AMENDMENTS TO BE VOTED ON AUGUST 1

Taxes, Judiciary and Salary Subjects Submitted to the Voters.

Qualified voters of Texas will on Monday, August 1, pass upon four of eight constitutional amendments proposed by the Fortieth Legislature. The four other amendments will be voted upon at the November election, 1928.

The usual regulations governing voting in State elections will control in the August 1 balloting, with polling places generally the same as at previous elections.

A majority of all votes cast is necessary to the adoption of a constitutional amendment, and as arranged on the official ballots, each of the four to be voted upon on August 1 will be separately approved or disapproved by the voter, so that it will be possible to adopt any one or all four.

Summarized, the provisions of the amendments as they appear on the ballots, are:

First, an amendment to the Constitution amending Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Art. 5 of the Constitution, for the purpose of providing a more efficient judicial system.

In effect this amendment provides for enlarging the membership of the Supreme Court and the Court of Criminal Appeals without adding to the salary roll; prohibits the creation of any more Courts of Civil Appeals or enlargement of their membership and permits of greater elasticity in the functioning of the courts. Provision also is made for such sittings of the courts as will tend to expedite their business, and authorizes transfer of judges for the same purpose. The amendment would increase the number of Supreme Court Justices to nine and abolish the Commission of Appeals. It would increase the Court of Criminal Appeals to five members, and limit the number of Courts of Civil Appeals to twelve, with three judges each.

Second, an amendment to Art. 8, inserting Section 1-A, providing for changing the taxation system so that the State may derive its income, in whole or in part, from other sources than the ad valorem tax.

This amendment provides that the Legislature may separate the objects of taxation for State purposes from the objects of taxation for the support of the counties, districts and political subdivisions of the State and counties; that it may provide for the levy of an ad valorem or other tax on certain classes of property for State purposes only, or for county or local purposes only, including school purposes; that the Legislature may provide for classification of objects of taxation, which shall be equal and uniform. It is provided that the rate of such taxes shall not exceed the limits now set forth in the Constitution. The effect of the amendment would be to allow the State to secure all or part of its revenues from corporation or occupational taxes instead of from land taxes.

Against Fee System. Third, an amendment to the Constitution giving the Legislature power to provide compensation for District Attorneys and county officers through salaries in lieu of fees, commissions and perquisites as now prescribed by the Constitution.

This amendment is intended to abolish the fee system of compensation for district attorneys, county judges, county attorneys, sheriffs, county and district clerks, tax assessors and collectors, by permitting the Legislature to prescribe their duties and fix their salaries in lieu of other compensations now received through fees, commissions and perquisites.

Fourth, an amendment removing from the Constitution all limitations as to the amount of compensation of officers, the compensation and expense of said officers to be provided by law, and fixing the compensation of the Governor, and providing that said amendment shall be effective on and after January 1, 1929, and not sooner.

This amendment would increase the salary of the Governor from $1,000 to $10,000 a year, and would permit changes in the salaries of a few other State officers, and allow the Legislature to fix salaries of its members at not to exceed $1,500 a year, with traveling expenses to and from the capital for each session of that body. The legislators now receive $5 a day and mileage to and from the capital; and with but $2 a day compensation after the first sixty days of the regular session.

MASONS PLAN HONOR TO W. M. STOCKWELL

At the fall reunion of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry meeting which will be held in El Paso from October 31 through November 3, William M. Stockwell, 33 degree, will be honored. The occasion will be the celebrating of fifty years as a Master Mason.

Mr. Stockwell holds the unique distinction of becoming a member of the "Order of Railway Conductors" on May 28, 1875, 52 years ago. He was a passenger conductor for the G. H. & S. A. Railway for a great number of years running between El Paso and Sanderson. He has lived in El Paso 39 years.

As a means of honoring Mr. Stockwell for his many years in the interest of Masonry, a special celebration of his golden anniversary will be held by the Scottish Rite Masons of El Paso and West Texas at their next Reunion, October 31, November 1, 2, and 3.

Any Master Mason desiring to take the degree should communicate with S. C. Bodkin, KCCCL.

Forty-Two Party.

Mrs. T. L. Williams and daughters, Mrs. J. A. White and Miss Louise, entertained at their home on Friday, July 22. The house was beautifully decorated with many baskets of cut flowers. The butterfly was the motif in the decoration scheme, and many beautiful butterflies had settled among the shasta daisies and dahlias.

The thirty two guests enjoyed a number of games of forty-two. Mrs. H. E. Fletcher winning high score. Cut prizes were awarded to those cutting high, second and low. Mrs. S. C. Bodkin won the first prize, a dainty piece of lingerie. The second prize, a can of bath powder, was drawn by Mrs. D. L. Duke, and low prize, two linen handkerchiefs, was awarded to Mrs. David Crews.

A delicious plate lunch consisting of chicken salad, bavarian cream, cakes, and iced tea was served by the hostesses assisted by their niece and cousin, Miss Sophia Louise Williams of Course.

Model Bakery Sold

The deal was closed last Friday, whereby Mr. Forte proprietor of the Black and White Inn became the owner of the Model Bakery. The price paid was not made public.

The building is being remodeled and made larger and Mr. Forte plans to make it one of the best bakeries in this section of the country. Electric ovens will be installed as well as an electric dough mixer. He will be prepared to bake all kinds of fancy and plain cakes, cookies and breads of every kind.

MEXICAN BORDER HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION TO MEET

Chambers of Commerce representing twenty-one towns (including Sanderson) lying between San Antonio and El Paso, have been invited to a meeting of the Mexican Border Highway Association at the St. Charles hotel, in Del Rio, on July 30th. Following the meeting they will be the guests of the Del Rio Chamber of Commerce at a banquet.

