Last Thursday night at the Presbyterian church the motion picture "What Masonry is Doing in Texas" was shown to the members of the local Masonic lodge, members Eastern Star and the public. Pictures of the Gavel Club at Legion, the Shrine Scottish Rite hospital for crippled children at Dallas, and the session of the Grand Lodge at Waco were shown, as well as many other interesting pictures of Masonry.

In his lecture, B. B. Cobb told of the Masonic institutional activities in Texas, naming the Scottish Rite Dormitory at the University of Texas, of the value of one million dollars, in which more than three hundred girls were housed at the last session of the University. He also referred to the Masonic Home and School at Fort Worth, the Eastern Star Home, as well as the home for aged Masons at Arlington, Texas. The institutions alone answer the question, "What is Masonry Doing in Texas?" stated Mr. Cobb.
W. M. Stockley, who at one time was a conductor here delivered a very interesting address telling of what Masonry teaches. The party was composed of Harry B. Cobb, W. V. Stockley, Forest Baker and Tom Kane. They left Friday morning for Ft. Stockton where they were to show the picture that night.

SEVERAL HURT IN ACCIDENTS THIS WEEK

This week has been, what seems to be, one of accidents for several of our citizens.
Sunday afternoon M. Kessler, Clyde Carter and Sambo Harrell started to the Rio Grande on a fishing trip in a small truck. The road was very rough and had many ruts, when all of a sudden the steering gears went wrong, causing the radius rods to almost bend double. A tire blew out, causing the truck to turn over. McDuffy was cut about the head and bruised about the body. Sambo was rendered unconscious and has a badly sprained wrist. Clyde was not hurt. The truck was badly damaged.
Sunday evening while rounding up goats on his ranch on Overstreet, A. B. Dyer's horse stumbled and fell throwing him to the ground. Mr. Dyer was cut on the face and was badly shaken up. As we go to press he is resting easy but it will be some time before he is up and around.
Two Mexicans were slightly hurt Sunday near Dryden when their car turned over.
Monday afternoon a truck driven by R. J. Turner Sr., balked in climbing a hill about a mile east of town. The brakes would not hold and as the truck started going back down the hill Henry Gates, who was with Mr. Turner, jumped out. In doing so he fell, dislocating his elbow. The truck turned over, but Mr. Turner was not hurt.

BEHLMAN CONFECTIONERY IS LEASED

A deal was closed this week whereby Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Jobe have leased the Behlman building from Mrs. W. F. Behlman. Mr. and Mrs. Jobe will continue to run the Confectionery business as well as the Hotel upstairs. Mrs. Jobe also plans to open a beauty parlor upstairs. Mrs. Behlman, the owner, will leave soon for El Paso where she will make her home.

Pipes-Lemons

On Monday night, September 21, at the Travis Park Methodist church in San Antonio the marriage of Mr. Ernest D. Pipes and Ora E. Lemons of this city was solemnized, Dr. S. H. C. Burgin officiating. Only the immediate families and a few intimate friends of the bride and groom witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Alton Wheeler, brother and sister of the bridegroom, were the attendants.
The bride wore a gown of orchid canton crepe trimmed in bands of real lace and carried a bouquet of bride's roses. The matron of honor wore a lace robe over pink satin and carried pink roses.
The bride is the attractive daughter of county and district clerk, Mrs. Luella Lemons, and the past few years she has been making her home in San Antonio. The groom is a well known business man of San Antonio being with the San Antonio Packing Co. as general manager.
Immediately following the ceremony an informal reception was held in the home of the groom's parents. Mr. and Pipes left immediately for a motor to the State, and will be at home after October 1, at 240 Cumberland Rd.
There many friends here extend congratulations and best wishes for a long happy married life.

Much in West to Appeal to Tourist

The men and women whose lives revolve around New York or Boston or Philadelphia, with an occasional visit to London or Paris or Rome, are lamentably ignorant of the romantic past and the almost boundless future possibilities of their own country. It is the assertion made by Lawrence Abbott in the Outlook.

The knowledge of human endeavor and achievement derived from books, no matter how loyal and discriminating a reader one may be, is not comparable to the initiative and effective education which is obtainable from personal contacts.

