MISS MATTIERUE NEWTON HONORED

Mrs. S. C. Bodkin and Miss Mabel Schuppach entertained several members of the junior set Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Bodkin, honoring Miss Mattierue Newton, a graduate from the grammar school. The living room was artistically decorated with baskets of cut flowers.

Bunco was the diversion of the afternoon, the high score being made by Mildred Appel; Lorene Adams made second high score while Mae Stavley drew the cut prize.

Refreshments of jello with whipped cream, cake and lemonade were served. The color scheme of pink and green was carried out in the tally cards and decorations.

Church of Christ.
God created man for his pleasure (Rev. 4:11) but placed certain restrictions upon him. Because of his transgressions "Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."
God gives us all we have, life, food, clothes, friends, etc., and has provided a way of escape through Jesus Christ. "But how shall we escape if we neglect?"
Remember we must account for the use of our life.
"God's Purpose of Man," Sunday 11 a. m.
V. L. WUNNEBURGER, Minister.

Mrs. J. L. Neal and son of San Angelo is spending the week here with friends. Mrs. Neal will be remembered as Miss Ida Conner who was a member of the class of '15 of the high school.

LANDERS-LOWMAN

The wedding of Miss Ida Lowman and Mr. Roy Landers was solemnized Thursday afternoon, May 17, at the home of Rev. J. A. McMillan, Presbyterian minister, who read the impressive ceremony. Only a few friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony.

For the past two years Miss Lowman has been Home Economist teacher in our High School. She has made many friends due to her charming personality.

Roy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Landers of this city and has made many friends here. He is in the concrete business and is a successful young man.

Immediately following the ceremony the young couple left for the Carlsbad Caverns by auto where they will spend several days. They will make their home here.

The Times joins with their many friends in extending congratulations and best wishes.

Bridge Party.

Mrs. Shellie Barnes was hostess to the members of the Cactus Bridge Club at her home last Thursday afternoon. Baskets of wild flowers lent their attractiveness to the living room. The colonial idea was carried out in favors and score pads.

Mrs. Lee Williams made high score for the afternoon and Mrs. Tina East made second high score.

Refreshments of pineapple salad, saltines, mahogany cake and iced tea were served to three tables of players. Plate favors were old fashioned-candy bouquets.

BACCALAUREATE SERVICES SANDERSON HIGH SCHOOL CLASS

Commencement week at the Sanderson High School opened Sunday with the baccalaureate service for the graduates in the class of 1928, held at the Presbyterian Church at 8 p. m.

Ten splendid young and ambitious boys and girls received diplomas of graduation and the entire community as well as their parents are proud of their achievement. The graduates are: Ruth Smith, Willie Mae Green, Louise White, Lorene Harrell, Irene Haley, Jack Cavender, John Hall, Ernest Miller, John E. Landers and Buster Kilpatrick. Seats were reserved for the members of the graduating class and their parents. The floral decorations of the church testified to the sincere interest of the community, in this great event in the lives of these young people and the services opened to one of the largest audiences that we have ever had for Commencement Week.

Rev. I. E. Owens, Baptist pastor, opened the services with the reading of the scripture and the offering of prayer.

Mrs. R. S. Wilkinson, W. H. Cobb, Jack Stovell, Albert Schuppach and Ernest Farley furnished special music for the service, and Harry McAdams sang a solo. Then the baccalaureate sermon was delivered by the Rev. J. A. McMillan.

Rev. McMillan's sermon was truly one of the strongest that Sanderson has been privileged to hear, and while addressed primarily to the young graduates who are about to realize the responsibilities of life, yet the appeal was equally fitted to the older people in his audience, who have already begun or moved far along life's pathways.

As expressed by the speaker the attributes of a successful life are well likened unto "Four Penns in a Pod," and that those penns represent in turn the preparation that one makes for life's work; the early conceived plan of life or purpose; the energy, the push and the ambition to succeed in the life that we have planned for ourselves and last but not least of these four penns, piety in life.

A most masterful sermon and one calculated to make all ponder, the manner in which has been set to use the preparedness, purpose, push and piety of our lives. The speaker not only charged the members of the graduation class that these four great attributes of success were in fact prerequisites of successful lives, but that in this day of specialization men and women who have not prepared for life and who have no plan or set purpose in life must inevitably result in failure, that having these attributes the degree of the individual success is then based upon energy, the push and manner in which each person utilizes these talents. Last, that having by reason of preparedness, purpose and push set upon life's pathways yet we cannot be a success without piety, that is that our lives be not molded with a single selfish ideal of personal advancement but that into each life that recognition of the rights of those about us, a service to others, radiating a spirit of humility and piety in ourselves by rendering the service to others that every successful life must reflect. The speaker likened that selfish purpose unto the life of Napoleon and the life of piety and service to the great and good George Washington.

Auxiliary Meets.

The Women's Auxiliary met Monday at Mrs. W. E. Lea's with 16 members present. After a short business session Mrs. N. E. Chalton, as leader, conducted a most helpful and interesting program regarding our birthday parties in the previous years with special emphasis on this year's birthday party which will be given the latter part of the month.

Next Monday they will meet at the church for Bible study.

Mrs. H. R. Laurence visited relatives and friends in Fort Stockton several days last week.

Frank Wedin of Marathon was a business visitor here Monday.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her So Much

Kingston, Mo.—"I have not taken anything but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for 18 months and I cannot praise it enough. I weighed about 100 pounds and was not able to do any kind of work. My housework was done by my mother and my out-of-doors work was not done. I have taken four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and now I am well and strong and feel fine. I got my sister-in-law to take it after her last baby came and she is stronger now. I cannot praise it enough."—MRS. HATTIE V. EASTIN, R. 1, Kingston, Missouri.

She Forgot, but—

Recently Capt. William A. Smith, attorney general, had occasion to investigate the mystery of a jail door that had been left open in a certain Kansas county. A young man charged with bootlegging had walked out into liberty. It cost the state considerable money to return him to the jail. The investigation finally revealed that the blame attached either to the jailer or to his wife. When questioned the jailer's wife admitted: "Yes, I left the door open." "Why did you do that? did you forget to shut it?" "Yes," she replied, "I forgot to close the door, but I still think it a sin and a shame to keep that nice looking boy in jail."—Kansas City Star.