If we are to secure the number of tourists to which we are entitled, or even keep traffic at a satisfactory level along the Mexican Border highway, some definite step must be taken towards establishing a central bureau which will specialize in advertising the highway; distribute maps; visit the various towns to promote a more friendly contact; promote cordial relations with newspapers at strategic points, and do thousand and one things essential to maintaining and advancing our interests.

SANDERSON WINS IN RETURN GAME IN DEL RIO

Boosters Won by a Score of 7 to 0, in Best Game of Season.

The Sanderson Boosters went to Del Rio Sunday, July 24, and shut out the strong Del Rio Cowboys, 7 to 0, under the masterly pitching of "Matty" Maddox, who allowed only four scratch hits, while the Boosters were hitting Barbee, Cowboy pitcher, for twelve safeties, five of which went for extra bases.

The Boosters performed in big league fashion, especially the infield, there not being an error chalked up against them. The hitting of M. White, Robertson, Adams and Smith featured.

A large crowd of fans went to Del Rio with the Boosters and certainly did their part rooting. The Sanderson crowd drowned out the cheering of the entire Del Rio bunch, and coupled with the brilliant playing of the Boosters, had many Cowboy fans razzing their home team before the game was over.

The Boosters certainly appreciate the large following and the strong backing the Sanderson people are showing and we have a real ball club to boast of as a result.

The Boosters will play Juarez, Mexico, at Juarez, Saturday and Sunday, July 30 and 31, if arrangements can be completed.

With the good roads and publicity work now going on in other sections the fact must be recognized that the towns along the Mexican Border to even preserve their present volume of travel must keep "right on their toes."

Educational Reforms Absorb Good and Evil Points of Predecessors

By DAVID KINLEY, President University of Illinois.

FASHION in a large measure, dominates methods of teaching and administration. We constantly delude ourselves with the thought that we are improving our methods of teaching and our forms of organization by changing from old ways to some alleged new ones. One reform which one of the greatest of American educators made when he became president of Harvard university was the introduction of the lecture system to replace the recitation system that had prevailed. That system had become dry, mechanical, a mere matter of memory and rote. Its evils were evident. We must have "the inspiration and freshness of the expert teacher and investigator in lectures," became then the cry of reform. The advantages of the lecture system loomed large. Its disadvantages were unknown or passed over. Now the movement is reversed. This and other educational reforms are, in one respect, like all reforms. We compare the evils of the existing system with the good of the proposed new ones. So we swing over, abandoning the good of the one, as well as its evils, and taking on the evils of the other, as well as its good.

We may gain little or nothing by swinging from recitation, question and answer, to "class discussion," to class debates and other methods supposed to "make the student do the work." All of them are but devices to attract the attention and arouse the interest of the student. They may succeed in getting him to go through the external motions of learning and of being interested in his studies, but may fail to bring him the rich reward that comes from interest in the subject rather than in the method of approach to it.

Each Generation Has Own Viewpoint of the Problem of Immortality

By REV. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK, New York.

Each generation approaches the problem of immortality in its own way. As far back as we can look men have believed in immortality, but age after age has constructed its own special reason for doing so. What, then, is the particular approach which our generation makes to this question? Unless we understand that we cannot understand either our current philosophy or our current suicide.

That our way of getting at the problem is different from our fathers' approach is evident. Only a little while ago the major interest in immortality concerned reaching heaven and escaping hell. Then a great change came. It came in the generation just behind us.

Man got his hand firmly on his new scientific control of nature's law-abiding forces and began making amazing changes here and now. The voices which most typically spoke for the generation just behind us were full of expectation, but not about a post-mortem heaven. They had brought to earth the paradise of their desires.

The Isles of the Blessed were no longer in the West, they were only a few years ahead. In that chorus of mid-Victorian optimism, both poets and scientists, hymnologists and sociologists, joined. Even the churches' hymnals began to include more songs about the kingdom of heaven on earth than about the kingdom of heaven in a future paradise.

Decentralization of Industry Would Be of Great Benefit to the Nation

By SAMUEL INSULL, Utilities Magnate.

Our rapid industrial development has one decided disadvantage. It is the massing of our population in large centers, so that we are crowded in some places and extremely rural in others.

There is no apparent reason why specialized manufacturing, for example, cannot be conducted as economically in the country as in the city. It would result in vastly improved conditions for workers, better atmosphere for children, better surroundings for family life in all respects, with consequently material effect upon the future manhood and womanhood of our population.

There are 29,000,000 of electrical horse power established in the factories of the United States. This is a force equal to 290,000,000 human workmen. The amount of installed and available power per workman in the factories of the United States is ten times the amount per workman in France, and twenty times the amount per workman in Italy. This fact alone accounts for a large part of the differences between wages here and in Europe. It is a main factor in maintaining productive supremacy.

Forests Would Have Greatly Reduced Disaster From the Recent Floods

By W. L. HALL, Prominent Forest Engineer.

If the Ozark country had been covered with heavy forests in good condition, the recent flood would have been less disastrous in that section. Forests greatly increase the water-holding capacity of the soil; they also retard the surface run-off. This is true in all kinds of country, but particularly so in hill regions, such as the Ozarks of Missouri and Arkansas.

Much depends also on the condition of the forests. Forest with leaf cover, clean burned, is not of much value. Forest with heavy ground cover, which has accumulated through years, undisturbed by fire, has the greatest retarding influence on water.

Such forests in the Ozarks would have greatly retarded the heavy rains. The same is true for the headwaters of the Ohio and the other streams which recently have poured great quantities of water into the Mississippi. It is hardly to be believed such forests would have entirely prevented the flood, but reforestation would greatly help.

Day Coming When Church Unity Will Replace Church Controversy

By BISHOP CHARLES H. BRENT, Buffalo, New York.

Church unity is no longer a distant vision, but an immediate and urgent necessity. The World Conference on Faith and Order to be held August 3 to 21, will bring together religious leaders from all the world.

