SANDERSON'S ENTRY IN STATE TOURNEY

Sanderson High School's Eagles, pictured below, have not lost a game this season and have entered the state tourney at Austin. They have been victorious over El Paso High, who have sent a team to Austin the past five years. This will be the Eagles first competition in the state meet. In the back row, from left to right, are Coach J. A. White, Mitchell, Morgan, Jansa, Harrell, Captain Grigsby. Bottom row, left to right, Miller, Cavender, Landers.

SANDERSON HI WINS BI-DISTRICT TITLE

Supported by a host of Sanderson rooters the Sanderson Hi basketball team defeated Eden High at Ozona last Friday, February 26 by a score of 33 to 14. At no time was the outcome of the game in doubt, for the Eagles started off strong and held a substantial lead throughout.

Harrell scored first for Sanderson, ringing three field goals in the first few minutes of play. The score at the end of the first quarter was 10-0 in Sanderson's favor. Eden, led by Bob Nails with his brilliant goal shooting, came back somewhat stronger in the second quarter and the score at the end of the half was, Eden 8, Sanderson 14. The speed and passwork of the Eagles completely overwhelmed their opponents in the second half.

For Sanderson there were no outstanding stars. The team, as a whole, played the best game of the season. The Mitchell-Jansa combination presented a defense that was almost impenetrable. Harrell and Grigsby show especial ability in getting their ball down the court in shooting distance. Morgan was high point man ringing many difficult shots. Bob Nails was the outstanding player for Eden. The lineup was as follows:

Sanderson (33) (14) Eden
Grigsby (11) (2) Day
Right Forward
Morgan (16) (10) B. Nails
Left Forward
Harrell (6) (2) A. Nails
Center

Mitchell (0) (0) Armer
Left Guard
Jansa (0) (0) Powell
Right Guard
Substitutes: Eden, McGuffin
and Drinkard. Referee, Shuhart,
Del Rio (Texas U.)

EAGLES GONE TO AUSTIN

By defeating Eden High at Ozona last Friday the Sanderson Eagles hold the claim of winners of districts 17 and 18. Coach White, accompanied by Jansa, Grigsby, Morgan, Harrell, Mitchell, Landers, Miller and Cavender left Wednesday morning for Austin where they entered the State meet held there Friday and today, (Saturday.) The boys left with the full determination to fight from start to finish and return home with State honors.

Mrs. Vance McLymont left for Ozona Thursday to visit relatives.

NOTORIOUS OUTLAW WOLE KILLED

The notorious half breed Lobo wolf hound, which has been raiding and terrorizing live stock on the Pecos was recently killed by Mr. Wilson, Federal eradicator of predatory animals. The halfbreed for years has been going from ranch to ranch, killing hundreds of calves, sheep and lambs. Just as soon as one would get on his trail, he would move came and go to another territory. Several times efforts were made to trap him, but always he was cunning enough to avoid the trap. The animal was killed on the Prosser-Brown ranch near the Gettys Creek. The animal measured 5 feet 7 inches.

ANOTHER SANDERSON BOY MAKES GOOD

Another Sanderson boy is making good in the business world. Word was received from Dallas this week to the effect that Arthur W. Murray was made chief clerk to the general agent of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. taking effect February 1, 1926. Arthur was a member of the '14 graduating class of the Sanderson High School and his many old friends congratulate him and wish him further success.

Miss Ailene White of San Antonio came in the first of the week and has accepted a position as principal of the Mexican school. Mrs. J. A. White having resigned.

The effort being made by business interests to bring about a reduction in the acreage of cotton is certainly most laudable, but it can not be done under the impetus of the "more cotton on fewer acres" movement.

Good Results Will Follow. While the statement just made appears pessimistic, good will come from the cotton reduction movement in that the effort is accompanied by a movement to get the farmers to grow such things as will enable them to live at home from home grown products.

Jerrold looked at Prudence for assistance. Prudence was patiently counting the superfluous hearts.

"After all, what was there to say? Why couldn't she? Obviously, she had. And that was the end of it."

The next morning Jerrold called Duane into the office.

"Do you want a position?" he asked, still hopeful for the best.

"Oh, absolutely. I came on purpose," Jerrold sighed. But he told him to hang about, and put in the time as best he could, to try not to get in people's way, and if he accidentally came across anything he could do, to feel perfectly free to do it. He gave him cards to the best clubs, offered him the use of a car at any time he wished it and told him to get as much fun out of life as he could.

"How much salary do you want?"

"How much can I get?"

"Well, I fancy I could get men quite capable of doing what you're going to do for fifteen dollars a week, and glad of the chance," Jerrold said, smiling faintly. "But it lends a sort of tone to the establishment to have your clothes and your accent in our employ, so say twenty-five. And you might lounge gracefully about in the showroom as much as you can; you are sure to attract attention to the house if not to the motor."

