RATTLE OF THE RAIL

Engineer R. R. Allen of El Paso has been assigned to a regular freight run at Del Rio.

Engineer J. P. Potter who has been running the night switch engine at Sanderson has returned to the extra board at Del Rio.

Engineer M. C. West and Firemen R. J. Cartwright and W. A. McGeehan of El Paso have been assigned to regular freight runs here.

Engineer N. E. Charlton now has a freight run here.

Fireman C. J. Pollock has returned to El Paso for a switch engine assignment.

The Mallet engines formerly numbered beginning 950 are now being numbered beginning at 900.

A number of 210-2 engines are being received from the Pacific System.

Fireman F. E. Brown and wife have returned from a trip to San Antonio.

Two extra passenger trains passed through west Sunday being the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

G. S. Wail, General Manager from Houston passed through enroute to El Paso Tuesday.

Grand Officer Honored

The Fireman Ladies, an auxiliary of the B. of L. F. & E., held an all day session last Saturday at Masonic hall. At this meeting they had as their guest Mrs. Mattie McLean, grand organizer and field worker from El Paso.

At evening the members gave a bridge party at the home of Mrs. Harry Newton in honor of Mrs. McLean. Mrs. D. A. Pollard and W. C. Barksdale were winners of the high score.

Refreshments of cake and coffee were served. At a late hour everyone departed and expressed themselves as having had an enjoyable evening.

Mrs. Adelaide J. Summers and W. A. Yarbo were married at Marfa on Feb. 27. Mrs. Summers formerly taught music here and her many friends wish her happiness.

What is a Boy Scout?

What fun he finds in hiking into the woods! He tells nothing from south by the moss on the trees, or east from west by the shadows.

He can talk to a brother scout across the river by signaling. He knows the principal trees, birds and animals; he knows the poisonous weeds and reptiles, he can find his way by the stars as did the Indians and pioneers before him.

If matches are forgotten he laughs and proceeds to kindle a fire by rubbing sticks together or by striking steel on flint. The fire once started what good things he can cook out there in the open! He keeps himself physically fit; he avoids poisons of alcohol and tobacco; he guards his tongue from loose speech or boasting or sacrilege. When he speaks of any one he tries to speak well of them.

His scout "good turns" to someone each day makes him many friends, for the way to a true friend is to first be one. His motto is "be prepared" and he thinks through in advance what he would do in fire or storm.

When someone is injured he is ready to help him with his first aid knowledge.

He always tries to be a useful citizen. He helps his community.

Another thing a scout enjoys is camping. There he finds fun in canoe or swim, finds new friends in woods and other fellows—and there among the trees or under God's silent stars, or by the camp fire's ruddy embers, he dreams out his great tomorrow.

Judge Henshaw is in Austin this week on several important business matters.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Denny left Wednesday for Concord, N. C., where they will spend about two months with Mr. Denny's brother and other relatives.

Ira Deaton was a business visitor in Del Rio last Friday and Saturday.

OIL NEWS OF TERRELL COUNTY.

The Keck-Pecos Trust just received a carload of casing direct from a factory at Memphis, Tennessee. This casing is now being hauled from the railroad to their location.

Jesse McPhee well resumed drilling latter part of last week.

Milham Oil Corporation's well has created quite a bit of excitement in Terrell and adjoining counties due to the fact that quite a few new buildings have recently been constructed at their location.

Big Bend Oil Corporation is still selling spreads in the vicinity of their well.

The Presbyterian Church.

The second of the "last word" series of sermons will have as its subject, "The Word of Pardon." Follow these addresses through and then tell us where you agree and also where you disagree with the conclusions of the speaker. Hear this discussion Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

The Prodigal Son has been painted in sermon and song as a rather sorry character—and in many ways he was. But he wasn't altogether bad. Hear something in his favor Sunday evening at this church in a sermon on the topic, "The Virtues of the Prodigal."

Bring your family and friends to Sunday school next Sunday—and come with them—at 10 a. m. J. A. McMILLAN, Minister.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Mills were visitors in San Antonio over the week end, where they went to attend grand opera.

Electric Cooking Demonstration Successful

Large crowds of interested women here were in attendance this week at the electric cooking demonstrations which were held under the auspices of the Texas Louisiana Power Co.