All Christian churches are looking forward to this meeting with the greatest interest, as a step toward greater unity. The Lausanne conference is the most representative religious assembly that has been held since the division of the church, centuries ago. The spirit of all our preparatory meetings has been one of harmony and frankness. I believe the era of church controversy is over. We are living in an era of church co-operation.

25c AD VALOREM FIXED BY MOODY

Will Save People of the State $2,500,000 Next Two Years Says Governor.

Austin, Tex.—A reduced tax rate that Governor Dan Moody figures will save the people of Texas $2,500,000 during the next two years was computed and ordered into effect Friday by the state automatic tax board, which fixed the ad valorem rate for general purposes at 25 cents; schools, 35 cents, and Confederate pensions, 7 cents, a total of 67 cents.

Governor Moody said he believed the 25 cent general rate can be continued and perhaps reduced the second year of the biennium. This would make the biennial total rate of 50 cents at the most or 8 cents less than the combined rate for the past biennium. Although the rate is 23 cents now it was 35 cents last year.

"The schools will be provided with a $15 per capita appropriation for the first time in history," Governor Moody, chairman of the board, said, "all of the educational institutions will be adequately provided for and every department of the state government will be properly financed."

State Treasurer W. Gregory Hatcher lost his insistence for a 23 cent rate, but got his figures supporting this stand read into the minutes of the meeting.

The board, composed of the governor, treasurer and Comptroller S. H. Terrell, figured that the exact rate should be 25.4 cents, but knocked off the fraction after making allowance for expected increase in occupation, inheritance and like taxes.

The rate was computed mainly from the estimated net valuation of $3,546,705,869 property in the state. Total estimated valuation as reported by Comptroller Terrell is $3,818,409,939, but $271,704,070 was subtracted to account for remission allowed about 13 counties. Against the net valuation was figured $21,738,995.45 appropriations to be paid out of the general revenue fund, and thus the rate per $100 valuation necessary to take care of the appropriation was found.

In insisting on a 23 cent rate, Treasurer Hatcher first figured that the penitentiary system would yield $3,000,000 to the general revenue fund, instead of $1,000,000 estimated by Comptroller Terrell. Hatcher conceded the latter figure, however, after the board found that a six-year average of penitentiary receipts is $1,200,000 and decided to play safe and call it $1,000,000.

Sapiro-Ford Controversy Ends.

Detroit, Mich.—The legal phases of the Ford-Sapiro controversy came to a formal end Thursday when Judge Charles C. Simons, in federal district court, signed an order of discontinuance. The stipulation of discontinuance agreed upon by counsel for Aaron Sapiro, plaintiff, and Henry Ford, defendant, was presented to Judge Simons by counsel for Sapiro. The court immediately signed the order. "It is hereby stipulated and agreed," read the document filed by Sapiro's counsel, "by and between the parties hereto that the above entitled cause be, and the same hereby is, discontinued without further costs to either party."

If you are planning to trade-in your present car for a new car, remember these facts:

- 1 When you trade-in your used car for a new car, you are after all making a purchase, not a sale. You are simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of the new car.
- 2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value; i. e., what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.
- 3 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.
- 4 The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not.
- 5 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.
- 6 First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

Merchant—Do you believe the business man should go into politics?
Politician—Certainly, provided he has plenty of money, is willing to spend it and goes in on my side.—Life.

The Name in the Mirror

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

DORIS GRAHAM had returned to spend the summer at the quiet, cliff-built summer resort where she had been so carefree and happy five years before.

"But isn't it a stupid place to live in for three months?" asked her chum in the office.

"It wouldn't suit you," admitted Doris.

"And that dreadful trip every day," lamented the other girl.

Doris was not to be discouraged. She wanted to get away from the city, wanted to sleep in the country, wake up in the country, have her Sundays and Saturday afternoons in the open.

And so she had established herself in the plain, old country boarding house that she had lived in when her mother was with her and life looked rosy and merry. Now, she was tired, a trifle discouraged at the lack of variety in her life. There was a vacancy she could not quite analyze but she ascribed it to the fact that she could not get accustomed to living without her dear mother.

On her first free Saturday afternoon, she wandered about the old village streets.

"I'll just go down to the post office to wait for the distribution of the late mail," she said to herself, as she neared the little group of shops of which one was the post office.

This had been one of the merriest of meeting places for all the young folks of the summer resort. There, in its homely prosaic enough atmosphere, many a budding romance had first-colored into life.

It was as she was entering the post office five years ago that she had first seen Archie Olmstead. The thought now quickened her breath, sent that forlorn hurt straight to her heart.

What had become of him? Why had she never heard from him?

How many times she had asked herself that question only to find herself unanswerd.

She found a letter for her from the girl in the office who, secretly, would have enjoyed being with Doris, but who hesitated to invite herself.

Doris, thrilled at receiving a letter from the hands of the same postmaster who had stood behind the window thumbing the letters five years before, stood beside the scratched and disfigured wall to read it.

As some one pushed against her, she moved. She bumped her head, ever so slightly, against the corner of the glass-faced wall cabinet that held unclaimed letters.

For a moment she stared at the envelopes posted inside. Suddenly, she started. There was her own name—Doris Graham.

Hastily, she sought the postmaster and told him that there was a letter in the case that was addressed to her. Together, they got it and Doris, fearing, somehow, to read it in the midst of so many eyes as were upon her, put it in her bag.

When she was alone she opened the envelope. It was a letter from Archie. In it, he told her this was the third one he had written and if he received no answer this time he would decide that she had amused herself for a summer by making him fall in love with her.

If she wrote one letter over that week-end to Archie, she wrote a dozen. None suited her. She could not seem to find words in which to tell him all that had been in her thoughts of him, since they had met. She wondered where he was. Could this address be the right one?

On Monday, at the office, she tried again, this time on her typewriter. It was a stupid letter. She destroyed it.