Lust of Power Great Peril That Faces Stability of the American Nation

By REV. DR. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK, New York.

MANY sins come out of weakness, but all the great tragedies of history have come from the Pilates who could say, "Knowest thou not that I have power?" Look at our nation today. Where is the real peril of the republic? To be sure, we are facing a dangerous situation from the kind of crime that is bred in city slums, that rises in gangs of youth, often degenerate, who commit murder and spend most of their lives intermittently in prison. But the republic will not ultimately go to pieces over that situation. There are, however, men of ability—they might even hold positions in the President's cabinet, they might even rise to the highest places in America's industrial life where, at the top, the competition is terrific and sieves out all but the ablest.

"They are not feeble-minded, but like Pilate in the magnificent administrative system of Rome, have risen to the top because strong, and such men in the last few years, defying the courts, despising the government, contempting the people, have presented to the world one of the most devastating spectacles of political corruption in the history of government. And as they propose to get away with it you can hear the echo of the old words, "Knowest thou not that we have power?"

There are two kinds of disaster—one caused by destitution and weakness, the other by misused wealth and power. And sometimes it is hard to say which is worse. But there is always hope in power. Think of the opportunity some of you business men have in an industrial situation whose crucial difficulties come not from feebleness but from tremendous strength; to stand in your influential place and say, "I have power to release Christ." Think of the opportunity that we as a nation have in working for peace against war. That goal never can be reached without us. God further to their favorable end the present program of multilateral treaties outlawing war for us as a nation have power to release Christ.

Old Time Distinctions Between Right and Wrong Becoming Sadly Confused

By BISHOP MANNING (Episcopal), New York.

The old sanctions have lost their meaning for great numbers, who are today adrift both spiritually and morally. Once they knew what was right and what was wrong; now they are confused. They see things tolerated, excused, defended by those in high places, by some even calling themselves Christians, which a short time ago would have been condemned. We see such things as free love, companionate marriage so-called, easy divorce discussed, presented in reputable papers and magazines, as though there were two sides to those things.

We need a clear call to the standards of Jesus Christ. He leaves us in no doubt as to where we stand on those questions and others like them. Christ himself is our moral standard.

People cannot advocate, defend and practice such things as companionate marriage and easy divorce and still be respectable members of society.

Present-Day America Given Over to the Idolatry of Pleasure

By REV. DR. J. C. MASSEE, Boston.

If I were asked to name the god of America, I would erect an idol of pleasure and say "Here is your god, oh America." The idolatry of pleasure is more prevalent than any other idolatry in America these days; the mad scramble for indulgence of the senses; the wild pursuit of thrill; the idolatry of dress and of lawlessness. Pleasure in the life of America, in the church, and in the life of the individual, has a far greater formative influence than Christ.

The use of tobacco by women is a sign that while men are becoming more conservative, women are tending in the other direction. I am not saying that women ought not to smoke. But I would estimate that 50 per cent of the women do smoke, and I think that the most symptomatic thing in our age. If I read the signs rightly, it means that while men are going more and more toward conservatism, women are headed in the opposite direction.

Great Mission of Country's Women's Clubs Is Spread of Political Education

By MRS. WILLIAM R. ALVORD, Women's Clubs Official.

The education of women for the discreet use of their vote has progressed far since the passage of the Nineteenth amendment. But there is still a lot to do and it can best be done through women's clubs throughout the country. Women must realize that even when there is not a clear-cut line of demarcation between two candidates for an office, she should still study the situation and the candidates' qualifications before she lets pass the chance to register her choice.

There is extensive missionary work to be done by the organized women of the country among the unorganized. Club women have an opportunity of gathering valuable information on the political situation and are taught the immense importance of a wise use of their vote. These women should instill the same principles in the nonmembers, not for the purpose of obtaining their membership, but for the purpose of getting out the woman's vote.

Giving Judge More Power Would Aid Administration of Criminal Law

By EMORY R. BUCKNER, Ex-United States Attorney.

The judge should be the thirteenth juror and the third lawyer in the American courtroom. The judge is perhaps the most experienced man in the courtroom, and yet he is padlocked to such an extent he does nothing but preserve order and rule on objections while the partisan lawyers work on the jury. When the judge charges the jury he must not give the slightest indication of his own views. Instead, he confines himself to the seldom-understood law, or if it is a review of the facts he must not indicate his own judgment of truth.

The administration of criminal law needs many other reforms, but unpadding our judges would work a miraculous change overnight. If the judge thinks that the defendant has been proved guilty, let him tell the jury so. Why the secret? Why the mystery? If he thinks the defendant has not been proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt he already has the power to direct an acquittal.

Love's Tribute

To you men who spent weary months in barren, gloomy training camps in remorseless drudgery.
To you who went over seas and under agonizing fire and shivering torturing gas, never faltered or failed.
To you who defied submarines and a nameless grave in the ocean and landed our army in France.
To those who are still suffering from wounds and gas, shell shock and disease.
To those who died.
Our prayers, our love and our tears.

Memorials Call Living to Duty

This is the season when God's acre, to use a name favored by the Pilgrim Fathers, is at its loveliest. Nature is kind to even the meanest and most neglected burying place, carpeting the sunken grave with the softest green and glorifying the crumbling headstone with clinging vine and fragrant blossom. This is the season when the well-kept cemeteries are bowers of beauty, and the Gracelands, the Greenwood, the Woodmeres, of the great cities, are visited by mourning multitudes who do not forget to remember. All over this land of ours are patriots' graves. The bones of five wars rest in the soil of the country for which they died. Linked together inseparably is the youngest who died in the World War with the oldest who gave his all in the War of the Revolution. Roses and lilacs; fuchsias and lilies; flags and insigula; songs of thrush and cardinal; bugles sounding taps; thin wavering line of the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic; strong, sturdy and youthful veterans of the last great conflict—what memories Memorial day brings, how costly is a nation's achievements in brain and brawn and blood!