Miss Fannie Mersman of Dallas, widely known home economist, who was in charge of the demonstration, proved to be both efficient and as having a pleasing personality. Grady L. Kirb of Fort Worth, range specialist, also added interest to the demonstrations with talks on the Hot-point Range, which was the stove being demonstrated.

Monday a broiled breakfast was cooked in the range oven. On Tuesday a broiled luncheon was prepared, while on Wednesday a dinner was cooked.

Each day she pointed out the various advantages of cooking the electric way.

The visitors were presented with combination biscuit and doughnut cutters and measuring cups as favors.

Mrs. Mersman and Mr. Kirb expressed themselves as being greatly pleased with the interest shown in the demonstration.

Bridge Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Fletcher were the honor guests at a party given by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Buchanan on Monday evening, the occasion being their sixth wedding anniversary.

Bridging was played until a late hour, high score being made by Mrs. J. Yates and Horace Fletcher. The honor guests were presented with a pair of bronze bookends.

Delicious refreshments were served to the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Happle, Mr. and Mrs. Carlton White, Mr. and Mrs. J. Yates, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Fletcher, Mrs. Tina East, Miss Mary Alice Happle, and C. Wilburn.

Mrs. Joe Brown of Longfellow and her sister, Miss Clara Tankersley of this city spent several days in San Antonio last week.

What Accounts Are Profitable

Contrary to general opinion, banks do not make 6 per cent profit on each deposit made in a checking account. A general average of profit is 4 per cent and from all deposits 15 per cent must be deducted as a cash reserve.

In banking circles, it is generally accepted as truth that accounts whose balance falls below $200 are an expense to the bank.

In view of this, our service fee of 50c per month for accounts whose balance falls below $50.00 is just and reasonable.

THE STORY

Jim Stanley, New York business man, orders his desk and phone taken to his home, intending to finish his dissertation there. Rollo Waterman, his partner, comes in. Both are in love with Doris Colby. Stanley proposes to Doris Colby to determine which shall first propose to Doris. Waterman wins. Nina Morgan, Waterman's secretary and mistress, has overheard his conversation with Stanley and resents Waterman's plan to desert her. Waterman says he is penniless and must make a rich marriage. He urges Nina to tell Doris that Stanley has wronged her (Nina). Doris admits to her father her interest in both men, but is unable to decide which to marry. Nina tells Doris her story, exacting a promise that Doris will not tell the source of her information. Doris is convinced of Stanley's duplicity and is broken-hearted, realizing that it is Stanley she loves. Waterman proposes and Doris accepts him. Stanley accepts the situation, and as a wedding present gives his share of the business to Waterman. He arranges with his secretary, Frank Wilson, to take charge of his other business interests. He is going to India. Doris tells Waterman part of Nina's story and he promises to "try" to find the girl. Frank Wilson, aware of Waterman's crookedness, leaves his employ. The latter begins to importune Doris for money.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

Nevertheless, she was intelligent, and there came a time when with the best will in the world she could no longer shut her eyes to the fact that all was not well with her husband. He did, it is true, manage occasionally to make good some of the amount which she advanced him, but on the whole the balance was heavy on the wrong side of the ledger. His luck, as he called it, ran pretty steadily against him. His nerves played him false with increasing frequency. He found himself drinking in the middle of the day, a thing he had never done before in all his life. Occasionally Doris saw him a little the worse for wear. She thought little of this; she was no prude. She had made up her mind that she would have no wrangling with her husband, and in view of his growing irritability, she feared that any reference to this matter would precipitate a quarrel.

Bitterly she regretted the absence of Stanley, for she began to suspect that his had been the influence that had kept her husband straight for years. She believed that if Stanley had not gone away, things would have continued well.

"I wonder," she said one evening at dinner, "when Jim's coming back." Waterman started slightly. Stanley's name had not been mentioned between them for months. "I have no idea," he said.

"I wonder if that confidential man of his—what was his name?" "Wilson?" "Yes, Wilson. Do you know his address?" "No, I don't. Why?" "I thought I would write and ask him."

"Why? What difference does it make?" He spoke with a touch of asperity.

It was clear that the subject annoyed him, so she abandoned it; but she did not put the thought from her mind, and the next day she telephoned to Waterman's head clerk for Wilson's address, got it, and wrote him a note. In response, Wilson appeared at the Waterman apartment at three o'clock of the next day.