It was still light when she arrived in the country these June nights and she decided that she would be able to pen a short note to Archie if she used the post office pen and ink on the old shelf desk where they had written each other so many tender notes in other days. With a piece of paper in her bag, she went to the village and wrote to Archie. As she stood looking at the much-used blotter on the shelf, her handbag open with its mirrored back, a familiar scrawl was reflected in it.

She held the mirror over the blotted name. Yes—it was his name in his handwriting. Her heart thumped madly. He must be here—in this very town—now. The name had been written that day.

Posting the letter she had written, she hurried back to the boarding house.

When the motherly old landlady came forward, she saw that they had met on the walk leading through the arch of maples. She had remembered their early romance. She was gratified at its renewal.

It took the whole evening to explain the strange tricks Fate had played them during the years of their separation. But the faith of each of them was unshaken and Doris found herself later comparing the great happiness of her present summer with the shallow, frivolous gaiety of that holiday five years ago.

"And I knew all the time," Doris heard from her chum at the office, "that there must be some good reason for your craving for that stupid summer resort—some other reason than the country air."

Amsterdam Jews Hold High Municipal Posts

Holland is the ghetto of western Europe. Latest figures show 115,223 Jews living there—54,501 men and 60,722 women. Amsterdam was the first Dutch town in which the Jews settled and its Jewish community today is famous the world over. Rotterdam, The Hague, Utrecht and other places also have important Jewish quarters. In Amsterdam, however, the Jews hold an extraordinarily prominent position. Three of the six sheriffs are Jewish, as is a heavy representation in the municipal council. Parliament has many of them, including Henri Polak, leader of the Socialist party and federation. State Councilors Visser and Limburg, who formed an extra-parliamentary cabinet in 1926, are both Jews. A portion of the Jews are of Spanish and Portuguese origin, their ancestors having come when the Dutch republic freed itself from Spanish tyranny in the sixteenth century.—Chicago News.

Cool as a Cucumber

Avery Hearn of Laurel, Del., has sold papers on Laurel-Philadelphia trains for 40 years. One evening Hearn was waiting at the station for his train to put out when a breathless neighbor told him his house was on fire. Hearn didn't turn a hair but calmly replied: "The firemen will take care of the fire, the neighbors will take care of the wife and children, and I will take care of my run." So saying Hearn swung aboard his train.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

TUD TOAD

The toads are very solemn and very sedate, and their lawyers are the finest in the animal world.

One day last June a toad named Tud had accidentally stepped on and killed a smaller toad named Jody.

It was well known in the toad world that Tud and Jody had been bitter enemies, so it was a question of great doubt among many as to whether it had been an accident or whether Tud had really meant to murder Jody.

A day was set aside for a trial, and all the toads from far and near planned to be present, for they were much impressed by trials.

Toads are, for the most part, so good and well behaved that when anything dreadful happens among them they are very much shocked.

Tud Toad came of such fine parents that every one felt very sorry for them and did everything they could to comfort them, telling them that Tud would come out all right and be a finer toad in consequence.

At last the day set aside for the trial came, and all the toads were there.

Near the judge's box sat Tud's mother and daddy.

His mother looked very nervous, and every few moments she would bring forth from her pocket a green handkerchief and dry the tears from her great big eyes.

Tud's daddy coughed to keep back the sobs that he felt in his throat.

A constant murmur of whispers could be heard from the portion of the courthouse where all the toads sat, for they kept talking among themselves, wondering what the result would be.

But soon the judge, a fine looking, big toad, stepped into his box, with the jury about him, and in front stood the trembling Tud, quaking with fear and looking at the ground, as he was too ashamed to face the crowd.

The judge began to speak in a clear voice:

"Ladies and gentlemen, my jury will be out of court for fifteen minutes—they will leave now.

"At the end of that time they will tell us the result of the trial."

The fifteen minutes seemed like hours, but at last the twelve toads of the jury came back and handed to the judge a slip of paper leaf.

The judge arose again and said:

"It has been decided that Tud is not guilty."

At this Tud burst into sobs and cried:

"It is true; I did not mean to do it!"

"Now," said the judge, "it will be a lesson to you. You can be good to your enemies as well as to your friends."

This was the end of Tud's trial. He lived to be a fine, highly respected toad, but he could never forget about poor Jody, whom he had accidentally killed.

Science Seeks Origin of Polynesian Races

The determined search of scientists for the answer to a great historic puzzle—the origin of the Polynesian races—is about to try a new channel. Edward W. Gifford, associate curator at the Museum of Anthropology in the University of California, has been added to the staff of the Bishop museum, Honolulu, for special race research in the Pacific. He will voyage to the Fiji islands in May in an effort to discover Polynesian traits, or remnants of them. The Bishop museum has been collecting a vast amount of material dealing with prehistoric days in the Pacific, and has sent a series of scientific expeditions into the South seas and to the Asian coast. A friendly working agreement has been reached with the government of Dutch East Indies for an investigation of early vestiges in the Dutch possessions. A large and well equipped bureau of ethnology has been established there.

How Silly Grownups Puzzle Small Boys

"Children are inclined to take things very literally," remarked Anne Wheeler, the settlement worker. "Take for instance the case of little Billy. His father had brought home a big box of candy but the child had been told by his mother that he must never eat candy without her permission.

"When a guest tried to make the little fellow take some, he said, 'He must ask my muddle,' and started off for where she was, over half a mile away.

"But," said the guest, 'why not ask your father?' He's right out here on the porch."

To which Billy replied with indignation:

"Don't you know me fiddle isn't me muddle?"

Just a Suggestion

It was just a wayside shanty depot along the P. D. & R. R. out West. The troupe of wandering actors set their luggage down on the platform to wait until train time.

The villain of the outfit, having nothing else to do, strode over to where the antique model of a station agent was parked.