It is a good and wise thing to muse amid the monuments and memorials where sleep those who loved the nation well enough to defend its principles and die for the preservation of its integrity. A journey to Mount Vernon just to stand five minutes before the tomb of Washington is worth all that it costs in time, money, even to those who live clear across the country. A pilgrimage to Springfield to dream by the hillside where the dust of Lincoln rests amidst the prairies that he loved and in the old town where his children used to play, is an education for the heart. What lessons at the graves for those of us who live—lessons of loyalty, sacrifice, and high service!

Visiting Graves of Brave Men They Led

The American lads lying beneath the crosses in France received their measure of commemoration in the observance of Memorial day last year. General Pershing, their commander, Marshal Foch, Ambassador Herrick, high officials of the French government and representatives of the American, French and British veterans' societies joined in honoring the hero dead.

A special service was held in the American cathedral in Paris and similar ceremonies in the American churches in other cities and towns. The French joined with the Americans in decking with flowers all the American war cemeteries. Photograph shows Marshal Foch and General Pershing inspecting graves of American heroes in the cemetery at Arrones.

Australia Has Unique War Horses' Memorial

The illustration shows a Purple cross memorial to war horses erected at Victoria, Australia. The Purple cross is an organization to help dumb animals. The memorial is a granite watering trough with a small dish for dogs at one end. It is surmounted by an electric globe on which is figured a purple cross. The motto of the society is, "Handle horses humanely."

To those we loved—where've gone say!

CLOTHES IDEAS FROM ABROAD

By Mae Martin

Last fall when I was in France, I admired the dress which the daughter of our hostess was wearing, and she confessed it was three years old, originally rose-beige, now dyed a rich, deep shade of red! The French are eternally surprising you with thrifty little tricks like that—tricks which it pays to imitate.

Most of us have dresses which, if allowed to remain their original color, are discarded or seldom worn. Redyed, they become favorites again.

Just get a package or two of true, fadeless Diamond Dyes, and try your hand at tinting or dyeing. You'll be amazed to see how easy it is to use Diamond Dyes. They never disappoint you. The "know-how" is in the dyes. They are real dyes like those used when the cloth was made. They never give things that redyed look, like make-shift, inferior dyes. The more than sixty colors you can get from them include everything that's fashionable.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's FREE. Write for it NOW, to Mae Martin, Home Service Dept., Diamond Dyes Burlington, Vermont.

Esther and Jimmy are the grandchildren of the president of a union of the W. C. T. U. One afternoon they were very busy "keeping house," the former being "mamma" and the latter "daddy." At the end of their play meal, Esther picked up two toothpicks and handed them to Jimmy, with the remark:

"Here is your cigarette and here is a match. I'll have mine later."

Their grandmother and mother still are puzzled to understand the episode.

proving ITS CHAMPIONSHIP HERITAGE

ON April 26, two strictly stock Erskine Club Sedans each traveled 1000 miles in less than 1000 consecutive minutes.

The run took place at Atlantic City Speedway, and was supervised by officials of the American Automobile Assn. who verified the stock design of the cars.

As a result, ten new records for stock cars under $1000 were established by the Erskine Six. And Studebaker has demonstrated that its 76-year-old traditions for careful building are carried through in the design, materials and workmanship of this low-priced fine car—named for Albert Russel Erskine, Studebaker's president. That is why this car was able to travel 1000 miles at better than a mile a minute—why you can drive your Erskine Six 40 miles an hour even when NEW—why the Erskine is so economical to maintain and to operate.

A drive in the New Erskine will introduce you to a type of performance as sensational for its price class as that of the World's Champion Commander is to the field of higher priced cars.

John Perkins stated that the major planks in his platform would be the development of agriculture, livestock, and the mining industries of West Texas; the up-building of all educational institutions now located in West Texas; the conservation of natural resources and the progressive development of same; with special attention paid to the great reserves of petroleum and natural gas.

CAMP CHATTER.

Last week Mr. Palmer and myself went to Camp Fawcett on the Nueces and met about a dozen of the men from Rockspings, Camp Wood and Barksdale, had the noon day meal at the Boy Scout camp site, and conference with the men in a season of fine fellowship.

Everything looks lovely for a fine camp this summer. The people of the Nueces Canyon are showing a fine spirit of co-operation in making the camp a success. Rockspings will see that the swimming holes are equipped with suitable spring boards, so that every boy may to "dive" and "twins" to his heart's content. Barksdale will dig the water well and open a good road from the highway down to the camp site. Camp Wood, not willing to be outdone, will build the boys a large float and place it in the swimming hole, that the boys may have a place and take their swimming tests in A-1 style. A few days before camp, all the communities will meet together to get the camp in final readiness for the opening August 1.

The communities of the Nueces Canyon are providing these things and giving of their time in a fine way and without cost to the camp.

I took a plunge in that old swimmin' hole, just to experience the thrill, and myself and the soldierly of Chaplain MacWilliams of Fort Clark, who by the way came all the way to do their bit for Scouting, tested the hole for depth and treacherous places. The hole is about ideal except—well, if Old Sal were his full duty from now until August 1, the water ought to be warm enough that a guy won't be drawn into the shape of a pretzel when he gets back to terra firma.

Those Fish Are Still There.

Some weeks ago, I told the boys of the area about those large suckers, and offered some advice about how to catch them. Since I wrote that I have learned that it is unwise to take fish with the aid of a copper wire trap. A good Scout will always back up and apologize when he is in the wrong. So now I say that unless you can catch those big suckers by some other method than "trapping" we'll have to let them stay right there in the swimming hole until they grow as big as whales. No Scout will ever knowingly violate the law, for one of the rules of Scouting is strict obedience to law. Throw your fishing tackle into your kit, but just forget to bring along any copper wire.

Trips of Inspection.

Now that I have taken back all my illegal advice about fishing, as any good Scout should and will, I have a word about some trips of inspection. The people of the Nueces Canyon promise to furnish plenty of trucks to take the boys by patrols to see the "Sink Hole," a "Freak of Nature," some miles away. Also there is "Painted Mountain," which is all dressed up in real "Indian skin." The Indians (real ones, too), will be able to explain these signs to the boys. This alone is an item of liberal education in the lore of the ancient red men. There is an Indian mound right at the camp site, and with no big amount of search perfect specimens of arrow heads may be picked up. The one hundredth Meridian crosses a mountain not more than one-half mile from the site of Camp Fawcett. A fine study for the boys, don't you think!