"Forgive my asking you to come here in the middle of the business day, Mr. Wilson, but I could not get over my mind, for free. I am anxious," said Doris. "For certain reasons, to know when Mr. Stanley is returning."

"I am sorry I cannot tell you," replied the secretary.

"Haven't you heard from him?" "Oh, yes. I got a cable when he landed at Yokohama."

"Mr. Wilson, I wish very much that Mr. Stanley would come back." "I wish so, too."

"You see I speak so frankly to you, knowing more or less of the intimate relations that have existed between you and Mr. Stanley. I have heard him speak more than once of your devotion and your loyalty to him."

"You may count upon that, Mrs. Waterman."

"I am sure of it. That's why I am so frank. I know that you are, or have been intimately acquainted with the details of the business in which my husband and Mr. Stanley were engaged, and that you were for some time in my husband's office after Mr. Stanley went away. I have been a little worried about that business in the last few weeks. Perhaps my worry is unnecessary, but I have been thinking that maybe my husband, out of a mistaken sense of kindness, to me, has not told me everything that I should like to know. There have been times when I felt that things were not going well with him in the Street, and perhaps it is because of my wish to be reassured that I am asking you to tell me in strictest confidence what you know about it."

"But Mrs. Waterman," objected Wilson, "it has been some months since I left the office."

"I know that," she answered, "but were things quite well there when you left?"

"Frankly," said Wilson, "not altogether, to my way of thinking."

"Do you mind going into particulars?" Wilson reflected. How much should he be justified in telling her? He decided to compromise.

"No, certainly not," he said. "It was merely that Mr. Waterman had embarked upon some operations in the Street which did not appear to me exactly conservative. Of course I am ready to admit I may have been influenced by the fact that I was sure they were operations Mr. Stanley would not have approved. You see, my business education has been entirely in the hands of Mr. Stanley."

Doris did not press the point further. She had a suspicion that Wilson was not telling all he knew, but she was sure that so far as he had gone he had said what he thought. He had confirmed her suspicions. Things were not well with her husband in the Street.

"Thank you, Mr. Wilson," she said. "For your frankness. That is all I wished to know." And she added tentatively, "I wished to know what you have told me because I want in every possible way to be of help to my husband."

"I understand," he answered.

Wilson departed with mixed emotions. It was not the first time he had seen Doris Colby. He had gone to her more than once on various missions for Stanley in the old days. It had always thrilled him to look at her. It thrilled him still. She was more beautiful than ever, he thought, and the anxiety which sat so clearly upon her andic brow added just now to the fascination which she had always had for him. It was clear to Wilson, also, that Waterman was in the process of being found out. He was not aware, as yet, that the man was in possession of stolen goods, but he knew perfectly well that he was a humbug and a fraud. And now, it appeared, his unmasking was approaching. He could not repress a sense of satisfaction.

by the simple process of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, he had discharged his obligation to the gambler, and having done so had sworn a solemn vow that he would never enter that hall of chance again. But that vow, like many others, had been broken. His luck couldn't always be bad he thought, and he was due to win—overdue. In this he was in error. His unluck, streak continued, and the consequence was that shortly he found himself heavily in Bromfield's debt once more. Here came his creditor again. He sighed heavily as he told the boy to bring him in. But before the door opened to admit his visitor he was again his usual smiling self.

"Come in, come in, Bromfield," he called, as to a welcome guest. "How are you? Glad to see you."

"I happened to be passing by," said Bromfield, "and, the market having closed, I thought I would drop in for a chat."

"Very good of you, I am sure."

"By the way," went on the gambler. "I'm sorry I haven't seen you at my place of late."

"No," admitted Waterman, "fact is, I didn't wish to come there again until I was able to square things up with you."

"And when will that be, do you think?" "Oh, very soon, I hope."

"Your hope is mine also." They smiled together, a little grimly perhaps, and Bromfield went on. "You couldn't make it any more definite than that, I suppose?"

"Well, no, not at the moment."

"Sorry. I could use money just now. You see, a number of gentlemen with whom I do business seem to have had a run of bad luck of late."

"Do I understand that you complain of that?" grinned Waterman.

"Not altogether," admitted the other, "but you see their bad luck seems not to have been confined strictly to their dealings with me. I'm a benevolent person and I'm always sorry to hear that any of my friends have had bad luck with other people than myself."

"Quite comprehensible," admitted Waterman.