Duane thanked him, and said he would try to be worthy of so much trust. He said he had other clothes, far more comment-creating than those he was wearing, and that his entire wardrobe was henceforth at the disposal of the Harmer Motor.

And then he laid serious and studied siege to the stubborn heart of Jerry. Every morning on the stroke of ten, a messenger appeared at the door with a box of flowers, violet, orchid and rose. Jerry gave them to the maids, sent them to the neighbors, but finally, in a burst of resentment at the persistence she was beginning to feel was more than flesh and blood could bear, she whirled the unopened box into the street the moment the messenger had disappeared.

The next morning when the bell rang, she ran furiously down to receive the hated tribute, but stopped on the stairs in some amazement, even in anger. Her mother was opening the box.

"Mother!"

"They are for me," Prudence tipped the box to show her name on the tag, to banish that springing distrust in Jerry's mischievous eyes.

"Since when is father so devoted?"

The clock struck ten—a curious coincidence. And then, as Prudence took the flowers from the box, a soft cluster of yellow roses and lilies of the valley, Jerry saw the card—Duane Allerton.

Her eyes flashed, darkened with rage. She thrust out angry hands, and caught the delicate flowers roughly, to tear them from her mother's arm. Prudence gently but with great firmness retained her hold.

"Jerry! They're mine."

The soft voice was softer than ever before. Jerry's hands hung mutinously for a moment and then dropped weakly to her sides.

"Mother, please," she whispered. "I—I can't stand them in the house." And then, with a pitiful attempt to laugh away her display of emotion, she said with a sorry smile, "I—I must be developing nerves."

Prudence looked into her eyes, re-acted quickly. "I'll send them down to Carol. Katie can take them to the mall at once. Julia adores flowers."

The next morning, at ten o'clock, Jerry stood at the window listening for the expected, unwelcome ring at her door. It did not come. Ten-thirty, eleven—and no flowers. There was sad suspicion in her eyes as she glanced now and then, furtively, at her mother. Would her very own work in league against her?

Jerry had no slightest doubt of the honor and the uprightness of her stubborn stand. It was really a final desperate struggle in defense of her most sacred, girlish principle of purity, that inherent niceness of thought, reserve of person, that tarnishes at best, so quickly. Jerry had flirted, had tripped joyously from bean to bean, had laughed at tentative, tripping caresses, a sheer light-heartedness of spirit—that was when the real Jerry had slipped by untouched. But with that tender ideal enshrined in the romantic glamour of her guarded youth, she would brook no trifling.

She worked with passionate intensity, bending over the sketches for her houses and her columns of figures far into the night. She did not sleep well, she had no appetite, and unusual dark circles outlined the lovely misty eyes.

On her first attempt at renovation, the old house on Seventeenth street opposite the park, after weeks of work and worry and passionate devotion, she cleared but a paltry three hundred dollars, for all the fabulous towering of her hopes. Jerry laughed at that, sadly.

"I don't care! See how much fun I've had. And look what a lot of things I've learned! I'll make it up on the next one, you'll see!"

But not all her intense concentration in her work could account for the pathetic pallor of her face. In the end, Jerrold felt that nothing would come of it. He said so to Prudence, many times. Prudence said nothing.

She asked if Duane was taking an interest in the business, if he worked hard, earned his salary.

"You bet he earns it, staying in the same town with that daughter of yours," Jerrold said resentfully; and added more moderately: "Well, no, I can't say that he works much—if any. But he sticks around. And people come in to look him over—and incidentally get a view of the car while they're in. And the boys seem to like him."

Jerrold had indeed no ground for feeling that Duane, even as a prospective, somewhat poorly prospective, son-in-law, had any designs upon the ultimate management of the Harmer Motor. In spite of his conscientious attendance in the showroom, his effacement from the active business of the concern was complete. But he developed an inordinate interest in the rich, prosy little Middle Western city and asked endless questions about it, questions of intimate import, when he and Jerrold were having luncheon together as they often did.

"I'm trying to acclimate myself to the corn belt," he said lightly, in explanation of this interest in things about town. But Jerrold, who was making him the subject of an avid attention and study, knew it was something deeper than that.

"Why, do you know," Duane asked him one day, "you can pick up land along the river, and near the railroads, for a song, absolutely for a song? Building sites that ought to be worth—well, I suppose not quite their weight in gold—but worth a fortune anyhow in ten to twenty years."

Jerrold said he supposed so, his shrewd, always kind eyes, fixed on Duane's face.