ILLU. Q. McCOCKLE, Camping Chairman.

MOTORISTS ARGUE FOR ADDITIONAL SAFETY MEASURES ON HIGHWAYS

Convince Officials of Perils on Many Crowded Roads—Prevention of Dust an Important Matter to Be Considered.

The White Painted Guard Rails Help to Make Curves Safe for the Motorist.

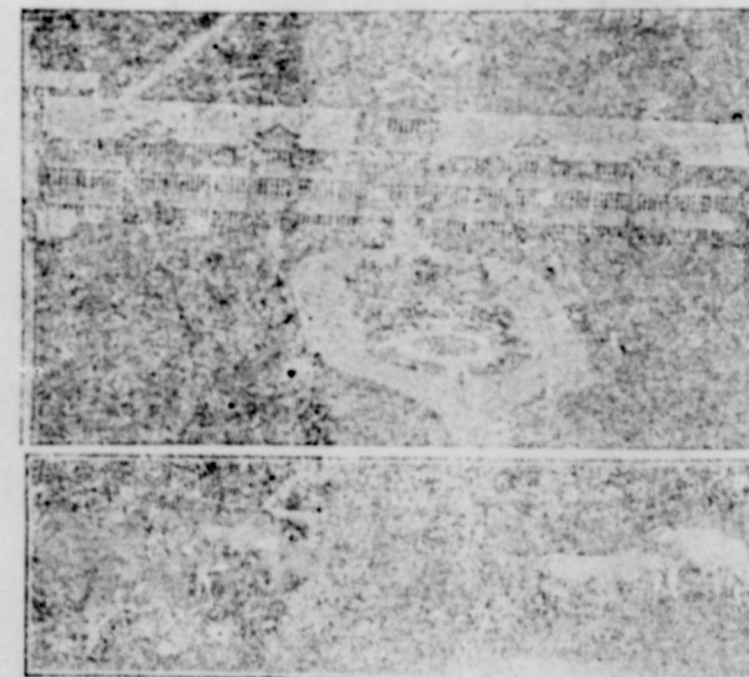

DESPITE the increase in the use of white painted guard rails, whitewashed traffic indicators of one sort or another and more elaborate danger signals, automobile accidents are steadily growing more numerous, automobile associations point out in reviewing the summer's carnage.

In some sections of the country, where motorists have been unable to convince officials of the perils in dust covered highways, the authorities are applying chemicals to the road surface, particularly calcium chloride, a moisture-absorbing material that has the dust. The prevention of dust is unquestionably a large factor in any safety list campaign.

The most important step to reduce the number of accidents will be the elimination of dust, in the opinion of those associations.

Dust, in spite of the greater mileage of concrete roads, is causing many accidents, a condition due in part to the constantly growing highway congestion.

Texas Sunshine and W. O. W. Hospital Save 2,000 Lives

W. O. W. Hospital at San Antonio, Texas, a landmark in the world's history of tuberculosis treatment.

Texas, I have always appreciated the Texas climate and sunshine, and when we decided to build a big hospital I appreciated the fact that the hospital would do a great deal in saving the lives of Woodmen of the World members afflicted with tuberculosis, but I also knew that more important than all in the saving of life would be the Texas sunshine.

The Woodmen of the World Hospital represents an investment of more than one million dollars. The hospital consists of 210 acres of land, completely equipped hospital, nurses' home, supervisor's building, gym and clubhouse. It is a free sanatorium for tubercular members of the Society and has 225 beds. It is managed by Dr. H. Phil Hill, a man of unusual executive and professional ability.

Every cent of its operation and maintenance cost comes out of a special hospital endowment, therefore, without cost to membership.

The hospital equipment was furnished without cost to the Society and the original grounds with the original building was also secured by Woodmen of the World without assessing the cost to members.

In connection with the hospital a registered Jersey dairy for the benefit of patients is maintained, also a hot and poultry yard, complete kitchen and farm, all for the benefit of patients.

Treatment, food, medicine, surroundings and every possible convenience is furnished in this institution.

IDLE ISLAND

By ETHEL HUESTON

STORY FROM THE START

On the verge of nervous collapse, due to overwork, Gay Delane, successful New York artist, seeks rest at Idle Island. She rents a cottage, the "Lone Pine," from an island character, the "Captain," and his sister, Alice Andover, "administrator." Gay finds the cottage is tenanted by an elderly lady, "Auntalmiry," who consents to move to another abode, the "Apple Tree." Awakening from sleep, Gay imagines she sees the face of a Chinaman peering in the window. On an expedition of the island Gay stands on the seashore, is horrified by the appearance of the drifting body of a drowned man, which she serves herself to bring to the shore. A bullet wound in the temple shows the man to have been murdered. Gay makes her way to the "Captain" with the story. Returning with him to the shore, they find no body there, and Gay's story of the incident is set down to an attack of "nerves." Gay, unable to convince her neighbors of the truth, draws a picture of the face of the dead man, intending to send it to the authorities. She meets a stranger, apparently another visitor, to whom she tells the story and shows the picture. He asks her to let him take it, but Gay refuses. Next day, after a night spent with "Auntalmiry," Gay finds the picture has been taken from the cottage.

"There you have me in a nutshell. The island dynamiter, burner and bomber. Got anybody you want blown up? Rand's home."

"Rand who?" she asked. Gay was amazed, that having heard the words a hundred times. "When Rand comes home," she had never felt sufficient interest to inquire, "and who is Rand?" Many times again would Gay Delane hear those words, but never again without a thrill of personal interest, hope and joy.

"Rand Wallace."

"Oh, you're another Wallace."

"I am not only another Wallace, I am a whole section of them. The Wallaces run in branches. I'm the third branch. All the other branches dwindle off into uncles and aunts, and nephews, sons and cousins. But I'm a whole series all by myself. It's quite a distinction."

Gay laughed as she pressed the electric button that turned the heat into her tea kettle.