"If you could see my books you would clearly understand why I find it necessary to annoy you—which, believe me, I sincerely regret to be obliged to do."

"I share your regret, Mr. Bromfield—in fact my heart bleeds for you."

"Man," announced the General, "is a speculative animal. The instinct for taking a chance is as old as the human race."

"You mean the instinct for getting something for nothing, don't you?" "Call it what you like, it amounts to the same thing. Every man enjoys a gamble, even yourself."

"And how," inquired the lawyer, "do you make me out a gambler?"

"Why," replied the General, "easy enough. Every time you go into court to argue a case you're dealing with chance."

"Really! I should have thought that a few trifles like justice, experience and intelligence were the governing elements."

"I don't say there isn't something in those things, but the element of chance enters into every case you try just the same, and you know it. It makes a lot of difference to you what judge is trying your case. It makes a lot of difference to you whether the opposing counsel is an able man or a boob-head. Chance, again. It makes a difference whether the judge slept well the night before. More chance. There's a lot of luck about your jury, too. Sometimes you want an intelligent jury and you get a stupid one. Sometimes you want dumbbells and you get smart Alecks. Don't tell me! Every time you try a case you take a chance, and I suppose that's how you satisfy your particular liking for a gamble."

The lawyer and his client were tunching at the top of a Broadway cliff. In the beautiful grill room which was the feature of the Lawyers' club, General Leavitt, U. S. A., retired, was a florid, heavy man of seventy-one or two, who, though still in full possession of all his physical and mental faculties, had been relegated to more or less private life a few years previously by the operation of the age limit law. He had taken the precaution when quite a young soldier of providing for his old age by marrying a rich wife. She had died some ten years before, and it was concerning the management of her property, which she had left entirely to the General, that he was now conversing with his counsel.

"As I was saying, Alexander," he went on, "you should cultivate the sporting instinct outside of your own profession. It will rattle your bones a bit. Now there's your son-in-law; he's got the right idea. He's a business man from ten to three, and after that he's a sportsman, though I must say the last time I saw him he didn't seem to be having any the best of the luck. By the way, do you ever go to Bromfield's?"

"No," said Colby, "not since I was a young fellow and Bromfield used to run a place at Saratoga. It was rather amusing in those days."

"Everything was more amusing in those days," sighed the General. However, our friend Bromfield is still gratifying the human propensity for taking a chance, even though his stage setting is no what it was."

"Er—yes," inquired Colby casually. "My son-in-law didn't seem to be having the best of luck last time you saw him there?"

"Well, no, Alexander," returned the soldier, "he wasn't what you might call eating 'em up. But I didn't stay to see the finish. I quit about twenty a. m. I'm not as young as I was."

"But really," said Mr. Colby, "getting back to business, this speculative transaction of yours."

"Oh—o—o it," said the General, "let me see. If I didn't play around a little I should go mad, bite myself in the calf of the leg and die of hydrophobia. It wasn't for people like me what the h—l do you think would become of people like you. I should like to know!"

Descending to his office ten stories below, Mr. Colby kept two millionaires waiting fifteen minutes while he considered the case of his son-in-law. He had been somewhat disappointed in his daughter's choice, but true to his announcement to Doris, he had not voiced that disappointment. He had made up his mind not to interfere either in her choice of a husband or in her relations with that husband, unless she had acquired him. Nevertheless he kept his eyes wide open, according to his custom—for while he knew the peril of unwise interference between husband and wife, he was determined to be in a position to help his daughter if the time should ever come when she should ask it.

Ever Hear of These "Presidents"?

DAVID B. ATCHISON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Y ou may be one of those Americans so well-versed in the history of your country that you can name all of the Presidents of the United States in the order of their administrations and can tell something about each one of them. But if some one said to you, "What do you know about the following Presidents of the United States: John Hanson, Elias Boudinot, John Hancock, Nathaniel Gorham and David B. Atchison?" you'd probably exclaim, "Why, they never were Presidents of the United States!" And therein you might be wrong, for there are those who say that those five men should be included in the list of our Presidents, even though such a statement would have to be made with certain qualifications.

In the case of the first four, their right to be known as Presidents is based upon the following facts which have to do with the evolution of the office of President of the United States:

The First Continental congress met in Philadelphia September 5, 1774, and the delegates to it elected Peyton Randolph of Virginia, president. But he was only president of the congress, not President of the United States, for there was then no United States.