"They haven't half the factories, the manufacturing plants, they ought to have here. The town could support a hundred times the amount of business it's got. It's towns like this where a big business really pays, isn't it? Where property is cheap, expenses low, facilities good? Isn't that the way they figure?"

"It's the way my father figured when he started the factory, I should imagine."

"And besides, for a rich farming state like this, they haven't got half the elevator business they ought to have. Have they? If the middlemen have to get fifty per cent of the farm income, the least they can do is to turn the business over to home middlemen and keep the profits in the state. Shouldn't you say so?"

"It seems no more than reasonable."

"There's a pile of money here for any one that goes after it, isn't there?"

"What's the matter with you? Are you trying to sell me the Middle West?"

"No, I just want to find out if I am sold on it myself," Duane explained, laughing. "I haven't got a whole lot of capital left, you know, after my foolish flirts in the last three years. I want to be sure what I'm doing before I go in again. But it seems to me that this town—Well, it's as though it were asleep. Somebody's going to step in here and pick up a few fine spots for factories, a few choice corners for grain elevators, and then after a while sit back and take his exercise clipping coupons. And it seems to me I was just born for a coupon-clipper."

"I wish you luck, my boy. I can't think of a pleasanter indoor sport."

And so while Duane was satisfied to leave the Harmer Motor company to Jerrold's manipulation, Jerrold was satisfied that it should be so, for he knew the young man was keeping a wary eye on things in general, and that when the opportunity came for him to cut loose for himself, this time at least he would be sure of his ground. He told Prudence about it.

"That's nice," she said, warm in her approval. "It's just like families—they do so much better in separate houses."

"You can hardly call him part of the family," protested Jerrold. "The way that girl acts—it's insulting!"

Duane wrote to Jerry. She did not trouble to return the letter by post, she merely tore the envelope across a couple of times, unopened, and handed it to her father.

"Take it down and give it to him, will you?"

"Now, Jerry, have a heart," objected the badgered father. "Why do you insist on dragging me into this thing? Why, it will make him feel like a fool to have me pass it across to him, and with the compliments of the house, and so forth. Mail it! Stamps are cheap enough!"

"Daughters are a nuisance, after all, aren't they, father?" she agreed, and went out at once in her little car, inspect the cottage on which she was engaged.

Jerrold, thus left with the scraps of the futile correspondence, turned to Prudence.

"What shall I do?" he asked helplessly.

"I don't know," she said gently. "What do you think?"

So Jerrold carried it down to the office and sent for Duane. "It's none of my business, of course," he said. "Don't think I care how much you correspond with the family—and don't blame me—but I don't know what else to do with it. She gave it to me and said to bring it to you."

He passed the bits of paper to Duane hastily as though they burned his fingers. Duane examined them hopefully, saw the unbroken seal of the envelope.

"She didn't read it, did she?" he said dejectedly.

"I don't know, maybe she did," said Jerry's father. "She took it upstairs, and it was quite a while before she came down. Maybe she read it while she was up, and then sealed it, again to fool you. I wouldn't put it past her."

Duane laughed, and examined the envelope more hopefully, but the seal bore no faint trace of tampering fingers.

"I know they say, Never say die, and try, try again, and all that nonsense," Jerrold went on gloomily. "But I don't put much stock in it in this case. Jerry's not a stubborn girl, naturally. If she makes a mistake, she always admits it and rights about face. I don't think she likes you—if you'll excuse me for saying so. And I don't think—"

"You don't need to," said Duane grimly. "But she does like me. And she brought me out here, and by the Eternal, I'll stick if it takes ten years!"

"Well, I think you're wasting your time, my boy, but have it your own way," Jerrold was sympathetic. "I don't understand girls myself. Prudence isn't like that—you can always talk her down."

Duane had been in Des Moines one full bitter month without a word from Jerry. And then one morning there was a telephone call in the machine shop, and Duane knew it was Opportunity calling for him by the modern.

"The Starter Won't Work. Will You Take Me In Quickly, Please?"

mechanical contrivance, as it seems she often calls. The boy turned from the telephone and called out to the man in charge of the repair shop:

"Send a tow car for Miss Harmer. She broke down on Eleventh, other side of the park. She's in a hurry."

Before the man in charge could make a move or give an order, Duane was on his feet.

"Hold up that call a minute," he said with impressive authority in his tone. "I've got to speak to Mr. Harmer. I'll be right back."

He broke into the sacred precinct of the president's office without ceremony.

"Listen, Mr. Harmer," he began with boyish eagerness. "Her car broke down—Jerry's—and she phoned for a tow. May I go after her?"

Jerrold looked at him, laughed a little, shook his head. "Sure you may. And God help you!"

Jerry sat patiently behind the wheel of her handsome little roadster, beneath the groaning branches of a great maple, a skeleton in the late fall, and waited for the tow car. Her thoughts were far from the quiet Iowa street.