"We'll have a party," she said. "We're so glad Rand's home. And while we are waiting for the water to boil—tell me, where does your series fit into the total ensemble of House Wallace?"

Randolph Wallace's version of the family history, a very factious, slipshod and slangy version, began with the first Captain Wallace who was his great-grandfather. The present Captain, he explained carefully, was really his great-uncle, although he called him Grand, because, as he explained, "all the other Wallaces call him Grand, and it avoids confusion." The administrator, Mrs. Alice Andover, was his great-aunt.

"Your voice, except that it has some expressiveness, is rather staccato of Maine," Gay said thoughtfully. "But you do not seem like the others. You are different."

"My father committed a faux pas," he confessed. "He married an actress from New York who was up here with the actors' summer colony one year. I," he said slowly, "I am the combustion that results from the union of Manhattan and the state of Maine.—It has been a warning to the whole state," he added modestly.

"Your parents—" Gay prompted, enthralled by his flippant tale.

"We were all out in a boat together. I can sort of remember it, though I was a baby. Sudden squall—boat went over—Strange, isn't it? They were both strong, able-bodied, good swimmers, used to the sea. I was a baby. But I floated ashore in my mother's arms. She was dead, my father was dead. But Rand came home."

"Oh, that is very sad." Gay's eyes had darkened with her ready sympathy, her slim hands twisted together.

He smiled at her. To hide her sudden emotion, Gay turned quickly to the serving of tea.

But her desire for information about this surprising person was limitless. She wanted to know about his education, where he had gone to school.

The grammar grades in the island schoolhouse, it seemed, he had persisted doggedly through, and took a great deal of quiet satisfaction in explaining that the three missing bricks beneath the window on the southeast corner had been removed by his own hands at the age of nine years, to facilitate his departure from the seat of learning when the teacher reached for the well-known educational birch branch. He entire high school course he had encompassed, if not with honor, at least without serious mishap, in the city of Portland.

"And then, darned if I didn't go to college," he told her. "But don't blame me, I had to go. My late lamented Grandfather Wallace put it into his will that I couldn't inherit until I went to college. Left me an infant in arms, as you might say, the arms of a guardian. Guess what? The administrator, darn her. That's what got her so stuck on administering, she did such a good job with me."

"It wouldn't hurt you to go to college."

"Going to college would be simple enough. I had to go through—I did.—Howdoin. I hated to go there, I was afraid I'd turn out a poet. I thought it was required for graduation. But Grand was dead set on Bowdoin. Well, I went. It did me no harm. I've never even written verses. Though sometimes I feel it come over me all of a sudden—I feel it now when I look at you."

Gay frowned at him, but he smiled disarmingly. His was a pleasant smile. His lips were thin, their curve half-cynical, half-humorous, very sensitive. The vaulted mustache was like a shadowy outlining fringe. His skin had been fair no doubt, save for the rich coat of tan that covered him. His hands were hard and brown, small for their strength, smaller than her own, she noticed quickly.

When he said at last, reluctantly, that he must go and see Auntalmiry she went with him to the door.

"Come again," she told him pleasantly; "come often."

"I feel myself slipping," he said slyly, "slipping. However, I am no coward. I'll come."

Later in the evening, Gay went down to the Pier grocery store. On every lip was the laughing word, "Rand's home." But whereas before she had taken no notice, now she experienced acute interest, paused breathless at the name, and drank in every word that fell from native lips on the subject of Randolph Wallace. The combustion of the union between Manhattan and the state of Maine was not entirely approved on the island, she gathered, but altogether loved, although the island never openly acknowledges its loves.

As the dusk fell she went out alone, unafraid into the little whispering forest, and walked up and down, slowly, deep in thought. The island seemed changed to her, warmer, softer. She felt vaguely troubled, vaguely pleased, strangely stirred. When her thoughts turned to the amazing young man and her surprising encounter with him her lips curved into tremulous smiles, and her eyes brightened with pleased expectancy. She shook her head at herself warningly. She was not deceived. She knew these symptoms. She liked but feared them also.

For the first time, the practical boyishness of her costume was distasteful to her, and when she got up on the morning after Rand's return, for the first time since she came to the island she discarded her knickers and sliden shirt. Half ashamed of the instinct that prompted her, but none the less obedient to its guiding, she took from her trunk a costume that was one of her chief treasures, a staid pajama suit, patterned after an improved Japanese style, all in black and fairly blue, the trousers long and wide, the coat, which was really an over-bouse reaching to the knees, richly embroidered, all soft lines and delicate curves. With dainty blue and gold slippers and sheer sliden hose, it was a delectable studio concoction, designed for theatrical effect, inspired for the enravishment of an audience.

Gay changed her easel, considering now not so much the allowance of good light for her work as unobstructed view for herself, and sat where the slightest turn of her eyes she could command the entire slope to the orchard below, and the lane that led from the pier to the Captain's house. Whoever ventured forth, must pass that way.

At ten minutes to eleven he came down jauntily and crossed into the orchard. Gay leaned forward. Did he turn left to the Apple Tree? No, straight toward the Lone Pine he made his way. Once he stopped to pick and taste and toss away a little green apple. Again he paused, to answer the eager calls of the boys at the pier. But he came on.

He came to a sudden halt outside the window, and stood a moment, spellbound. She looked up, then, and smiled.

"You are blotting out my sunshine," she said.

"I fondly hoped that I was bringing it," he returned impudently. "Don't get up. I always come right in."

He suited action to his words, and came and sat in the window-seat close to her elbow. Gay turned about in her chair and regarded him pleasantly.

"Is Auntalmiry here?" he asked apologetically.

"No, she isn't. Isn't she at the Apple Tree?"

"Well, I didn't really stop to see. I thought I'd better inquire here first. So she isn't here. Dear, dear, all that long walk for nothing."

"Not for nothing. I am just going to have my breakfast, and you shall have coffee with me."

Without moving from her chair, Gay swung up a wide tray that hung to the wall, and connected the electric toaster.

As she gave him a cup of coffee their fingers touched, and their eyes met flatteringly. Rand's speculatively smiling, Gay's a little cloudy.