No matter how vivid may be the pictures of the Pilgrim Fathers of New England inscribed on the printed pages of history, they are still merely pictures of the dead past. In the great Northwest one may touch shoulders and have converse with living Pilgrim Fathers.

Constitution Starts Citizens Off in the Race on an Equal Footing

By CHARLES EVANS HUGHES, in New York Times.

IT IS said that men are not created equal. It is self-evident that they are unequal. They have different inheritances, different environments, different capacities, different aptitudes, different tastes. These differences mean inequalities, and these inequalities are disclosed in zest for life, in diligence, in opportunities and the keenness to perceive them and the intelligence which makes use of them.

But the Declaration of Independence was an affirmation of political aims. The Constitution of the United States starts all citizens off in the race for existence and betterment on an absolutely equal footing; but it is family inheritance, early environment, education—bestowed or acquired—natural tendencies, habits and aptitudes which in large part occasion the obvious and the seeming inequalities, which are social rather than political inequalities.

We are entitled to stand as equals before the law. There must be no inequality due to political privilege or exploitation. The free citizen has a right to the impartial administration of justice—which knows neither rich nor poor; to the equal protection of the laws—which means the protection of equal laws; to the exercise of political privileges, without distinction of rank or color or class. We cannot be free unless in this sense we are equal, and the Declaration of Independence declares this right as God-given, unalienable and free from the curse of political favoritism.

Where in the world have the principles of the Declaration of Independence had better observance than here? Where is the individual so secure in the opportunity to gain a livelihood, to obtain an education, to enjoy wholesome recreation, to get the full advantage of every invention promoting conveniences and comfort, to profit by thrift and to improve his condition? Where are general standards of living higher; and where is life itself worth while more than in this beloved country of ours?

It would be easy to index defects. Abuses undoubtedly exist. No government can escape the ills due to evil purposes of some men. Any just measure of liberty can be abused. But do not burn your house to get rid of the rats. You do not need to overturn your institutions in order to secure better administration of government. There is no promise of betterment in promoting class hatred. There is no advantage in uprooting the tree whose fruit we have enjoyed. There is no evil which cannot be cured by peaceful measures and through the use of the instrumentalities which our institutions provide.

In every crisis we wake up. But we need the sustained attention which is the price of successful self-government. Indifference is the characteristic of some of our people who have had the best advantages. They delude themselves with a false security and wash their hands of politics. It is idle to demand Americanization of the unassimilated if those who are assimilated ignore their most obvious political duties. Institutions will not save us; we must save ourselves.

Junior High School in Experimental Stage, Both as to Aid and Method

By F. G. STECKER, American Federation of Teachers.

The junior high school is still in the experimental stage, both as to aid and method, and therefore it is too soon to appraise it justly from the standpoint of its eventual usefulness.

However, it has been established that such schools offer more possibilities of differentiated curricula to suit special needs and abilities of children than does the traditional 8-4 plan; it offers to educators an opportunity for thorough-going reform and it may aid in the effort to retain children at school who would otherwise leave at the end of the eighth school year.

The dangers involved in the junior high school idea, in its present stage, are apparent in existing conditions rather than in their best possibilities for educational good. The first danger is that such schools will be associated with the notion of economy to the detriment, if not to the exclusion of the principle of greater service to the pupils.

At present teachers of the junior high schools often serve on a lower salary schedule and meet lower qualifications than do teachers in the senior high schools. The first necessity then, to a fair test of the value of such schools, is that qualifications of teachers shall be as high as those in the senior high schools.

Why Is It Proposed to Take "Obey" Out of the Marriage Service?

By RT. REV. I. P. JOHNSON, Episcopal Bishop of Colorado.

Why is it proposed to take the word "obey" out of the marriage service? In my judgment because modern society has lost the sense of proportion which lies at the foundation of the home, and, in order to justify itself, wishes to accommodate the word of God to palliate the situation.

The idea that the word "obey" connotes servility is the heresy of modern parents and the schism of modern families. The word "obey" is limited always by the circumstances of its use. When a woman is asked to obey her husband, she does not lessen the glory of her womanhood. A family is a corporation, and either the man is the head of the family, or else it is presided over by a committee of two, which has no way of determining a majority vote except by an endurance test. It is now proposed to endorse a headless family in the interests of accommodating truth to prejudice.