"I say, stranger," he began, "do the express trains ever stop here?"

"Wa-al," was the reply, "they did once for Jesse James."

His Circumstances

"So my good man, you are in straitened circumstances?"

"Straightened! Madam, if I was twins I'd be parallel."

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Annie Kwinski of 526 1st Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., writes that she became so weak and run-down that she was not able to do her housework. She saw the name Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the paper and said to her husband, "I will try that medicine and see if it will help me." She says she took six bottles and is feeling much better.

Mrs. Mattie Adams, who lives in Downing Street, Brewton, Ala., writes as follows: "A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and since taking it I feel like a different woman."

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grand-children, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

"Thousands of women past fifty, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are recommending it to their friends and neighbors."

High in Quality— Low in Price

Motorists are beginning to learn that there's a big difference in tires, although they all look pretty much alike.

Some are made with skimpy, short staple cotton. Some have an overdose of "filler" in the rubber of the tread. Some are long on looks and short on quality.

But you won't need a microscope to be sure that the Goodyear Tire you get from me is a real buy. Goodyear mileages tell the story.

Goodyears are performing so satisfactorily for my customers that they invariably come back—not with a kick but with a boost, and for another Goodyear when they need tire equipment.

The Affable Stranger.

On the coast of New Jersey, some twenty miles south of Barnegat, lies the little village of Stralmsmouth. To the eastward a promontory guards the town from winter gales; but except for this barrier you will see, to north and south, nothing save barren sand-dunes, stretching away for miles on mile, bleak and untenanted, a very picture of desolation. At intervals rotting timbers, bordering the shore, tell where some stout vessel has laid her bones; but for the most part the dunes here, a monotony of white and glistening sand; the waves, in the summertime, breaking gently on the shelving beach, but in winter tearing and rending it with murderous rage, the huge green rollers towering toward the shore, to crash and thunder into an avalanche of foam and flying spray.

Thus you may see that Stralmsmouth was, of necessity, an isolated spot. Eight miles to the north of us, Cedar Inlet had grown, as we were forced to admit, into "quite a town," with wharves and shipping, and a brisk trade with many points in the interior. And, to the south of us, Norton's Cove had flourished also, though we remained what we had been for nearly a hundred years, a peaceful fishing hamlet with a daily routine as colorless and monotonous as the dunes themselves.

Amid these quiet surroundings I was born in the year seventeen hundred and forty-nine. My father, like nine-tenths of the citizens of Stralmsmouth, was a fisherman; an upright, God-fearing man, not over large but sturdy and strong. He was not blessed, I think, with much imagination, but was content to do his daily tasks as they came to him, with his thoughts centered first of all upon the weather, and after that upon the affairs and fortunes of the town. My mother, on the other hand, must have been an unusual woman, but my memories of her are faint and dreamlike, for she died when I was ten years old.

"Alas! how many a lad must say, as I do: 'If my mother had only lived!' Not that I am trying to excuse myself in any way, but I think nothing could have made more difference to me than her death, for it was the next nine years which formed my habits and my character. Fortunately, I met no great temptations; but my father, a heartbroken man, took little interest in me, with the natural result that I did chiefly those things which I liked to do, and omitted many others which I should have done. Thus, at the time my story begins, I was in many respects below the average for boys of my age. For one thing, I was not a good scholar, nor was I fleet of foot, though I was large and strong, and at wrestling could throw anybody in the town. Yet since I had followed shooting and fishing all my days, I had acquired one accomplishment to a really remarkable degree, namely, a deadly accuracy in the use of firearms. I had a splendid rifle, which had been my grandfather's; it was of English make, clasped and ornamented with silver, and would speed a bullet true and straight, with scarcely the deflection of a hair's breadth from the mark.

I do not claim, of course, that I was a marksman by instinct; my progress was one long course of experimenting, and of profiting by my mistakes. First, I mastered the art of shooting at a stationary mark, trying charges of different strength, and calculating, at various distances, how much I should allow for the drop of the bullet. Soon no squirrel, no matter how tall the tree in which he sought refuge, was safe from my aim; then wild ducks swimming on the water out of reach of my shotgun paid tribute to my skill; and at last, after innumerable failures, I began to acquire the really difficult art of bringing down, with a single bullet, wildfowl actually upon the wing. Not, of course, that I could do this at every attempt, but I succeeded often enough, at least to prove that it was no accident, while no one else in the village could do it at all.

Here, then, as nearly as I can draw it, is my picture at nineteen. A very ordinary boy, but absolutely healthy and normal, and not, I am glad to think, mean or vicious in any way, although I was fast reaching the age when instead of staying at home, I liked to spend the spare hours in the daytime at the wharf, which was the loafing place for the town, and my evenings at the tavern, where much good ale was drunk, and a great deal more went on which, was, I fear, less wholesome than the ale. And with this introduction my story really begins.

It was about four o'clock on an evening in late October, in the year seventeen hundred and sixty-eight, when I left the cottage, and as usual, with rifle on shoulder, bent my steps toward the wharf. For the last two days I had been visiting my cousin at Cedar Inlet, and I was thinking now of how fine a place it really was, with its stately houses, and its shops, and the stir and bustle of the wharves, with the bark Eastern Star, loading for a trip to the West Indies, and due to sail on the following morning. That, I reflected (without the faintest vision of what the morrow held in store for me) would be a glorious adventure and in a vague way I began to picture to myself what the West Indies were like. Geography was a weak point with me, and I think it must have been India that was really uppermost

In my mind, for I remember that I peeped the woods with elephants and tigers, and the ocean with tall vessels laden with treasure, keeping a wary outlook for gentlemen of fortune flying the black flag. But if my tigers and elephants were some distance from their native haunts, yet my pirates were located with propriety, for here was an industry which had existed for many years in the Caribbean, and in spite of the march of progress still flourished as handsomely as of old.