As they drank their coffee slowly, she studied him furtively, noted his easy slouch in the comfortable window-seat, marked the brown arm on the window-seat. But she avoided meeting the merry gray eyes beneath the dark up-curling lashes.

"Do you flirt, Mr. Wallace?" she asked suddenly.

"Hope to tell you I do," he answered warmly.

"Oh! Then you need no warning. We have quite a wicked little flirt in the neighborhood, and I was going to warn you. But since you do, you can take care of yourself."

"Oh, I thought you meant yourself. I thought it was a sort of 'Help Wanted' like the newspaper ads. I was willing to apply."

Again the friendly, smiling silence. To one like Gay, whose religion was work, whose god accomplishment, it came as a distinct shock to know that this one, with the strong hands, the ready wit and the smiling eyes, was an idler, a dawdler on the face of the earth, that he had no profession and wanted none, no business and was glad of it, no ambition and delighted in its absence. He called himself a retired gentleman, and said it was a poor island that couldn't support at least one; in fact, he said, the entire state of Maine united to support him.

The Present Captain, He Explained Carefully, Was Really His Great-Uncle.

"But don't you do anything? You don't just loaf, do you?"

"Loaf! Certainly not. Bums loaf. Landed gentlemen—retire."

Gay scrutinized him gravely, remarked the muscular arms, the straight shoulders, the vigorous tan, the deep and understanding eyes. And he was an idler in this respect, land!

She shook her head regretfully. "A world full of things to be done," she said slowly. "And you do nothing."

He explained that for ten weeks he had been doing the coast of Canada with a photographer in a fishing schooner, getting pictures. He had returned to the island to finish up a little work he was doing on a motor launch, for Bemis, a lumber man at Bangor. He was to get the boat ready, and with a couple of men as

Special Folding of Bills Prevents Loss

With many men it is a common habit to carry a few odd bills in convenient pockets to save themselves the trouble of pulling out their wallets to pay for small articles purchased. Frequently these bills are folded in indifferent fashion and stuffed into pockets where other bills, folded with equal carelessness, may be reposing.

Bankers point out that this is apt to be a costly habit, as a bill may be dropped when some of them are withdrawn from the pocket. They point out that there is one proper way to handle bills thus carried; that is, by smoothing out the bills, placing them together, preferably with the smaller denominations on top and larger below, although that is entirely a matter of preference. Then one end of the little pile of bills is turned inward to the depth of about an inch or so and folded down, after which the bills are creased lengthwise down the center and folded over. Finally the narrow strip of bills is folded from end to end in the most convenient little wad.

In this way the bills are all locked together and there is no danger of any being separated and lost, while crew, take it to Miami in readiness for Bemis when he went down for the winter season later on. He had expected to finish the job on the island, he said, in three days, but now he was beginning to feel it would take him a week.

He said he had gone with MacMillan on one of his trips to the Arctic, had been to the Arctic circle twice, in fact, but he didn't like it. Said it was too cold. Wished somebody would plant the next pole in Florida or Mexico, nice warm place to look for things. He had been in the World War, and served overseas seven months. He said he did not like that either.

"Why not?" Gay was a little bitter. "Were you afraid? Or are you a pacifist? Or perhaps you had to get up too early in the morning?"

"No, I didn't mind those things. It was the uniform. I couldn't stand the uniform. The collar made my neck itch. My neck itched for fifteen months without stopping. One gets tired of it, that's all."

Gay's eyes were dark. She felt saddened. This aimless, planless, hopeless, dear young man violated her highest ideals, outraged her finest feelings. He was utterly impossible, she told herself furiously. But when her eyes met his, involuntarily she smiled. Impossible, but how pleasant to have him there in the window-seat at her side, drinking her coffee, smiling at her with the dark gray eyes beneath those softly curling lashes.

Ridiculous, she said to herself, that a man should have gray eyes and curly lashes.

Ridiculous, but something very disturbing, rather sweet, about it when one caught the full bright friendly glance of them.

CHAPTER V

Randolph Wallace indeed stood for everything in the world of which Gay Delane professedly disapproved. It was not merely that he did not work, but he disapproved of it on principle. He objected vigorously to the enthronement of Doing, which was Gay's god. He declared stoutly that labor in itself was a childish, ineffective thing, that the need for it was a confession of inferiority, that joy in accomplishment was not merely the last word in selfishness, but was also the sure mark of a narrow nature, lacking vision.

He asked Gay why she had never married.

"Because there is so much to do," she cried intensely. "Because I want to accomplish something in the world, get something done. Because I want to work, work hard, and work well.—Why don't you?" she ended mildly.

"Because life is too rare and fine a thing to be devoted to the mere grimy physical effort of doing this or doing that. Soul is too frail and too delicate to be enslaved in the chains of daily toil for board and keep."

Half the time, she realized that he was only laughing at her, making fun. But always she felt an undertone of serious conviction in what he said, always she felt in him the inherent yearning of pure spirit for freedom, more freedom, always more. Work, he declared, was confining, success was pinning, ambition the sternest slave-driver in the universe. Only in thought, desire, the soul was free.

Gay chafed restlessly at his easy indolence, his serene and apparently imperturbable calm. She knew that he could work, that, on occasion, he did work, desperately, both hand and well, with mind, with soul, with body. And more than that, he liked it. It was only the compulsion to work that he dreaded.

The Burr-Hamilton Duel

AARON BURR

ALEXANDER HAMILTON

SCENE OF THE BURR-HAMILTON DUEL

By ALFRED SANDERSON

THE most celebrated duel ever fought on American soil was that between Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton. Burr was the son of a clergyman. When twenty years of age he enlisted in the Army of the Revolution, and for his gallant and meritorious services during Arnold's expedition against Quebec he was rewarded with a major's commission. A little later he became aide-de-camp to General Putnam, and this was followed by a promotion to a lieutenant-colonelcy, carrying with it the command of his regiment. At the close of the war Colonel Burr was admitted to the bar, and rapidly rose to prominence. He was elected a member of the New York legislature, and his next elevation was his appointment to the office of attorney general of the state. In 1791 Burr was elected United States senator, and in 1798 he was again sent to the state legislature. He was a candidate for the Presidency in 1804. The election resulted in a tie between the highest candidates—Burr and Jefferson. The decision was thrown from the electoral college into the house of representatives, and Jefferson won. Burr was given the vice-presidency. In 1804 the Federalists nominated him for governor of New York. He was defeated.