"I don't imagine what's the matter," she began brightly. "It's deadlier than—"

The smile froze upon her face when she met Duane Allerton's eyes, her voice became a still cold thing. "The starter won't work. Will you take me in quickly, please?" Duane got out and stood beside her. "Why, how do you do?" he said. "I think I met you once before—in Brooklyn."

"I don't recall it."

"Good! Let's both forget it and start afresh! It will be so much better in the end."

"Will you hurry, please? I have a business appointment." She consulted the platinum and diamond wrist watch with a most professional alertness.

"You've changed," he told her, not heeding her words, his eyes on the slender contour of her face. "You are paler. Perhaps you use less rouge here than in the city."

"I don't use any on my car," she said, and turned her back upon him. Duane got out the chains and fastened her car to his, but when he had finished he came to her again.

"You're just as beautiful as ever," he said softly.

Jerry did not turn her head. "I'm afraid you will have to sit in your own car to steer it," he said regretfully. "I'm sorry, I'd so much rather have you ride with me, but—"

"I don't mind. I'd rather." She slipped quickly into her place beside the wheel.

He stood beside the car, very close to it, leaning upon the door. She did not meet his eyes, but she said: "Jerry," he said very softly, "don't you think you're treating me very badly?"

She hesitated a moment. The appeal of his voice was a positive pain to her, but Jerry had listened to that appeal before, to her sorrow. Her tone was low, her accents insistively cold as she answered:

"Yes. Why not?"

He could not but smile at the direct conclusiveness of her retort. He turned about and started for the tow car ahead. Suddenly she leaned forward, and called after him.

"Mr. Allerton," she said, and he came back to her with hopeful eagerness. "I wish you would go away again. I was very foolish to send for you. I didn't realize how it would be. I will pay your way back to New York and give you money enough to take care of you—until you get started again—"

"No, thanks, Miss Harmer, I am staying right on in Des Moines," he said quietly, without smiling.

"I—I wish you would go," she said pleadingly. "It—it makes me very unhappy—having you here."

He shook his head. "I am sorry. I have a nice position with your father. I shouldn't think of leaving."

Jerry's chin lifted defiantly. "I shall tell my father to discharge you," she threatened.

"Then when I come begging to your back door, will your maid refuse me a crust of bread to stay my hunger?" he asked lightly.

"If my father dismisses you and offers you a ticket home, you will be glad enough to go."

"If your father dismissed me and gave me a ticket to Heaven itself, Jerry, I would not go without you. I shall never leave Des Moines until I take you with me."

"I'll go away myself then," she cried furiously. "I don't have to stay here—to be insulted—and humiliated—and—"

"I shall wait until you come back, Jerry," he said soberly.

"I'll never come back!"

"Oh, yes, you will come back," he said softly. "As long as your Prudence is here, you will come back."

Her Affliction

Little Millie had achieved great success at her school, and was being moved to a higher grade. Needless to say, her parents were pleased with her and anxious to hear how she would get on in the new class.

When she returned home at lunch time the first question her mother asked was this:

"Well, darling," she said, "how did you like your new teacher?"

"She seems very nice," replied Millie, "but I can't understand all she says."

"How is that?" asked her mother. "Does she talk too quietly?"

"Oh, no, mummy," returned Millie, "but—with the air of one who knows—I think she's got a predicament in her speech."

Beat Everything in Sight

Here is a good one about a little lad who was given his first watch the other day as a gift on his ninth birthday. His aunt tells the story.

"Although he seemed pleased," she said, "when he first opened the box his enthusiasm was quite restrained. But he dashed into the house on his return from school that day, and exclaimed jubilantly:

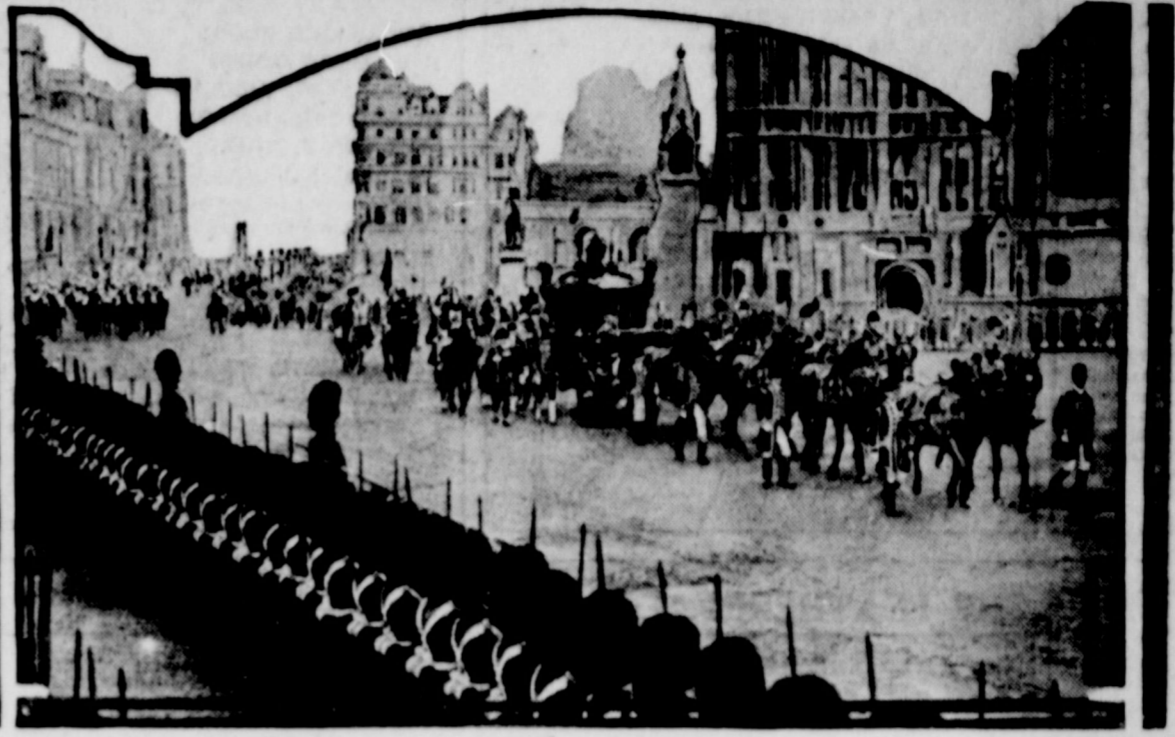

"My, but I've got a dandy watch!" "I'm glad you like it," said his mother, duly pleased at his pleasure.

"Yes," he said, "it's half an hour ahead of Jim's watch, and it's a whole hour ahead of the clock in the drug store! Gee, it beats them all!"—St. Paul Dispatch.

Monk Man of Learning

The epithet "Admirable Doctor" was bestowed upon Roger Bacon (1214-1292), an English monk of the Franciscan order. He was without doubt the greatest philosopher of his time. His great work, the Opus Majus, was written about 1268, and first printed in 1733. It treats of nearly all the sciences. He was accused of practicing black magic; and in 1278 a council of the Franciscans, jealous of his superiority, condemned his writings and committed him to prison in Paris where he remained for ten years. He died at Oxford about 1292.—Kansas City Times.

ADMIRAL CALTHORPE

Sir Arthur Calthorpe has been promoted by King George of England to the rank of admiral of the fleet, which is the naval equivalent to field marshal of the army. Sir Arthur served in the battle of Jutland and was the first flag officer of the allies to reach Constantinople at the close of the war, where he acted as high commissioner.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

Mary Graham Bonner

OSTRICH HEARS GOSSIP

"I hate women," said the curassow. He had a shaggy head and a yellow knob on his beak and he shook his head as he spoke.

"What nonsense," said the ostrich as he grinned foolishly for he didn't see any point in being wise.

Wisdom never brought anyone barley or lettuce or cabbage that he could see.

"I love women," the ostrich said. "They know enough to appreciate my beautiful feathers, and I can give my feathers without being hurt myself, so that it is quite fair to me and to all concerned."

"As for men and boys! Well, I haven't any use for them.

"Did you ever hear of a man having the sense to wear a glorious feather in his hat—a wondrous dark, flowing plume?"

"I never did.

"And so I like women."

Now the ostrich was quite black, and Mrs. Ostrich, who was sitting on the nest where the eggs were, was of a gray color.

When five o'clock in the afternoon came Mr. Ostrich would take the place on the nest and there he would stay until nine the next morning.

For Mr. and Mrs. Ostrich take turns in hatching the eggs.

"Pardon me, my dear sir," began the curassow politely, "why have I heard such foolish things about you?"

"What have you heard?" demanded the ostrich.

"I may be a bit silly but I am beautiful and fashionable, and that is a good deal for one bird to claim, and claim rightly, too.

"I don't mind the weather. That is good of me. No one ever heard me grumble about the weather. If it's hot, cold, dry or wet I never complain."

"That is all right, perhaps," said the curassow doubtfully, "and I know you help Mrs. Ostrich in the household affair, but won't you please tell me why you hide your head under the sand when danger is near you?"

"I've heard that all your cousins did that out in the deserts and plains where your homes are apt to be."

"How can you ask me a question like that?" asked the ostrich. "And pray tell me how am I to answer it?"