The Second Continental congress met in Philadelphia May 10, 1775, and John Hancock of Massachusetts was elected president. But he, too, was president only of the congress. Then on August 2, 1775, the delegates to this congress signed the Declaration of Independence which brought into being the United States of America. But they were United States more in name than in actual fact of a strong, well-organized government.

In 1777 a plan for the union of the states was proposed and within 15 months, twelve of the states had agreed to form the new nation in accordance with a proposed plan, drawn up under the name of the Articles of Confederation. The only state which opposed it at that time was Maryland.

Under the original Articles of Confederation each of the states made claims to extensive western lands. John Hanson and Daniel Carroll, of the Maryland delegation, refused to enter the new country under the above existing conditions and Hanson suggested the alternate plan. Maryland offered to give up forever its claim to western lands and to sign over its territories to the federal government if the other states would follow suit. One by one they fell into line and finally, on March 1, 1781, there was adopted a constitution called the "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union Between the States."

However, the confederation thus formed had no executive officer, no judiciary and the sole governmental body was a single house of congress, made up of delegates elected by the legislatures of the states.

On November 5, 1781 John Hanson was elected president of the congress, his formal title being "President of the United States in Congress Assembled." Thus the title "President of the United States" came into being and Hanson's right to be included in the list of our Presidents rests upon that fact that he not only presided over congress but was in fact as well as in name the country's Chief Executive. It is also asserted by Hanson proponents, chief of whom is Seymour Wemyss Smith, editor of the Financial Digest of New York city, who has striven for three years to win national recognition for Hanson and who is planning to carry his fight to the floor of the United States senate, that Hanson, rather than George Washington, was the first President of the United States.

In proof of his assertion, Mr. Smith offers the following facts:

On November 21, 1781, the congressional committee on "Arrangement of the President's House," consisting of Joseph Montgomery, Samuel Osgood and Edmund Randolph, introduced the following resolution in congress:

"Resolved, That the attendants of the President's house consist of one steward and such others as may be found necessary, not exceeding eight."

A residence had been leased a few days previously as President Hanson's home. The steward was required to deliver an accounting of expenses to the President's secretary each month and the President was authorized by a resolution to draw on the public treasury for the proper amount.

On November 25, 1781, Gen. George Washington was summoned before congress and officially thanked by President Hanson for his victory at Yorktown.

"Mr. President," Washington replied to President Hanson, "I feel very sensibly the favorable declaration of congress expressed by your excellency. This great proof of their approbation cannot fall of making a deep impression upon me, and my study shall be to deserve a continuance of it."

In the meantime, before Washington became the "first President under the Constitution," the United States had three other "Presidents" under the Articles of Confederation. In November, 1782, Hanson retired from the Presidency and died the following year. On November 4, 1782 Elias Boudinot of New Jersey, who had served as a delegate to congress from 1778 to 1779 and had again been chosen in 1781, was chosen "President of the United States in Congress Assembled" and became the Chief Executive of the nation. As such he issued the proclamation announcing the end of the Revolution on April 19, 1783, and another announcing the signing of the treaty of peace on September 3.

Elias Boudinot has also been called the "first President of the United States," his right to that title being based upon the fact that it was not until England had signed the treaty of peace and thus acknowledged the independence of her former colonies that the free and independent United States of America actually existed.

In 1785 the seat of government was changed to New York city and John Hancock of Massachusetts was elected "President." Owing to ill health, however, he did not actively serve in that position and on May 29, 1786, he resigned. So another "President" was chosen—Nathaniel Gorham of Massachusetts.

On May 14, 1787, a convention of delegates from all states except Rhode Island met in Philadelphia "to form a more perfect union" and after a stormy session of four months adopted a new Constitution. It provided for a new method of choosing a President and under its provisions an election was held in which George Washington of Virginia was unanimously elected President. From contemporary documents, it is evident that the Chief Executive of the nation was referred to then as the "President of the United States Under the New Constitution" whereas before that official had been called the "President of the United States in Congress Assembled." Later that portion of the title, "Under the New Constitution," was omitted as being too cumbersome and thereafter he was referred to as the "President of the United States."

In view of these facts it seems that John Hanson, Elias Boudinot, John Hancock and Nathaniel Gorham are as much entitled to being called "President of the United States" as any of the men from George Washington to Herbert Hoover who have borne that title, and that in listing our Presidents, we should divide them into two classes, those who held office under the Articles of Confederation and those who have held office under the Constitution.