Alexander Hamilton was born on the island of Nevis in the West Indies. He was the son of James Hamilton, a Scotchman, who married the divorced wife of a man named Levine. He was brought up in the island of St. Croix, and while engaged as a clerk in a counting house, he gave evidence of financial ability. He wrote occasionally for the newspapers, and his description of a hurricane attracted wide attention and led his friends to send him to New York to complete his education. He first went to school in Elizabeth, N. J., and then attended King's college—now Columbia university—in New York.

In 1776, when he was nineteen years old, he joined the Army of the Revolution as a captain in an artillery company and took part in many battles. The next year he was made aide-de-camp to Washington with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Following this honor came his appointment as inspector general. His next promotion was to a major generalship. It was as secretary of the treasury that General Hamilton won his greatest renown. Webster said of him: "He smote the rock of the national resources and abundant streams gushed forth. He reached the corpse of the public credit and it sprang to its feet."

As early as 1790 Burr and Hamilton became political opponents. They were the most powerful leaders of their day. Burr was generally acknowledged as the political boss of the state of New York. The rivalry between these two eminent politicians was intense and bitter, and was continued until the death of Hamilton at the hands of Burr.

Burr's unsuccessful campaign for the governorship of New York, while he was still vice president, was made as an appeal to the people for vindication of his course in politics. He had fallen out with Jeffersonian leaders, who were opposed by the Republican leaders, whose confidence he had lost. He was at this time in accord with what was known as the Democracy. He announced himself as an independent candidate. In this campaign Burr took exception to some remarks, alleged to have been made by Hamilton, leader of the Federalists, and demanded an explanation and an apology. Burr held Hamilton accountable for having declared, with Judge Kent, that "he (Burr) was looked upon as a dangerous man, and one who ought not to be treated with the reins of government." Several letters passed between the two men, and Hamilton's replies proving unsatisfactory, Burr challenged him.

Hamilton accepted the challenge, although he was opposed to duelling. On the night before his meeting with Burr, he made a written statement in explanation of his conduct, motives and views. "My religious and moral principles," he wrote, "are strongly opposed to the practice of duelling; and it would ever give me pain to shed the blood of a fellow creature in a private combat forbidden by the laws. . . . It is not my design, by what I have said to affix any odium on the conduct of Colonel Burr in this case. He has doubtless heard of antidivisions of mine which bore very hard upon him, and it is probable that, as usual, they were accompanied with some falsehoods. He may have supposed himself under a necessity of acting as he has done."

The Burr-Hamilton duel was fought in the morning of July 11, 1804, beneath the Heights of Weehawken, N. J. Burr with his party was the first to arrive on the scene. When Hamilton came a little later the two men exchanged salutations, and the secretary of the treasury that General Hamilton won his greatest renown. Webster said of him: "He smote the rock of the national resources and abundant streams gushed forth. He of position, and also to determine by whom the word to fire should be given. Hamilton won. The flat-top pistols were loaded and the duellists, taking their station, were instructed as to the rule governing the firing. This rule was that "the second who gives the word, shall ask them if they are ready, and being answered in the affirmative, he shall say 'Present!' The parties shall then present and fire when they please. If one fires before the other, the opposite second shall say 'One, two, three, fire!' and he shall then fire or lose his fire." Everything was now set for action. Hamilton's second gave the word "Present," as had been agreed upon, and both men presented and fired in succession—the intervening time was not precisely agreed on by the second when they made their detailed statement of the duel.

Burr, cool as an iceberg, raised his arm slowly and, taking deliberate aim, brought down his man. His bullet struck Hamilton in the right side, inflicting a mortal wound. As Hamilton fell his pistol was discharged, the bullet going upward through the trees. He was carried to the river bank and put on board a boat for New York. After reviving from a swoon Hamilton declared that he had met Burr with a determination not to harm him, and that "he forgave all that had happened."

The people of New York were shocked at the news of the duel and the subsequent death of Hamilton. The greatest excitement prevailed; flags were flown at half-mast; indignation meetings were held and Burr was denounced as a revengeful demon. The coroner's jury in New Jersey returned a verdict to the effect that Burr was guilty of murder and that both seconds were accessories. This was followed by an indictment for murder, which was never prosecuted.

Vice President Burr, fearing personal violence at the hands of Hamilton's friends, sought safety in flight. He spent several months in the South, and on March 2, 1805, he took leave of the United States senate over which he had presided.

Burr's defeat for the highest office within the gift of the American people was a most grievous disappointment to the ambitious statesman and probably led him, after his retirement from the senate, to attempt the founding of an empire to include Mexico and the southwest section of the United States, and of which he was to be the ruler. He was arrested, tried for treason, and acquitted. Burr died at the age of eighty, poverty-stricken and friendless.

No "Fixed Stars"

The positions of the stars with reference to one another seem to remain constant, although they are continually changing their places relatively, to objects on the earth. Hence the term "fixed stars." But this is only seemingly the proper expression. In reality all are speeding through space at very high velocities, but so indefinitely removed are the stars from us that they appear to be at rest. Although quite the reverse, as we know, from fixed, the term is still used, because in the astronomically brief period from generation to generation, the changes are so slight that the naked eye is powerless to detect them.

Pretty Greek Legend

In Greek mythology Narcissus was a beautiful youth, a son of Cephalus and the nymph Liriope, metamorphosed into a flower. For his insensibility to love he was caused by Nemesis to fall in love with his own image reflected in water. Unable to grasp this shadow, he pined away and became the flower which bears his name. The nymph Echo, who vainly loved him, died from grief.

Talking Parrots

The Mexican double yellow head is probably the best talking bird among American parrots. This is probably equal to the African gray, which is the Old world favorite. Parrots must be taught to talk while young. Older birds learn little and very slowly.