"I cannot tell you why I do it—because—because—well because I don't do it at all. It's an old bit of gossip and it keeps cropping up all the time."

"What!" shrieked the curassow. "You don't do it? And do you mean to tell me that for all these years we have been told something about you that isn't true?"

"You must have," said the ostrich. "But I ought to teach you a good lesson. Don't gossip and then such tales won't spread."

"Now you see someone told you we did that, and someone else told the creature who told you, and then it got all around, and oh, dear! the gossip keeps up, and we're thought more foolish than we even are."

"There is just this much truth in it. In the deserts when danger is near we lie down on the sand and keep our heads low—we get down so we won't be seen. But the story has been sadly added to for we never hide our heads, we simply lie low. Dear, dear, how bad it is to gossip for untrue tales spread so fast and are so hard to stop!"

"But why do you hate women?"

"I don't know," said the curassow, "but they always make me cross just to see them—I just happen to be that way."

FARM ITEMS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

What Determines Good Planting Seed.

While cotton farmers are making preparations for the coming year it is well for them to consider what kind of seed they have for planting advises J. S. Mogford, professor of Agronomy, A. and M. College of Texas. Good seed are very essential in producing a good crop. For seed to be good they must possess more than just the power to germinate. They should be seed of a known variety of good quality; show a high germination percentage; be large for the variety, well matured, of uniform size, pure, and free from insects and diseases. Does the cotton seed that you intend to plant possess these valuable qualities? The best time to find out is before you plant.

The value of cotton on the market is determined by its length, strength, uniformity and hardness of staple. A cotton can possess these and other valuable characteristics and still be a heavy yielder. Acre yield is very important point but with it should be considered quality of staple. These same seed can possess in their germ plasm the factors for large boll, early maturity, a high percentage of five lobe bolls, seed of average size, lint percentage of from thirty-eight per cent to forty per cent, and grow a plant that is close jointed and given to fruiting. Practically all of Texas can grow a cotton that staples from 1 to 1 and 1/16 inches and better. A staple of this length and quality is in demand, why not grow it? There are good seed of our best Texas varieties that possess all of these qualities, and when planted on soils that have sufficient plant food available they will develop fully.

Cotton seed that will not germinate are worthless for planting; weak seed that only produce weak seedlings and scrubs are not much better. Germination tests are easy to conduct and should be resorted to whenever there is any doubt about the viability of the seed. Take an average sample of your planting seed and test them out.

No matter what variety of cotton you plant try to get seed large for the variety. The size of the seed usually determines the amount of reserve food carried for the young plant; therefore it is important that the seed be large, plump and well filled. Plants grown from weak or immature seed are stunted from the start and never recover sufficiently to produce normal plants. Here is a reason that justifies the work of any seed grader or culling machine that will take out all of the faulty, light or weak seed.

Variety pure cotton seed all of the same size and weight generally gives plants of uniform growth, maturity, etc. Seed of mixed size and vigor will produce some strong and weak plants. The plants from weak seed are more subject to attack of insect and diseases and in most cases are later in maturity that good healthy seed.

It is important that cotton planting seed be variety pure. Where seed of different varieties are mixed together you find staple of varying length, plants that have different maturing dates and quite often many plants that are poor yielders. Fibres of uneven length produce a low grade product, which due to the loss on waste in it, sell for less. If we are to raise the quality of the cotton we produce we must plant pure seed that possess the characters desired.

If we are going to have good seed to plant they must be produced properly. The foundation stock should possess the valuable qualities desired, they should be pure, sound and well matured. Seed should be planted on good ground and given good cultivation. The results from good seed care and labor required to grow them. Seed that are going to be increased for planting should be planted on good land, picked, ginned, cured properly and stored in a place where there is no danger of mixture with inferior seed. While seed are curing in storage they should be stirred occasionally, until thoroughly dry to prevent heating. Before seed are planted they should be graded or culled to take out all faulty, light and weak seed. It takes strong seed to produce strong plants. Good seed that are adapted to your conditions when planted in a well prepared seed bed are steps in the right direction toward producing the kind of staple the market wants.

Forestry Suggestions.
Farmers of the Piney Woods who desire to have their woodlands inspected by the Farm Forester should ask their county agent for an "Application for Timberland Inspection" form, to be filled out and mailed to the Farm Forester at College Station.

The best time to work in the woodlet is during the period between harvest and planting time when there is little other work to be done on the farm. The rest of the year it is only necessary to keep out the fires, and as we educate people to the menace of fire this task will become increasingly easy.

Timber will not rot and die in a year. If conditions are such that it cannot be harvested one year, it continues to grow and will be bigger, better and more valuable when it is harvested.