The right of David B. Atchison of Missouri to be included in our list of Presidents is a fertile subject for dispute. He is called "President for a Day," and the whole question of whether or not he actually was President depends upon whether or not a man can be President without taking the oath of office or actively administering the affairs of the nation.

Atchison's "Presidency" came about in this way: March 4, 1849, came on Sunday. Technically, President James K. Polk's term of office expired March 3, 1849, and his successor, Zachary Taylor, should have been inaugurated on March 4. But March 4, 1849, came on Sunday and Taylor did not take the oath of office until Monday, March 5, 1849. On March 3, George M. Dallas, vice president under Polk, announced in the senate, over which he was presiding, "The close of my official term being near at hand, I conform to an established and convenient practice by withdrawing from the deliberations of this body." On the motion of Senator Benton of Missouri, his colleague, Senator David B. Atchison, was appointed president of the senate pro tem.

Since the terms of President Polk and Vice President Dallas expired on March 3 and the term of President-Elect Taylor did not begin until March 5, when he was inaugurated, it is contended that David B. Atchison was President of the United States for one day, Sunday, March 4, 1849, even though he never took the oath of office. The biographical congressional directory, 1774-1911, an official senate document, backs up that claim, although some historians contend that Taylor was President de facto on Sunday, even though he was not sworn in, and that Atchison was not sworn in as President and never pretended to exercise any duty or prerogative of the office.

But the state of Missouri honors him as the only Missourian who has so far served as President of the United States and on October 27 of last year it paid tribute to its "President for a Day" when a $15,000 memorial statue "Dory" which was dedicated at Plattsburg, Mo., with impressive ceremonies at which the governor of Missouri was the principal speaker. He is further remembered in his home state by a county which is named for him and Missouri's sister state, Kansas, has a city which bears his name, although it is more famous because it is the home town of a famous county editor, Ed Howe of the Atchison Globe, than it is because it was named for a "President for a Day."

Silver Utensils Once Prerogative of Rank

In the early days of civilization sterling silver was restricted to royalty and the nobility. In fact, we are told that at one period of England's history the number of sterling silver spoons and suchlike one could own were actually restricted and governed by statute. One could almost reconstruct the regulatory table—one lord, one spoon; one duke, four spoons; one princess, one chest, and so on. Sterling was displayed upon all ceremonial occasions and these aristocrats of a far past day treasured their silver to as great an extent as the young bride of today.

Five hundred years ago, with the advent of the Florentine republic, a new era began. Foreign commerce brought wealth to men of lesser rank who established magnificent homes and filled them with works of art and beauty, chief among which was sterling. Today sterling silver continues to be the inevitable tableware for the person of discrimination. Its use is not confined to the royal houses, nor even to the tables of the wealthy. It is available for every home of taste and moderate means.

Too Rough
She didn't understand football. "Why did they knock that man down as soon as he was touched the ball?" she asked. "Because he was trying to get a goal," her brother explained. "But isn't the object of the game to get goals?" "Yes; but he was—you see, he's on the other side. He was going the wrong way—that is, toward the wrong goal."

Girl Keeps Lover's Gifts

When a man and a maid fall out the maid may keep her lover's gifts, according to a decree of Judge Cohen of the District court at Sydney, Australia. After the tilt Henry Morris sued Dolly Reynolds for the return of a phonograph, a silk shawl and a steel gular, together with $100 which he said Morris had not loaned her money, but had placed bets for her on horse and dog races, deducting his investment if the animals won. The judge told Dolly to keep the gifts and forget about the money.

Natives Frightened by Doll
A letter from Kenya tells of the curious effect of a doll with moving eyes. When it was shown to a native chief he thought it supernatural. On being convinced, after some time, that it was mechanics and not magic that moved the eyes, he asked the loan of it to get back one of his wives who had fled to her native village. He explained that if he took it then all the men would flee and thus he could secure his wife. He proved as successful in his prophecy as in his quest.

EXPOSES PRIVATE LIFE OF OYSTER

Expert Says Shell Closes When Peril Nears.

Washington.—Since more oysters than human beings attend the dinners of the great, it has occurred to at least one scientist that the private life of these gentle creatures may be a matter of some public concern.