I found the wharf almost deserted. Aaron Parker, old and silver-haired, was, as usual, fishing at the end of the pier, his long legs dangling over the edge, his tin can, filled with bait, by his side. Propped against a stand, close at hand, was his old, disreputable-looking shotgun, and I soon perceived that his thoughts were equally divided between fishing and gunning; for he turned at my approach and pointed out to sea to where, perhaps a hundred and twenty-five yards distant, a flock of half a dozen sea-ducks were swimming slowly along, every now and again diving in search of food. Toward this little flock, peaceful and unsuspecting, Aaron was casting longing eyes.

"There, Dick, my boy," he said tactfully, "is what I'd like for tomorrow's dinner. They've just set my mouth watering. A dozen times I've started to get into my boat, and scull down on them, but I've tried that trick so often that I know it's no use; they would take wing before I got within range. And I was saying to myself, 'Wouldn't it be fine if Dick Lindsay should come along and shoot me one with his rifle?' And then I look up, and sure enough, here you are, just in time. Rest your rifle on the rail, Dick; wait till they draw together a little, and I'll bet you'll get me one."

I was about to comply when the sound of voices made me turn around, and I saw two of the hunters of the village, Isaac Holmes and William Ogden, coming down toward the wharf, rifles on shoulders, Isaac with a bunch of gray squirrels in his hand. As they joined us, Aaron seemed to forget his beloved sea-ducks for a moment, for he inquired eagerly, "Has your man come back, William?"

Ogden shook his head. "No," he answered in a tone betraying some anxiety; "and here it is almost five o'clock. A little after noon, was what he said. And yet he appeared to be an honest man."

"What is it all about, William?" I asked. "What man are you talking of?"

"Why," he explained, "day before yesterday a stranger came to town and said he wanted to hire a horse and buggy for two or three days. He said he would take good care of the rig and would return today, probably a little after noon. And I let him have the white mare and the best buggy."

"I think you were foolish," I said bluntly, "to trust a stranger like that."

"Well," Ogden defended, "he gave me a fancy price, and paid half of it down. After that I didn't exactly want to say no, especially as he had the money right in his hand, and had a pleasant way with him besides. I think he'll be back. What do you say, Isaac? You saw him."

"I say he'll keep his word," returned Aaron comfortingly. "I'll venture he's an honest man. Give him until sundown. If he doesn't come then, why—" He broke off suddenly to listen, for Isaac had the sharpest ears of any hunter in the town. "I'll be mightily mistaken—" he went on slowly; then, shading his eyes with his hand, peered down the road, and cried in sudden triumph, "Thought so! There he is now!"

Around a turn concealed by trees there appeared, sure enough, the familiar figure of the white mare with the best buggy in town, both evidently in excellent condition. William hastened forward, with relief written upon his face, and held the mare while the stranger alighted.

"I fear I am late," he acknowledged as he came forward, speaking to William, but as it seemed to me taking us all in at a glance. He had a pleasant voice and prepossessing manner; his face was bronzed, as from exposure to wind and sun, he had a pair of bright and penetrating eyes, and although he was not tall, he possessed an excellent breadth of shoulder and looked in all respects like a man who could take care of himself without help in the world.

He walked down the wharf as if glad of a chance to stretch his limbs; then all at once his eyes became riveted on the sea. "There is a pretty sight," he said.

It was clear to me that if he were not a sportsman he at least possessed a sportsman's instincts, for what had attracted his attention was a flock of perhaps twenty white-wings, flying close to the shore.

"They will decoy to the others," I cried instantly. "See if they don't."

And the next moment, as the birds in the air perceived their companions feeding peacefully below them, they yielded, as I had predicted, to the social habits of their kind; and swinging gracefully toward the water, they set their wings, wheeled in a wide half-circle, and splashing into the ocean, began what appeared to be an amicable conversation with their hosts.

Aaron's interest in his next day's dinner was revived. "There's your chance, Dick," he begged. "You couldn't miss one now."

The ducks, indeed, as the two flocks massed close together, offered a tempting mark. But instead of shooting I turned, with what for me was unusual deference, to the stranger. I do not think it was politeness on my part, for I was not overburdened with that quality; but rather that I had sense enough to see that this man, in spite of his quiet dress and quiet manner, was, in some way difficult to explain, distinctly above the rest of us; and accordingly I did not feel at my ease in attempting to display my skill before him. And so I said, "Perhaps this gentleman will try the shot."

He looked at me rather approvingly. I thought, and with a glance that seemed to be taking stock of me. But he declined my offer with a smile. "I thank you," he answered, "but I am only a humble merchant. Of such matters"—and with a gesture he indicated the guns stacked against the rail—"I am ignorant. If you wish to insure the safety of the game, I will shoot. But as our friend here seems anxious to have one for dinner, I think I had better not make the attempt."

He spoke as if he were telling the truth, and yet, in some way that I could not quite yet have explained, I felt that he was not so ignorant as he appeared—that he knew enough, if he chose to admit it, about guns and rifles and how to use them. But this I could not very well say, and Aaron was quick to assent.

"That's well spoken, sir," he agreed. "Now, Dick, something may frighten them. Go ahead and shoot."

"All right," I agreed. "And Isaac and William will fire, too. With three bullets we ought to get at least one duck."

But Aaron did not wish to run the slightest chance of losing his dinner. "No, Dick," he objected, "no disrespect to the others, but you're the boy to do the shooting. They will lend you their rifles; put them side of you, and when you've fired your own piece lay it down and give 'em two more shots as they go off. You'll do that for an old man, won't you, boys?"

To my embarrassment, both Isaac and William responded by doing as Aaron suggested. The stranger eyed me curiously. "You seem to enjoy quite a reputation," he observed; and added, I thought a trifle mockingly, "but a reputation has its drawbacks. It's not always easy to live up to it."