God made man to be the head of the family because it was his duty to provide and protect. The church exists to set forth ideals, not to justify the perversion of ideals.

True International Mind Will Not Suppress or Override Patriotism

By DR. NICHOLAS M. BUTLER, Columbia University.

There has been marked advance in Europe during the past two years. The economic problems, as well as those that are more strictly political, have become more clearly defined and public opinion is better informed concerning their real significance. It is generally agreed that the three steps next to be taken are security, judicial settlements of international differences, and then sharp limitation of armaments. The elimination of the brutality and the passions of war stands out clearly as the most pressing problem of this age. War will never be eliminated by any form of that internationalism which aims to ignore national tradition, national sentiment, national pride or national patriotism, but only by teaching and preaching that nations themselves are moral entities and that they have an obligation toward their fellow-nations exactly similar to that which an individual has toward his fellow-men. The true international mind will not suppress or override patriotism, but will exalt it into a zeal for friendly co-operation and international service that will strengthen the nation, precisely as similar conduct strengthens and enriches the life of the individual.

MRS. ALTON

SYNOPSIS—Lured by his four-year-old playmate, Jean Lane, Frank Hall, aged six, ventures on the forbidden wall of a dam, in a small Ontario town. He falls into the water and is saved from possible death by clinging to Jean's outstretched arms. Next day Jean informs him that because of their adventure of the day before he is in duty bound to marry her. He agrees when they are grownups. With Jean's brother John, also aged six, Frank begins school. Two years later they are joined by Jean and Frank's sister Marjorie. A little later Jean confides to Frank, in verse, her hope of some day becoming "Mrs. Hall." He accepts the "proposal." Frank is fourteen when his mother dies. The boys are eighteen when John's father is killed in an accident. Two years later Frank's father and John's mother are married. Dissatisfied with conditions, and ambitious, the two boys make plans to go to Manitoba and "homestead," the girls agreeing to go with them. They set out. At Regina they meet "Jake," who agrees to find them satisfactory homesteads. He does so, and the two friends file claims on Sections Fourteen and Twenty-two. Jake sadly advises the adventurers in the purchase of supplies, and in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen, and with a cow, the four arrive at their future homes. Construction of "shacks" and the making of a garden are their first occupations. A young Englishman of the name of "Spook" is a neighbor. They call on Spook, who is living in a tent. He returns the call.

When we had had our swim and dried ourselves on the sand we went back up to the house. The shadows were now falling, long and narrow, to the eastward, and the prairie lay hushed and silent in that deep and peaceful calm which marks the summer evening an hour or two before sundown.

After supper Spook sat and chatted until it was time to light the lamp. Jean set it on the table, and as its yellow glow fell across his face I realized for the first time that Spook was not a boy, as were Jack and I. There were lines in the cheeks and about the eyes which, magnified by the shadows under the lamplight, bore evidence that Spook had known more of this world's cares than was hinted by his usual light-hearted conversation.

Presently he was talking of England; easing, perhaps, the homesickness in his heart by calling up scenes of leafy lanes and misty sun-shot landscapes linking deeply into his life. He had tales of London as well; tales of art treasures and music and theaters all alight with life and beauty; tales of gravestones marking the great of a nation with a history reaching back into the early obscurity of western civilization. Something about the pride he showed in the great deeds of the past seemed to strike us strangely—we of a country whose history was still so much in the future and whose greatest deeds were still to be done.

"Do you sing, Mr. Spook?" Marjorie asked.

as we had a little shyness about being overtaken in our good works, and the next morning, while I was gulping great draughts of ozone in front of the shack before breakfast, Marjorie called over my shoulder:

"What's that, away to the east, Frank?"

Sure enough, there was a little white pyramid outlined against the horizon; another tent pitched against front trenches of civilization.

"Neighbors, Marjorie; neighbors!" I said. "We're getting to be quite a community. Do you ever think of the day when all this wilderness of prairie will be plowed, every foot of it; all bearing something for the world's needs, with prosperous farmhouses at every corner, schools, churches—"

"I smell the porridge!" Marjorie exclaimed, rushing into the shack. She had a way of cutting off my rhapsodies like that.

Jack had seen the tent, too, and he and Jean came over at noon to discuss it. We decided to knock off work early that evening and all drive over to make the acquaintance of the newcomers.