In a somewhat formal expose of "The Private Life of the American Oyster," Dr. P. S. Galtsoff of the bureau of fisheries credits the oyster with a sense of taste more refined in certain respects than that of its human admirers.

"It has been found," he says, "that the oyster reacts to the application of quinine and detects this substance in a concentration four times weaker than the minimum which can be noticed as applied to the human tongue.

Efficient though they are, however, the oyster's organs of sense are few, being confined to a double row of tentacles or feelers on the edge of each mantle, the soft layer of membrane which can be seen covering the creature when it makes its appearance on the half shell.

When the shell is open and the oyster is feeding, Doctor Galtsoff relates, the tentacles expand and stick out into the water, ready to contract at the first warning of danger through any mechanical disturbance or change in the intensity of illumination of chemical conditions.

As the tentacles draw in the mantle contracts, the big muscle which holds the shells together closes them and the oyster may—if oysters can—revel in the sense of security which man enjoys when shut up in a warm, cheerful room on a stormy winter night.

The oyster's nervous system is a possession which might be envied by many a jumpy dinner guest. It is so simple that, no matter what distressing occurrence is forced upon the oyster's attention, it always acts in the same way, shutting out trouble by closing up the shell and letting the rest of the world go by.

Richmond to Restore Historic Bell Tower

Richmond, Va.—The old gray brick bell tower on the capitol grounds here is to be restored and a mild-tinted hell is to end a silence unbroken since 1905.

Erected in 1824 the structure now standing was built to replace an old wooden building constructed many years previous to house Virginia's public guard. These soldiers policed public property and maintained order on Capitol Hill.

The bell in the old tower pealed forth on all festive occasions, and tolled for the funerals of the great of that day, summoned the legislators to their duty and rallied regular and volunteer soldiers to the defense of the commonwealth.

One of the notable occasions upon which the bell called Virginians to their posts was in June, 1813, when rumors reached Richmond that the British had attacked Craney Island, at the mouth of Norfolk harbor, and would come on to Richmond. The bell gave the news when Virginia seceded from the Union. It cracked in 1865 and was removed from the tower.

The restoration work is under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

CALLING
"Let's go calling on Mr. Giant," said Peter Gnome. So the Gnomes all agreed and put on their high rubber boots and off they started.

The rain kept pouring down and the snow was melting quickly. "I hope," said one of the Gnomes, "that all the snow won't go."
"If it does," whispered a little Snowflake, just before it was melted by a raindrop, "our old Snow King will see to it that we come again."
"We'll have one more snowy time at least."
"That's good," said the little Gnome. "I love the snow."
"We all do," said Peter, "but today we'll enjoy the delicious slush."
They started off on their walk to Mr. Giant's Cave. They splashed through the melting snow-drifts and had a very jolly walk.

He Will Dream.

gives us as much fun as this one does."
"I never heard before of a day being called naughty," said Mr. Giant.
"Well," said Peter Gnome, "you said it was a bad day, and a bad day means a naughty day, doesn't it?"
"Perhaps," said Mr. Giant, "but it's not usually called naughty, that's all. Anyway I like the day myself."
"Will you come and take a walk with us?" asked Peter Gnome.
"Delighted," said old Mr. Giant.
Then Mr. Giant got his tall boots from a part of his cave.

They only made him look more enormous than ever and the Gnomes looked very tiny as they walked about him while he was putting on his great boots.
"Where are we going?" asked Mr. Giant.
"We're going to call on a little boy," said Peter Gnome, "who has been ill, and we're going to give him a dream play."
"It will seem to him that he can see us and that he is playing with us."
"We'll tumble and play in the slush and get all wet—and he will dream he is doing the same—such things as he cannot do now that he is ill."
So Mr. Giant and the Gnomes gave the little boy a dream play and they heard from the Fairy Queen that he would be well in time for the last snowstorm of the season and the last slushy day—so that the dream would be real before the season was over.

But how much he did enjoy his dream—feeling so well in it and being able to play in so jolly a fashion.

Black and White

In this game the players have to stand in a line or ring, black and white alternately, each one to wear something black or white to show which side he is on. One of the players is the thrower and he stands to face the line.

The thrower shouts "Black!" or "white!"—sending the ball at the same instant to whichever color he calls. If "white" is called, and "white" catches it, "white" side scores 1. But if a "black" standing either side of the "white" catches the ball, "black" scores 1.