Famous Flyer Proved Himself "Good Sport"

A Boston woman teacher told this one about Commander Richard Evelyn Byrd:

When the aviator had been invited to dine at a girls' school before his lecture, the principal called all the seniors together and then told them: "Commander Byrd is a Southern gentleman. I want you to take particular pains with your manners. Also I do not want you to make a hole in your potatoes and put your gravy in it at dinner this evening."

As the pretty young things went into the dining room, one of them pulled the sleeve of the aviator's tunic and whispered, "Do us a favor?" Mr. Byrd smilingly nodded his consent, and she whispered:

"When make a hole in your potatoes and put your gravy into it." He nodded again, and when the gravy was passed he solemnly pressed down the gravy ladle in the center of his potatoes and filled the hole with the rich, brown sauce.

For a second there was a silence of astonishment. Then the favor-seeker giggled and the game was up.

True Spirit of Memorial Day

Memorial day, which was originally dedicated to the memory of the soldiers of the Union army in the Civil War, without whose services and sacrifice we should, as far as one can see, have had no Union, has broadened out. In truth it is not a war, but a peace day, and ought to be so regarded. For it testifies to the spiritual, as well as the material gains won for us by the brave men who had laid down their lives for the nation. While for many years the day has been observed rather as a holiday than a holy day—the present customs being nothing new except perhaps as they have been exaggerated—there have always been large numbers of our people, as there are today, who keep the day, in thought at least, as there are still those who fittingly observe it.

It is not likely that the people will ever forget what they owe to the brave men who fought their wars. The important thing is that they should capture something of the spirit that animated them, and show the same devotion to the country, the same regard for its honor and welfare. We need an army of peace, need it sorely, composed of men and women who will count nothing dear if only they may do something to make righteousness prevail in our national life—righteousness and true freedom.

The suggestion has been made that Memorial day be observed on the last Sunday in May. Thus it would be possible to emphasize the religious significance of the day. We only suggest that, if this is done, the day following be retained as a holiday. It has been for so long observed as such that it would be a pity to deprive the people of it. But whatever is or is not done in this way, our people should endeavor to draw some inspiration from the sacrifices that others have made, and vow that a country which has cost so much in blood shall be kept clean and true.—Indianapolis News.

Years Have Thinned Ranks of Grand Army

The ranks of the G. A. R. marchers on Memorial day are growing pitifully thin. But the old uniform makes the grizzled wearer throw back his shoulders; rheumatism is temporarily forgotten, palsy ignored; there is a martial step; the throbs of the drum, the nerve-tightening, muscle-tautening notes of the flute and fife; the thinning ranks march on to the final resting place of the comrades. Another Memorial day is here and we stop to honor the men who made the new United States; who took the broken pieces of an empire and put them together again.

"But we put our feet in water to make it nice and soft—oh, it is so delicious when it is soft."

"We don't eat anything that isn't clean, do we, mother?"

"You are right, my dears," said their mother.

She sat up high in a tree without any leaves even though it was summer time. She liked an old tree like this quite the best of all.

"It's so delightful," she said, "to keep house in a dead tree."

"And Daddy Raccoon, you are such a pleasant gentleman, and help so nicely with the marketing."

How the raccoon children laughed and played. And what a fine meal they had!

"When the summer is further along we'll have fun," said Daddy Raccoon.

"Why?" the children asked.

"Ah, then we'll steal corn from the corn fields. We'll go a-visiting where we can get goodies and summer vegetables from farmers."

"They don't ask us to come, it is true, but we don't bother about such little trifles as invitations."

Airplanes and Boomerangs

It seems a downright anomaly to go to the primitive inhabitants of Australia for points on an airplane, yet that is precisely what was done at one stage of the development of aviation. The fundamental principle of the airplane is both old and simple, having been discovered by the Bushmen of the Antipodes and embodied by them in the boomerang, which, by meeting in its flight the air at a slight angle, got a "lift."

The trajectory of the boomerang may be in part horizontal or may even rise as a result of this lift. Any surface that is more or less flat, which travels at a slight angle through the air, tends to lift. If the section has a slight camber, or convex curve, the lift is increased. Better results are obtained if a body of appreciable thickness is used instead of a thin sheet. Investigation will reveal little difference between the wing section of a boomerang made by the Bushmen or whittled by an American boy after he has visited the circus and has witnessed the "stunts" of the boomerang thrower.

Why Worry?

In one of the infant classes of a certain large school the teacher had noticed that a great friendship existed between John and little Joan, two of her pupils.

John was a bright youngster, but he wasn't disposed to work overhard, and his teacher had said that unless he worked harder he would not be moved up at the end of the year.

"You must try harder," she told him, "or you won't pass. And if you have to stay here another term you'll lose little Joan. How'd you like that?"

"Oh," replied John blandly. "I 'spect there'll be other little Joans."

What Baby Was Thinking

Elizabeth Ann, aged four, was taken to the hospital to see her new brother, three days old. He lay in the hollow of his mother's arm, his blue eyes wide open, and she stood gazing at him enraptured, till her daddy asked: "Well, Betty Ann, what do you suppose little brother is thinking?"

Elizabeth Ann answered: "I 's'pose he's 'finkin' if it's a nice place, and if he's gonna stay."

Didn't Bring Him Home

Little Jimmy was playing ball and his mother sent his father to bring him home. Dad got into the game himself. Pretty soon mother came out. "Why didn't you bring Jimmy home?" she asked.

"I tried to," said dad. "He was on second base at that, but I fouled out." —Wall Street Journal.

Junior-Senior Banquet.

The annual junior-senior banquet was held last Saturday evening at the Kerr Hotel when the juniors were hostesses to the seniors and the faculty. The luncheon table was beautiful in its decorations of baskets of flowers. To each senior's place card was attached a ribbon, the end of which led to a huge basket. On pulling the ribbon the seniors discovered their fortune for the future.

A plate luncheon consisting of fruit cocktail, chicken a-la-king, creamed potatoes, hot rolls, asparagus salad, pineapple sherbet and angel fruit cake was served.

Theatre Party.

Monday evening the members of the class of 1928 were given a theatre party by Mrs. Carlton White, manager of the Princess Theatre, where they enjoyed the picture, "Fashions for Women."