We found that the tent was pitched on Eighteen, in the next township to the east. As we came up we were greeted by a fine collie dog, who seemed to be suffering from the conflicting emotions of his natural good humor and a sense that we had no business on Eighteen. His rush upon us with great barking and show of ferocity ended in much amiable tail-wagging. Evidently we measured up to his requirements, which we took to be no mean compliment.

A team of ponies were tethered on the prairie not far away, and a democrat stroller beside the tent, with some of its burden still to be unloaded. A woman of slender build and rather striking beauty stood at the door. There was surprise, and, as I thought, a suggestion of fear in her eyes. More remarkable was the sudden and unmistakable relief which sprang into her expression when she had seen us clearly.

I am not a detective, even of the amateur kind, but I found myself instantly gripped by a conclusion. "The woman is afraid," I said to myself, "and yet she is no coward, she has no fear of strangers, but she is afraid of someone—afraid of someone she knows. She was relieved when she saw we were strangers." The thought was one which was to recur to me from many angles during the next few months.

She seemed to hesitate about greeting us, and Jean, always the quick-witted one of our quartette, was the first to break a rather stupid silence. She sprang lightly from the wagon and went forward with arms outstretched.

"We are your neighbors, from Fourteen and Twenty-two," she explained.

"We saw your tent, and thought we would welcome you to prairie land."

"That is good of you," said a well-modulated English voice, but some way the voice seemed to break just there.

A Woman of Slender Build and Rather Striking Beauty Stood at the Door.

And the lips of the newcomer went all a-tremble. The next we knew she and Jean had their arms about each other.

"Oh, how horribly stupid of me!" the stranger exclaimed, in a moment or two, disengaging herself and dabbing her eyes with a little lump of handkerchief. "One gets a bit—bit lonely, in spite of everything. You will think I am rather a bad pioneer. My name is Mrs. Alton, and I'm so glad you came, Miss—Miss—"

Jean introduced herself and the others of our party, and then we clambered down out of the wagon.

"Gerald and I have been very much alone," Mrs. Alton explained. "Gerald doesn't seem to mind it a bit—rather glories in it, I think. Already he has made some great explorations, but always under Sandy's watchful eye. Sandy is a great comfort. Aren't you, Sandy?"

She turned to the dog, who sedately held up one paw in acknowledgment of her remark.

"Gerald, I should have told you, has just turned three. I am a widow," Mrs. Alton rattled on, as though not wishing to stress the point—"and Gerald and I have our way to make in the world. He is tired now, and asleep after a great day's roaming, but I shall wake him before you go."

"Oh, please don't!" Jean entreated. "Let us see him as he sleeps," and without waiting for an invitation she gently made her way into the little tent.

"Don't you think me clever?" Mrs. Alton asked, when we had at last discovered it.

It consisted of a trunk, with the lid turned back, and about half the contents removed. In this she had laid a little mattress, and on the mattress slept a beautiful toy, his face still ruddy from his wrestle with the prairie winds; his lips cherry red and slightly parted; his little arms thrown jauntily above his head. Jean leaned and touched the breathing lips with hers, and so did Marjorie, and a little later I saw tears on the cheeks of both.

It was then I remembered that these girls had not seen a child since we left Regina in the spring, and the mothering instinct in them, pent up through all those lonely months, now burst forth in sweet silent tears. I began to realize that Gerald Alton was to be one of the important members of the community.

"Isn't he lovely—lovely?" Jean was murmuring as though unable to tear herself from his side. "Mrs. Alton, I am sure you have placed us all under a debt of gratitude. This community simply had to have a baby."

After that, conversation came easier, and we found ourselves talking about farm life, and the problems of the homesteader. Mrs. Alton drank in every word with avidity; she was eager for information on the most casual affairs.

"I am so frightfully stupid!" she exclaimed. "You see, I know nothing about farming, and I suppose it was a very wild notion that I should take a homestead. I did it on Gerald's account. I shall manage some way, and in three years—by the time he must start to school—the farm will be mine. Then I shall sell it or mortgage it to give him an education."

"By that time we may have a school next door," I suggested. "People will flow in here in crowds, once they make a start. Have you plans for carrying on the work of the farm?"