The same, of course, if "black" is called, and "black" or either "white" secures the ball.
No player must step forward to catch the ball. If he does that side loses a point.
Six points to a game. Three games to a set.

Camel Was New

Joe, the three-year-old, had seen a department store window decorated with camels just before Christmas. When his mother asked him what he had seen, he answered, "I saw a whole lot of the kind of horses that the Wise men rode on."

Watch Tells Time

Four-year-old Mark was the proud possessor of a toy watch. To have some fun with him a neighbor asked him what time it was.
He indignantly replied: "I don't have to know what time it is; my watch takes care of the time for me!"

Height of Cloud Banks Shown by New Device

An improved ceiling height indicator that has just been developed simplifies the problem of ascertaining just how high cloud banks are hanging, and therefore how high airplanes may fly and still be able to see the ground.
It consists of a triangular-shaped scale mounted on a galvanized pole with a manually operated pointer. Some 500 feet from this scale is the ceiling projector spot light, which is thrown on the clouds above. To find the ceiling height, the observer sights along the graduated scale, adjusting the pointer on the spot of light above, and when this is done, the pointer indicates the height of the ceiling.
This instrument, which eliminates paper and pencil calculation and possible errors, at the same time speeding up the operation, has been brought out by the Graybar Electric company.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of indigestion," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her."
"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

For Colds -

How many people you know end their colds with Bayer Aspirin! And how often you've heard of its prompt relief of sore throat or tonsillitis. No wonder millions take it for colds, neuralgia, rheumatism; and the aches and pains that go with them. The wonder is that anyone still worries through a winter without these tablets! They relieve quickly, yet have no effect whatever on the heart. Friends have told you Bayer Aspirin is marvelous; doctors have declared it harmless. Every druggist has it, with proven directions. Why not put it to the test?

Frogs Without Tadpoles
There is a species of frog in Bermuda and Jamaica which omits the tadpole stage and emerges from the egg as a little frog. A specimen of this species has been placed in the Field Museum at Chicago. ### Improve the taste of milk this way—and your children will drink more of it . . . .

SAYS one of America's leading physicians: "Two tablespoonfuls of Karo in a glass of milk not only improves the taste of the milk but doubles its food value."

This doctor's advice is valuable—for he knows children and he knows Karo.
"Serve plenty of Karo to the kiddies—especially underweight children, in milk, on cereals, on sliced bread. Watch their weight increase!"

All children like the delicious flavor of Karo—it appeals to their "sweet tooth."
And—do you know why Karo is so splendid for children? Because each ounce of Karo contains 120 calories—the energy-giving value of Karo is nearly twice that of eggs and lean beef, weight for weight.

What is good for children is also good for the entire family.
Make Karo and pancakes a frequent breakfast habit.

Tires for the new Ford are specially made to give long wear

WHEN the new Ford was designed, it was immediately apparent that a new tire would have to be made to match the car's performance. It was distinctly a new problem, for here was a car with quicker acceleration, greater speed and more braking efficiency than any car of similar size or weight.

So that every Ford owner might be assured of maximum tire mileage at the lowest cost, the Ford Motor Company devoted many months to research and experiment in conjunction with the leading tire manufacturers.

As a result, certain definite specifications were developed for tires for the new Ford. These specify cords of certain strength and texture, a large volume of tread and side-wall rubber, sturdy non-skid design, and reinforced plies for protection against bruise breaks—all the strong features of construction formerly considered for only the largest tires.

Great care also was taken to secure the best riding qualities in connection with the transverse springs and the Houdaille shock absorbers.

Though the Ford tires are designated as 33 x 4.50, they have the resiliency and air space of much larger tires because of the drop center rim of the steel-spoke wheels.

For best results, the tires on the new Ford should be kept inflated to an air pressure of 35 pounds and checked regularly to insure this pressure all the time. This is important. Low inflation breaks down the side-walls of a tire. By causing overheating, it also destroys the rubber that acts as an insulation, with consequent separation of the cord.

At the end of each 5000 miles, when you have the front wheels packed with grease, it is a good plan to have the wheel alignment checked. This will prevent premature wear.

When punctures come, as they will with any tire, you will find the Ford dealer particularly well-equipped to make repairs quickly and at small cost. See him, too, for replacements. Then you will be sure of getting tires built specially for the Ford car according to definite Ford specifications.
