly a woodcut in an old illustrated book she once had seen. The men's Sunday trousers and coats had a square stiff angularity, as though chopped out of a block.

"Oh, Roel!"

"Sure, already I have gone five times—twice with Jakob and three times with Pop. Pretty soon, when I am seventeen or eighteen, I can go alone. At five in the afternoon you start and at nine you are in the Haymarket. There all night you sleep on the wagon. There are gas lights. The men play dice and cards. At four in the morning you are ready when they come, the commission men and the peddlers and the grocery men. Oh, it's fine, I tell you!"

"Here, look." KOLEHMAINEN GREAT AS PAAVO NURMI

Comparison of Two Runners Is Possible but Indefinite—Never Met.

Twelve years separated the coming of the flying Finns, and therein the life of a sport era is defined. Little men out of the frozen north of Europe, Hannes Kolehmainen and Paavo Nurmi have come to America, the latter to prove the fitness of Finns more than a decade after the western hemisphere had been convinced by the other.

Nurmi has succeeded, yet those who have followed track performances fail to grant him a higher position than that attained by his countryman in his visit of 1912 and 1913. Nurmi has run two races in a night to victories—at a mile and at 5,000 meters. Kolehmainen ran seven miles in two races in a single meet.

Paavo has broken four records in a single race. Kolehmainen smashed every standard American mark between three and one-half and ten miles in a single race at Columbia university on November 1, 1913.

Nurmi is a sprinter as well as distance man and can make exceptional time at a half mile. His predecessor ran longer distances and seldom found the necessity to sprint.

Hannes made exceedingly good time for the mile during his regime, being rated at about 4:22, against the record now held jointly by Nurmi and Jole Ray at 4:12, and in a three-mile run was timed at the first milestone in 4:33.

Nurmi has escaped the trials that followed Kolehmainen. An application from the Finn for membership in the Irish-American A. C. started an amateur war, and after a year in this country, having apparently done nothing to earn his way, the Amateur Athletic union summoned him.

Care of Arms and Legs. A good arm is one of the most essential requirements of a ballplayer, but it is very easy to ruin it, so the utmost care must be taken in order to avoid an injury.

One of the greatest mistakes the average ball player makes is the inclination to "let loose" the first day out. The arms, after being idle all winter, will not stand the sudden strain that is imposed on them. The result is a strained ligament that causes a painful "kink" and very often months of complete rest is needed to restore it to its former condition.

The same might also be said of the legs. A quick movement to the unconditioned limbs will result in a "knotted" muscle, that will need a great deal of massaging before it will function without pain.

All of these unnecessary ailments can be avoided if care will be taken in the first workouts. Light exercise with the arms and legs is best for the first week, or until they are in a better condition to stand the strain.

Kansas University Made $6,000 on Basket Ball

The University of Kansas, Missouri valley champion basket ball team, proved to be a money maker this year, according to reckonings of Dr. F. C. Allen, director of athletics.

It played before 60,572 persons and turned in a net profit of $6,000, Dr. Allen said. Receipts for games at home and abroad totaled $13,156.87.

The profit this year exceeded the previous best profit by about $2,000 and attendance figures were 6,000 better than the former record.

The largest attendance was shown for games played in Missouri, and especially one at St. Louis, where the Jayhawkers met Washington before a crowd of 7,000 persons.

England's Fish Rain

In August, 1918, a small territory in northern England enjoyed what was possibly the most novel of all showers. The precipitation in large part consisted of fish. The explanation which has been made, and which is seemingly a logical one, is that a waterspout offshore lifted the fish by its power, carried them a short distance inland, and with the dispersion of the waterspout and its power dropped the fish on the land.—Science and Invention Magazine.

Bright Wings of Romance

By RALPH D. PAINE

(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

TIME had been very cruel to Harriet Brent. To some women the years come like an Indian summer. Harriet Brent lived alone in an old house, which also had come to have an aspect unlovely and forlorn. Four-square to the road it stood, its fields bounded by stone walls heaped together by the tenacious toll of New England pioneers.

A house that still braved the weather staunchly, it had sheltered many children and known many joys and sorrows. This its broad roof conveyed to the passer-by. For one elderly woman to dwell alone in it was like sitting by the dead ashes of a hearthstone.

Harriet Brent was not unhappy. In her heart, which seemed unattended by warm emotions, there lived unquenched one divine spark of the true romance. Her faded eyes could soften in wistful reverie.

The Harriet Brent of those many, many years gone by had been a sensitive, slender girl of a certain flower-like, fleeting beauty. Delicate, she had called her. A shy girl, moving in misty day-dreams which she had been unable to reveal.

Eighteen she was when the lad had come from a larger town for a brief visit with cousins on a nearby farm. So brief—only a week. He had made love to her, with an ardor boyish and turbulent. Unashamed, she had returned his kisses.

Careless, splendid, debonaire, swearing he loved her forever and ever, he had passed on and forgotten her.

Harriet Brent did not forget him. Life is sometimes that way. The spirit of romance had once, only once, brushed her with its bright wings. Time healed the poignant sorrow. It came to be that she was glad to bear the scar. Even in these somber latter years she could sit and thank God that she had known love and kisses and aching rapture.

One day this harsh-featured, unsmiling spinster went out to feed the hens. She had clapped on a battered, hankamer's straw hat. A shawl was thrown over her faded shirt-waist. The old skirt had been chopped off to make it easier to do the chores. The rubber boots were handy because there was mud in the hen yard.

The empty pen in her hand, Harriet Brent stood staring at a very large and glittering automobile which had halted in front of the house. The chauffeur was studying a weather-beaten guide-board on a post. A handsome woman, ruddy, dignified, spoke to the gentleman beside her. He left the car and walked to the gate of Harriet Brent's dooryard. She came clumping from the barn path to meet him.