"I have two men following with boards to build a house; just a very tiny house, in keeping with my purse. Then I hope to hire a neighbor to do some plowing, and I will plant some corn next spring. I shall raise chickens, and have a great garden—I know all about gardening," she added naively, with a sudden return of confidence. "You should have seen my English roses!"

We had not the heart to tell her that there lay a great gulf between English roses and a Canadian cabbage patch, and she rattled on, evidently glad of someone to watch with sympathy the mirage castles which she was building on her horizon.

"For myself, I am quite penniless," she confessed, thrusting her upturned palms toward us with a little impulsive gesture. "Gerald is my resource, as well as my responsibility. He has a hundred pounds a year. We shall invest it in this farm. I am sure we are going to prosper wonderfully."

"All the world seems to circle around Gerald," she added, as though it were an afterthought.

She made Jean and Marie sit down on a box on which she had spread a steamer rug. Jack and I stood at the door of the tent, where the setting sun blazoned our wind-tanned faces a ruddy red.

"How healthy you men are!" she exclaimed, clasping her fingers in a nervous grip. "If only Gerald will grow up like that!"

"We will come over when the men bring the lumber, and help them build your house," Jack volunteered.

"The lumber—what lumber? Oh, the boards! Oh, how good of you!"

The regard in which she held us appeared to rise another degree.

"And are you carpenters, as well as farmers?" she asked. "How wonderfully clever you men are, here. I had to go to a doctor in Regina—Gerald had a rash, or something—it was in the evening and I found him at his house, building a chicken-coop. Jolly wonderful, isn't it?"

As the shadow of the democrat filled the tent door we spoke of leaving.

"Not until you have had tea," she insisted. "We shall have tea with biscuits and jam. I bought an oil stove in Regina—a most wonderful machine. We shall have it ready in a moment."

While she started her oil stove she asked, casually enough, "Am I the only newcomer in all the big prairie which you have been having to yourselves?"

"No, you are the second," I answered. "We already have one neighbor."

her a countryman of yours, down on section Two. Spook, he calls himself, although that is not his real name."

"What a strange name," she said, after a while. "Is he there now—I mean, have you seen him lately? A countryman of mine; you know, I must be interested in him," she added, brightly, turning her face to us again.

At length, with assurances that we would repeat our visit soon, and a promise from Mrs. Alton that she would return it when the men had her house under way, we clambered into our wagon and started the oxen on their slow, lumbering gait homeward. Sandy saw us properly off the place, and even stood at attention until we faded out of sight in the twilight. There is likely to be a nip to the night air on the prairies even in midsummer, and Jean, I noticed, snuggled comfortably beside me on the board across the wagon box which served as a seat.

Or perhaps it was that for the first time in months the latent motherhood in her nature had been stirred into consciousness.

It was Sunday before we heard or saw anything more of Spook. In a khaki-colored shirt and corduroy breeches and leggings and an Indian helmet which he had dug up from somewhere he was a picturesque and striking figure as he strode into the grateful shade of the shanty. Under his arm he carried a banjo case.

Spook took off his helmet and sat down in the shade. A ring of dust had formed on his fair temples and forehead and his brown hair was curly with perspiration. He was a man good to look at; straight and lean, but not too spare; with white teeth that flashed behind lips always ready to spring to a smile beneath a sandy mustache that had more in it of promise than of realization. His hands were small and finely formed, with long, delicate fingers, and he gave his nails a degree of attention not often found among those so close to the realities of life as were we pioneers.

Opening the banjo case he produced not only a banjo but a box of candy, which he had managed to smuggle into it.

"The ladies, I hope, will accept," said he, tendering the candy to Jean.

"If accompanied by a serenade in our honor?" was the quick rejoinder.

"But not until after I have had a bath, and have somewhat recovered my mind," Spook pleaded, and was excused.

It was evening before he took up his banjo, but almost with the first sweep of its clanging strings he started vibrations which seemed to catch our little band of exiles somewhere about the heart and squeeze us suddenly hollow with loneliness. Then he sang, dipping into little fragments of repertoire, until at last he hit upon something that Jean had learned before we left the East, and there her clear soprano joined his tenor as naturally as one brook mingles with another and both flow on, singing a new song which is all of the old one, and something more. I had never learned to sing, and while I felt the heart-strings of my harmony there were other strings tugging at my heart as well.