Somehow his words nettled me. They were courteous enough, but in his whole manner I seemed to read disbelief—a feeling that I was not nearly such a marksman as my friends made me out to be. And I determined that if I ever drew a bead straight in my life, I would do so now.

"There's only one way to tell," I answered somewhat shortly; and without in the least realizing how much, in the future, was to depend upon the accuracy of my aim, I walked out to the end of the pier, and banishing all thought of my audience from my mind, forthwith concentrated my energies on the shot before me.

To begin with, I leaned the rifles of Isaac and William against the rail, where I could easily grasp them, and then did not scruple to take advantage of the added steadiness to be obtained from shooting with a rest. I leveled my piece, waited until I had three big black fellows in line, and carefully noting the position of the rest of the flock, pressed the trigger. Then, without waiting to see the result of my shot, I put down my piece and seized Isaac's rifle. It took a moment for the thin cloud of smoke to dissolve, and when it did I found, as I had expected, that the frightened ducks were already taking wing. They are, however, in comparison with a widgeon or a black duck, slow flyers, and I had ample time to focus on four birds close together, and to direct my aim, by allowing the proper headway, at them. Once more, without an instant's delay, I laid down the second rifle, grasped hastily for the third, and though, by this time, the ducks had not only gained considerable speed, but considerable distance as well, my good angel stood by me and I dropped a gray bird from the center of the flock. Then, and then only, still holding the smoking rifle in my hand, I looked, not without apprehension, to see whether or not my earlier shots had reached their mark. I shall never forget the sight that met my gaze. There, an equal distance apart, three birds, two blacks and a gray, floated stone-dead on the quiet water.

I was the center of quite a demonstration. Aaron, with a glorious dinner before his eyes, was naturally the most delighted, but the stranger was a close second, and as if desirous of making amends for his disbelief, complimented me most handsomely on the accuracy of my aim, and crowned the occasion by insisting that we should all adjourn to the tavern, where he could complete his payment to William and at the same time, as he was kind enough to phrase it, "drink a health to the straightest-shooting young man he had met in many a day."

Naturally, we all accepted with alacrity, all of us, that is, except Aaron, who was too intent on retrieving his coveted game to go with us at once, but who earnestly assured the stranger that he would be with us directly and would make an honest effort to dispose of his fair share of the ale.

Once seated at the round table in the tavern, with two or three of its regular patrons added to our group, and with an unlimited supply of ale for all, it was not long before tongues were wagging freely. The stranger was a merchant, he told us, and admitted that these were times when a trader could make excellent profits, provided he was willing to run some risk. But—and he lowered his voice and glanced apprehensively about him—he had heard—we must remember that he was but a simple merchant and knew nothing of the sea—he had heard lately much talk of villainous pirates who were leaving their usual haunts in the Caribbean, and working farther and farther north, so that shipping along the Atlantic seaboard was no longer safe. And with this introduction of the subject everyone began talking in concert. Aaron, who had deposited his sea-ducks in a corner and was doing his utmost by inroads on the liquor to make up for lost time, began to tell the stranger of "Bloody" Carleton and his brig; Isaac was recounting horrid tales of the notorious Starkey; and finally some one, I know not who, for by this time the strong ale was humming in my ears, mentioned the name of the Black Panther.

"Aye," cried the stranger, "what of this Black Panther? I have heard the name more than once in the last few weeks, and always it is a different story. I should be glad to learn the truth."

"What am I to do with this?" he asked.

"A Job by Any Other Name—"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE modern Rip Van Winkle came back to his home town and rubbed his eyes in amazement. Of course, he had expected to find many changes in the place. The buildings along Main street were now handsome structures of brick and concrete, replacing the old frame stores with their "false fronts" which had given the impression that they were two stories high, even if they weren't. But it wasn't so much the altered architectural appearance that troubled this Rip Van Winkle. It was the unfamiliar legends on the fronts of the places of business which had him puzzled. The first thing which he wanted, of course, after his long sleep was a shave and hair cut, and guided to the place where he could obtain those attentions by the familiar striped barber pole (it wasn't a pole any more but a rapidly revolving cylinder encased in glass) he approached the place where Bill Jenkins' barber shop had once been. But what was this marvel of white tiling and porcelain in which he was welcomed by a suave individual dressed in white? It was a "Tonsorial Parlor and Beauty Shoppe."

"A job by any other name would still be a job but it wouldn't sound so important if we didn't call it a position or a profession"—to paraphrase Mr. Will Shakespeare. And in these modern days a Rip Van Winkle would find more than one example besides the conversion of "barber shop" into "tonsorial parlor," thus demonstrating the fact that making is engaged in "dressing up" the familiar occupations with exotic names which half conceal and half reveal their true nature. After all, there is a perfectly good reason for our doing so. Deep in all of us is the fundamental desire to dramatize our lives; and to hide the drab realities under some glittering cloak of fancy.

As to which class of men started this business of "dressing up" occupational nomenclature, it is difficult to say. Time was when we were ushered into this world by the old family doctor, but now it is done by an obstetrician. An undertaker used to usher us out, but now its done by a mortician. In between those two most important events we are served in various ways by the greatest variety of persons, all of whose titles indicate that they are specialists in this age of specialization. Formerly when we wanted to buy a home or a farm we went to a real estate agent. Now we carry the tale of our land hunger or our desire to conform to the tautological "Own Your Own Home" slogan by consulting a realtor.

We are kept in health by a great variety of medical men. The old family doctor managed to keep granddaddy and his family going with the standard remedies which cured a whole host of human ills, but if we want to make sure that we are hitting on all six, we must consult an army of these "new-fangled" specialists. If our eyelight begins to fail we don't go to the jeweler in our town and have him fit us with a pair of spectacles. Instead we make an appointment with an optometrist and pay him a fee in proportion to the length of his title. If we get the stomach ache we go to a diagnostician who looks us over and then sends us to the proper specialist for our particular disorder. If we get a toothache, the logical thing of course, is to go to the dentist's office. Only he isn't that any more. Dentist, meaning "tooth carpenter" wasn't dignified enough, but "gnathologist"—a word of Greek origin, meaning "a person versed in the science of masticatory apparatus"—is.