"Is this the road to Warechester, if you please?"

"Yes, take the first road to the right after you climb the hill beyond the watering-trough."

"Thank you, and may my man have a pail of water to fill his radiator? If you will be good enough to show him where the well is—"

"I'll fetch you a pail," grimly spoke Harriet Brent. She lingered a moment to survey this vigorous, grizzled moustache, the keen eyes, the air of substantial importance. Time had not been cruel to him. Life had been gracious nor had it obliterated that dominating quality which had made him victorious in boyhood.

Yes, Harriet Brent knew him as soon as they stood face to face, but the expression of her worn features was unchanged. She went into the shed and returned with a pail. The man who had come out of the past seemed in no haste to rejoin his wife in the car nor did he hear her when she called to him. He was gazing at the shabby old house and at the apple orchard beyond. His demeanor was curiously abstracted. His eyes were grave but his smile had a boyish sweetness as he said:

"This fine old place has run down. Too bad. I remember it years ago. A family named Brent lived here then. Do you know what became of them?"

"Dead and gone," replied Harriet. "You can see the stones in the little burying ground at the edge of the orchard."

"Yes, it was a long time ago. There was a daughter, a very lovely girl. I met her one summer, when I was a boy. Married, I suppose, and a grand mother by now?"

"She has gone, too, so I've heard say," steadily answered Harriet in a low voice. Her hand pulled the edges of the shawl together and remained there to rest on her heart. "Yes, the girl you used to know has gone from here."

His wife spoke impatiently. He turned with a start. Presently the car rolled away from the house by the road. He glanced back, more than once. From behind the ancient lilac bush, Harriet Brent watched the car vanish. Then she clasped her hands and murmured, in prayer:

"Oh, thank God he didn't know me. But he remembered—and he loved to remember. He was loving the girl that has gone. I didn't expect anything could ever make me so happy."

She went into the house and kindled a blaze in the huge fireplace of the sitting-room. By its glow she sat with folded hands, while the red coals covered the dead ashes. Her face was no longer harsh and unlovely. The bright wings of romance had brushed

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

COCKLES OF THE HEART

The old clock, standing so tall in the wide hall, struck.

"You'd Better Go Up"

before the warm ashes and a few remaining bright coals in the old fireplace.

They sat all around the fireplace, every one of them, and there were many of them.

"Shall we call her?" they said to each other.

"Yes, we might as well," they said. "No one has ever really known about us," said some of them.

"Well, we won't tell the way we began," the rest of them added.

"Yes, let us call her," they agreed. "You'd better go up and fetch her room. She has the window open. Good and beautiful for sleeping but a bit chilly for sitting by quite so early in the summer."

It was a very big Cockle who spoke to a very little Cockle.

The little Cockle stood up and started to go upstairs. The Cockles were dressed in little shell suits which made them look like little sea mollusks or mussels or shellfish as far as their costumes of shell were concerned. Their happy little faces were wrinkled up into funny little smiles and they all looked so dear and funny and jolly and lovable that if you had seen them you couldn't have helped but love them.

The little Cockles seemed to know the room. Opening the door gently, he spoke:

"Maggie," he whispered, "come on downstairs by the fire."

Now Maggie, as you know, is not fond of spending too much time in bed and she loves an open fire, so the very moment the little Cockle spoke Maggie was up and ready. She is too, you know, rather a light sleeper.

The Cockle took her by the hand and led her downstairs where she sat in the center of the circle of Cockles.

"We've heard that you wondered about the Cockles of the Heart," they said. "We belong to that family. We can't tell you how we began and when first we were spoken about or anything about our origin for that is a great secret and no one has ever been able to discover the answer."

"But we are going to introduce you to some of the family. We warm the innermost parts of people's hearts. We sit by fires late at night and we store up lots of warmth of the fire and we also carry away little packages of pleasant, loving family thoughts and speeches which have been left by members of a family before they have gone to bed."

"These we take about and give them to others to scatter. When people do kind things and say kind things that they really and truly mean and when those who have heard them, say:

"Ah, what they said and what they did, they have received some of our warmth. We only scatter our warm, loving, kindly, happy sincere gifts to those who want to really touch the innermost parts of their loved ones' hearts."

"We wear our suits of hard shell for those who don't mean what they say can't receive anything from us—they cannot have our real warmth."

"You love to speak of the cockles of your heart so we came to see you. Your mother warms the cockles of your heart by the beautiful, unselfish, thoughtful loving things she does. You warm the cockles of the hearts of your family by the sweet love you show them."

"That's why we came to call on you. But we must be off now. We're busy, we're thankful to say."

And as Maggie started up to her room the Cockles all walked straight up the chimney, forming the shape of a huge heart and waving to her as they, each, disappeared.

Bread Crust Has No Value as Food

Making children eat bread crusts may be a useful practice from an economical standpoint, but the time-honored belief that the crusts possess better dietary qualities than the center of the bread seems to have scant basis in fact. This was revealed in some interesting experiments just completed by Prof. Roscoe Hart Shaw of the American Institute of Baking, says Popular Science Monthly.

Professor Shaw took two young albino rats of the same brood and fed one on crusts and the other on crumbs from the centers of the same loaves. The rat that was fed on crumbs reached normal size at maturity and was strong and sturdy, while the other remained scarcely larger than a mouse and was weak and puny. Repetition of the experiment on other rats brought always the same result.

Resolving to get rid of a marauder that killed some geese, Henry Murchie, of Island Falls, Maine, set a trap and was somewhat surprised to find that he had caught a large owl. It would seem that the owl had been a pugnacious bird, for from the odor it was quite plain that he had had a recent encounter with a skunk and when he was taken from the trap it was found that his breast and neck were full of porcupine quills.