"But we forgot the greatest news," Jean exclaimed, in a pause after one of their selections. "We have neighbors—two new neighbors—three, counting Sandy. They are living on Eighteen, to the east; surely you saw the tent?"

"So I did," said Spook, "but I thought it might be a wandering Indian family. Two, did you say? A married couple?"

"No, a widow, Mrs. Alton, and her baby Gerald, the dearest little chap. He puts us down for Indians, and with some reason."

"Gerald?" said Spook. "How old is he?"

"Just turned three, so Mrs. Alton told us. You should see her; not very big, but pluck to the marrow. She has taken a homestead so that she can raise the money to educate her boy. She is coming over as soon as she is settled, and we must have you meet her. She's English, and you'll love her."

Jean's frankness rather set me at ease again. Evidently I was magnifying the grip that Spook was gaining upon her. She was content that he should love his new English neighbor.

"I shall be wonderfully interested in her," Spook said, gaily, but it seemed to me that his mind had suddenly gone all a-ramble. There was a moment's silence, then he took up the thread again. "I once knew a little boy of that name—Gerald—was much attached to him. Strange how an incident—a name, for example—will recall a whole chain of memories."

What memories of Spook's were aroused he did not say, but he sang no more, and presently decided it was time to go home.

CHAPTER VIII

It was the first day of August of that first year on the prairies that Jack and I hitched the oxen to the wagon, threw on board a kit consisting mainly of a change of clothes and a blanket for each of us, said a brave but undemonstrative good-by to the girls, and turned our faces to the older settlements. We were setting forth to earn what money we could during the short season of high wages. Our own old field could wait; we would cut it for feed, anyway, and a little frost wouldn't matter.

On the second day out, as we halted on the side of a little knoll to let the oxen graze and to eat our lunch, we were suddenly aware of the rumble of an approaching vehicle and the tones of a lusty voice, lifted in something evidently intended for song. Even before we had identified the "flyin' ants" we caught the burden of the refrain—

"Lived a min-er, a forty-nine-er, An' his daughter, Sweet Marie."

"It's Jake, of all the world!" shouted Jack, and together we rushed down upon him. His pudgy form, sheltered from the hot sun by a broad felt hat, lolled on one end of the seat of his democrat.

"Hello!" was his greeting. "Dang it, stand still a minute, you plebeian lump of fox-bait!"—this to one of the bronchos, switching at a horse-fly—"don't you know your friends when you meet 'em? Well, how goes it on the gopher ranch?"

We shook hands and made him stop and eat with us.

Jake was fresh charged with Regina gossip, and that of the country for two hundred miles around. The settlers were streaming in, he said.

Connie Mack's T. N. T. Squad

"Oh, boy, how they can hit." That is what George Sisler of the St. Louis "Browns" says about Connie Mack's hard hitters, shown in the photograph, and it's these slugging players who have borne the brunt of the work in the Athletics' climb from the cellar position to a position where they seem likely to cop the pennant. The photograph, left to right, shows Cochrane, catcher; Lamar and Simmons, outfielders, and Hale, third baseman, all hitting well over 300.

Pitcher Guy Bush

Guy Bush, young hurler on the Chicago Cubs pitching staff, is doing excellent work this season and gives promise of becoming one of the leading pitchers of the National league.

BASEBALL NOTES

Jess Spring, released by Hamilton, has been signed by Kitchener.

Rogers Hornsby has played every position on the St. Louis team except pitcher or catcher.

Twenty clubs will make up the circuit of the National Professional Football league for the coming season.

Leo Durocher, Hartford shortstop (Eastern league), was recently sold to the New York Americans for $12,000.

The Yankees purchased Pitcher Lorbeer, star member of the staff of the Salina club of the Southwestern league.

E. Hubbell, a left-handed pitcher, was purchased by Detroit from the Oklahoma City club in the Western league.

Oscar Estrada, outfielder of the Tampa club in the Florida State league, has been sold to the Boston Nationals.

Roy Hutson, right fielder and leading batsman of the Topeka Southwestern league club, has been sold to the Brooklyn Nationals.

The Pittsburgh Pirates announce the purchase of J. B. Cook, a right-handed pitcher from the Monroe (La.) club of the Cotton States league.