SUFFERED MANY YEARS WITH FEMALE TROUBLE
PE-RU-NA
LIKE A GIFT FROM HEAVEN

Mrs. Katie Scheffel, R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, Ohio

"I have been suffering for years with female trouble. Was operated on five years ago. It relieved me some but I did not regain my strength. Two years later was taken sick and bedfast several months. I treated a long while without much relief. I was discouraged, my mind affected, so nervous I could neither eat or sleep and unable to do anything. We tried several doctors but one after another gave up my case as hopeless. Finally a good friend advised me to try Pe-ru-na. I did. It relieved me almost immediately. Your medical department said I was suffering from chronic catarrh of the system. I began taking your medicine in March, 1914, and continued until August. I took ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and three bottles of Man-a-lin and felt like a new person. Your medicine seemed like a gift from Heaven. It was like coming from darkness into light.

We have used your medicine since for coughs, colds and grip with good results. We will always keep it on hand. I weigh twenty-five pounds more than I ever did, eat and sleep well and can do a good day's work. Everybody says I look fine. Even the doctors are surprised. I cannot thank you enough and will always recommend Pe-ru-na to sufferers from catarrh."

MRS. KATIE SCHEFFEL, R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, O.

Mrs. Scheffel is only one of many thousand women in the world, who owe their present health to Pe-ru-na. The record of this medicine is a proud one as Pe-ru-na has held the confidence of both sexes for fifty years or more.

If your trouble is due to a catarrhal inflammation in any organ or part of the body, do like Mrs. Scheffel. Try Pe-ru-na. Insist upon having the original and reliable remedy for catarrhal conditions. You won't be sorry.

A Wife That Was a Blonde
By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

JIMMY ANDREWS consulted once more the card which he held in his fingers. Yes, this was the house all right, and it certainly advertised its owner's ability to buy a late model Super six coach for his wife.

"Some wigwag!" commented Jimmy as he went up the brick walk to the Tudor entrance. He was figuring that the Beldings must be newcomers. Presently he found himself seated on a chair edge, wondering why the deuce the old man had picked on him, the agency's newest salesman, to demonstrate their car to this particular prospect.

Then the velvet draperies parted to frame an outrageously good-looking young woman.

Jimmy was on his feet. "Mr. Walcott believes you are interested in our late model coach—or that you might be if you knew what a really remarkable car it is," he said earnestly. "Its delightful riding qualities, artistic upholstery, economical gas consumption—" he went on, and his listener, who seemed about to interrupt occasionally, refrained from doing so until, either through lack of breath or because he had exhausted the virtues of his topic, Jimmy ceased of his own accord.

"Well—" and she hesitated. "Have you it with you?"

"Yes," he said quickly. "Outside. Would you care—"

The girl nodded. "Just a moment," she said and left the room.

Swinging down Main street, Jimmy wished some of his old Newtown friends would see him and wonder who was his pretty companion. Then he remembered that undoubtedly her face was not an unfamiliar one. Certainly as the wife of one of Newtown's richest men she would not be as unknown as himself who had returned after long absence and so far had met and talked with only one old friend, Will Cushman.

It was a perfect morning. Jimmy had chosen his route for its opportunities to show the Super six at its best. There was even a series of hills farther on just suited for testing its climbing ability.

His companion said little. Remarked once or twice on the power of the engine or surprising pick-up. Suddenly, "You are a very young salesman," she said.

The personal note took Jimmy by surprise. Also, he didn't know that he cared to have his youthfulness commented upon. Surely, she was younger than he.

"I—I daresay you are married?"

"Yes, my wife's a blonde," answered Jimmy without thinking, so amazed was he at the question. Absent-mindedly he had replied as he would have to another salesman, who would have taken the answer in the spirit in which it was offered.

Then he could have bitten out his tongue for his silly remark. Although, why should he have cared, he asked himself later when he had driven her back and left her at the Tudor entrance. She had paused an instant on the top step and thanked him for the demonstration.

"I—I will let you know my decision," she had said gravely as she turned away.

That afternoon J. Walcott sent for Jimmy. Jimmy, all unconscious of trouble ahead, entered that sacred inner office innocently and found himself being called down heartily.

"Thunderation!" They tell me Jim Belding bought his wife a Hegenbecker coupe this noon. Thought you eloped that sale this morning."

Jimmy's eyes widened. "I—I rather hoped—"

"Well, the lady kidded you along all right. Had a pleasant morning at our expense while waiting for the Hegenbecker to be delivered."

At that moment a stenographer beckoned to him. Jimmy, with gloomy brow, could not but overhear the conversation which took place at the telephone.