If the wife discovers that wrinkles are appearing in her face, she doesn't hide herself to a "beauty parlor," but she goes to a "Salon de Beauté" or consults a dermatologist. When she wants a new dress she doesn't have Mills Connell, the town dressmaker, come to the house to sew—the chances are that she has to call up "Mlle. Modiste," and make an appointment for a fitting, because the mornings are taken up with one of the cosmeticians or cosmetologists, or some other form of "beautician."

What has become of the boy or girl who used to clerk in the dry goods or grocery stores? For one thing, the "groceries," which followed the cafeteria as inevitably as night follows the day, where the "serve-yourself" idea has reduced the necessity for so much "hired help," has put some of them out of an occupation. The others aren't clerks any more. They're salesmen and salesladies. When they were promoted to salesmen, the traveling salesmen—you know those "drummers"—and the stories they used to tell—ceased to be drummers and became "commercial travelers." The butchers and bakers so far have not aspired to adopt a "high-toned" name. Nor have the tailors. But the painters and paper-hangers are now "decorators." And the tinker is now a "tinsmith" or a "specialist in high-class repairs."

Not only have those who possess established places of business changed their titles, but some of those whose business takes them from door to door have also undergone a new baptism. Do you remember the hucksters who used to go about offering the housewife bargains in green vegetables? If she waited for them now her family would never get enough of vitamins A and B. No! She must telephone to the "Quality Market" and have the cabbage and string beans and spinach delivered. What, too, has become of "the old clothes man" who was once as much a sign of spring as the first robin? Well, the chances are that he has opened a place of business which he calls "An Appraisal Shop" or one which bears a legend "Clothing Merchant; Estimates Cheerfully Made."

Maoris Put Up Brave Battle for Country

The history of the Maoris of New Zealand is a most remarkable one. Primitive and even cannibalistic up to sixty years ago, they have in a brief space of years achieved equality with the white man.

It is hundreds of years since six large canoes, each holding about 200 persons, arrived there from the Tahiti archipelago. Maori tradition has preserved the names of the fleet now employs them. By the time of the British conquest the 1,000 people who had landed, utterly exhausted by their tremendous journey, had become 100,000—a small population for such a large territory.

No tribe ever exhibited such heroism in the face of European conquest as did the Maoris. In seizing New Zealand, Great Britain lost 15,000 soldiers, though the forces of the Maoris, armed only with old-fashioned wooden weapons, did not exceed 2,000. When peace finally came, the conquerors found they had a deep respect for the conquered.—Arnaldo Cipolla in La Stampa, Turin (Living Age).

His Orders

Alfred Austin, the poet, was in the office of an editor one day when a very young reviewer brought in a book which he had been given to criticize. Now, neither the reviewer nor the editor had read a page of that work and the former conscientiously wanted to know what lines the latter wished him to go upon.

"What am I to do with this?" he asked.

The editor just glanced at the cover and observed briefly:

"Give it a—!"

Literary Relics

Disciples of Samuel F. B. Morse, inventor of the telegraph, have found some of his original instruments and a library of books which he owned, at Pacific university in Forest Grove, Ore. The library includes several books written by the inventor's father, Dr. Jedediah Morse, a theologian and geographer, one of the rare volumes is Ptolemy's "Universal Geography," printed in 1542. There are also first editions of Cotton Mather's works on theology. Samuel Morse's brother, Sidney Edwards Morse, gave the instruments and the library to the university 50 years ago.

Mythical Prophets

Mother Shipton, the reputed English prophetess, is said to have lived in the time of Henry VIII. She is first heard of in 1641 in a pamphlet called "The Prophecies of Mother Shipton." Later many verses of "prophecy" were ascribed to her, and there is room for doubt that she ever existed.

British Gold Coinage

The standard gold of British coins contains twenty-two twenty-fourths (cents) of fine gold and two twenty-fourths of alloy. The fineness is 22 carats out of 24, which is equal to 916.16 out of 1,000. The standard alloy for coinage consists of one-half

BOYS MAY WORK THEIR WAY THROUGH COLLEGE

Arrangements are being made whereby 100 boys can work their way through the North Texas Agricultural College at Arlington on the half-time co-operative plan during the ensuing scholastic year. Three vocational courses will be placed on this basis: general electricity, auto mechanics and agriculture. The boys taking these courses will alternate between work and study. For a period of six weeks they will be in the classrooms; the college, receiving instruction in the principles and theories being at the foundations of the courses they pursue. This will be followed by another period of six weeks in industry where each boy will be assigned a job at which he may work for pay. The jobs, for the most part, will be in the electrical industries, with the automobile dealers and well equipped garages, on the up-to-date farms, and at the well appointed commercial dairies in the vicinities of Arlington, Fort Worth and Dallas.

In general, the boys will receive enough money while on the job for six weeks, if they are economical, to pay most of their expenses while in school the following six weeks. However, earning one's expenses while in school, or working one's way through school, worthy as that may be, is not the main object of the co-operative plan. That is a mere incident to it. The chief thing in view is its educational value—the proper union of theory and practice. College education is often criticized and even reviled for being impractical. Graduates are denounced as helpless—helpless because they have read about and been told about so many more things than they have ever had an opportunity to touch, handle and master in a practical way. It is just this weakness, so universally recognized in the American system of education, that the part-time, co-operative plan seeks to alleviate. Boys of limited financial means who desire to take advantage of this plan should apply at once to D. A. Nickel, registrar of the North Texas Agricultural College, Arlington, Texas.