The Boston Nationals league management announce the purchase of James Pearne, southpaw pitcher from the Bridgeport club of the Eastern league.

Catcher McCrean, who recently was sold to Cleveland by Hamilton, fell in going to first in a game against Flint and badly wrenched his right knee.

Babe Ruth has offered a cup to the amateur baseball player of New York city making the greatest number of home runs in the regular scheduled games.

Frank Zeller, outfielder of the Atlanta Southern Association club, has been purchased by the New York Yankees. Zoeller will report to the Yankees next spring.

Al Simmons, the Mackian center-fielder, and Earl Combs, the Yankee center gardener, have been called the season's most promising new fielders. They are keeping close together in a race for batting honors.

Ralph Erickson of Pocatello, Idaho, has been signed for a trial with the Chicago White Sox. He was the star pitcher for the University of Idaho last season and has been pitching sensational ball in semi-pro circles.

Girl Pitching Star

You've heard a lot about no-hit, no-run pitchers, both in the big leagues and on the sandlots, but did you ever hear of a girl with such a record? No! Well, here's one. She is Miss Rose O'Neill, fourteen, of Lowell, Mass., star hurler of the Green Halger playgrounds girls' baseball team. The Northampton team of Boston was the easy victim, 5 to 0.

Various Sporting Terms as Used by Englishmen

From the London Tit-Bits comes this explanation of various sporting terms as used in England.

How many outside sporting circles know what is meant by a rabbit's "earth," an otter's "hole," and a hare's "form"? Each of these terms, meaning the lair of the animal concerned, is used in the countryside.

To the sportsman two rabbits are a "brace" and two hounds are a "couple." Incidentally, huntsmen never speak of foxhounds as dogs, just as they never refer to a fox's tail, but to its "brush." The rabbit's or the hare's tail is termed its "scut," the deer's its "single," and the otter's its "pole." The hound's tail is nearly always called its "stern."

When foxhounds find a fox they are said to "draw a covert" or "unkennel" their quarry. In the same way a deer is "unbarbored," an otter "put down," and a hare "started." Speaking generally, when any other animal or bird is disturbed in the open it is said to have been "put up."

Yanks Pay $50,000 for Shortstop Mark Koenig

According to insiders, Col. Jacob Ruppert, sole proprietor of the Yankees, agreed to pay $50,000 to the St. Paul American association club for Mark Koenig, shortstop. Koenig hails from San Francisco, where he was born in 1904. He played his first professional engagement with Moose Jaw in 1921 and then was purchased by the St. Paul club. In 1922 he was sent first to Toronto, then Jamestown, N. D., and later to St. Joseph. Koenig played with Des Moines in 1923 and again was recalled by the Saints. He was a substitute until the post-season series between St. Paul and Baltimore last fall, when he jumped into action and helped to save the day for the American association pennant winners. The youngster is six feet tall and weighs about 175 pounds. He is a right-handed hitter and is traveling in the 300 class.

WANTED—Wife, about 18 hands high, chestnut preferred, sound in wind and limb and built for speed. Good looks her necessary. I'm pretty enough for two. Jake, 148 — St. Regina, Canada.

"Do you mean to say any fish rose to such a bait as that?" Jack demanded skeptically.

Mystery! Who is Mrs. Alton and why is she afraid of someone? Is Spook to cut Frank out with Jean?

The Substitute

Little Betty was anxious to own a cat, but her father had a great aversion to them and turned a deaf ear to all her pleadings. He did say, however, that she could have a dog if she could find a nice, well-behaved one that wouldn't bite the baby.

One day while walking with her mother, Betty saw a kitten frisking along beside her.

She turned a wistful face to her mother and said: "Oh, mummy! See! It doesn't seem to belong to anyone! Can't I take it home?"

"But, Betty, daddy says you can have a dog, but not a cat."

"Well, mummy, can't we take it home and use it for a dog?"

Remarkable Service by Rumanian Star

Mishu, the Rumanian tennis champion, flashed a remarkable service at the recent Wimbledon tournament in England. He can slice and cut the ball so that it bounces backward, forward, to the right or left, although not in all directions at once. In one tournament Mishu stood on the base line with his back to his opponent and served the ball over his shoulder into the proper court, much to the astonishment of his adversary.