"You want the salesman sent up with the blonde wife and you'll buy that coach—"

Jimmy pricked up his ears. What the—

A minute later, J. Walcott turned to his newest salesman. "That's all right, my boy. You made a little mistake. You thought you were demonstrating to Mrs. Belding. But instead of that you have sold the coach to her cousin, Miss Dorothy Cushman. Will Cushman's sister, you know. I don't understand about your blonde wife but at any rate you've made your first sale with us."

"Oh, Jimmy, Jimmy!" Dorothy was laughing at him half an hour later. "It's true I was only a twelve-year-old kid when you lived here before, but I should have thought you would have remembered me—the everlasting little nuisance who wanted to tag brother Will and his chum wherever they went. Will told me you were back, also that you had sold you were not married."

"Honestly, Dorothy," and Jimmy was very sincere, "it beats me how I could have seen you and not known. You—you have changed you know."

"For better?" fished the girl shamelessly.

Jimmy looked quickly into her blue eyes which were smiling at him, then noted the lovely sun gold hair on her aristocratic little head.

Old Mr. Carter Helped by Simple Mixture

"After taking Adlerika I feel better than for years. At my age (60) it is ideal—so different from other medicines." (signed) W. W. Carter. Adlerika is a simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., which removes gas in ten minutes and often brings surprising relief to the stomach. Stops that full, bloated feeling. Brings out old waste-matter you never thought was in your system. Excellent for chronic constipation. Sold by all leading druggists.

The Wednesday Bridge Club was entertained last week at the home of Mrs. J. W. McKee. The tally cards carried out the suggestion of George Washington's birthday. The high score prize for the afternoon went to Mrs. E. I. Burn, a plaster chrome plaque, being the prize; a lunch cloth was the prize for second high score that was held by Miss Avis Crozier. Mrs. B. P. Franklin drew cut prize, a plaster chrome vase. The hostess served a delicious two course luncheon consisting of stuffed egg salad potato chips, olives, hot rolls, tea white cake and floating island pudding.

The Night Bridge Club met at the home of Mrs. M. P. Lester last Thursday night. Following the close of several games Mr. and Mrs. Max Bogusch were found to be holders of high score. Mrs. Bogusch was given a hand embroidered tea apron as her prize, while hand made pongee handkerchiefs went to Mr. Bogusch as his prize. The cut prize a box of candy, was won by Mr. W. H. Savage. The hostess served delicious refreshments consisting of chicken salad, olives, crackers, hot tea, plum pudding with whipped cream.

High School Notes

CARD OF THANKS.

The High School Basket Ball team wishes to thank all the people of the community who so liberally donated funds for the trip to Ozona and to Austin. Such support gives us the greatest incentive possible to fight to the finish at the state meet Friday and Saturday.
EAGLE BASKET BALL TEAM.

CARD OF THANKS.

The Senior Class of 1926 wish to thank all those who took part in helping us give the dance last Saturday night.

Especially do we wish to thank Mr. and Mrs. Couch for the use of the garage and the help they gave. Also Judge Henshaw whose piano we used, and the members of the Texas-Mexican Club whose benches we used. Mrs. Lea and Mr. Howard's work was appreciated and those who furnished the music we appreciate more than words can express, Mrs. Lewis Lemons, Mrs. Sims Wilkinson, Mr. "Stump" Duke and Dr. Gorman. We also wish to thank Mr. Happle, who was floor manager. Last but not least of all was Mr. Maynard "Skinny" Boling who encouraged and helped us all along and whose help was appreciated more than we can ever say.

Mrs. W. R. Qualtrough and children spent the week end in El Paso visiting relatives.

Mrs. W. F. Bohlman of El Paso is here visiting with friends and looking after her business interests here.

Mrs. Louis Gallard visited relatives in Alpine this week.

Mrs. J. B. McPhee of Los Angeles, California came in Saturday on business.

Auto Tragedies Increase as Other Travel Is Made Safer

AUTOS STILL CLIMBING HILL OF DEATH

WHILE railroad tragedies and street car accidents in the United States have gradually been diminishing in the last ten years, the annual toll exacted by automobile casualties is steadily mounting, says the Stewart-Warner Safety Council for the prevention of automobile accidents. Railroad accidents have been cut more than one-third, or from 12,500 in 1913 to 8,078 in 1923, the latest government figures available. Street car fatalities also have been cut down one-third or from 2,000 in 1913 to 2,000 ten years later. Automobile deaths, on the other hand, have increased over five-fold. Against the 3,522 deaths in 1913 we have 10,452 in 1923, and the score is growing each year.

Care, more care and still more care, is the solution of this national problem. The pedestrian must be always on the alert and as spry as a kangaroo, if he is to keep out of harm's way, and the driver for his part must never relax his vigilance for a moment when human lives are at his mercy.
