Buick Holds Third Place

Popularity of the Buick is definitely attested by a recent compilation of sales figures for the first quarter of 1930 which show Buick in third place in the entire industry in volume of cars sold. This position is now more remarkable in view of the fact that many lower priced cars trailed the Buick in rank. The cars holding the first and second places are both units in the lowest price field.

C. W. Churchill, general sales manager of the Buick Motor Company, in discussing this Buick sales record predicted a constantly increasing volume of business in the automobile industry during the remainder of this year.

Terrell County Oil Activities

Due to the fact that our local correspondent has been too busy this week interviewing oil men and geologists who are now in the county, he has not had an opportunity to visit in person the several wells which are going down and ascertain definite information, but has been advised by others that the wells are still plugging away, and the people in the oil industry are very optimistic about most all of them sooner or later being real producers of extensive commercial value.

The territory now receiving most of the attention of high powered geologists is that portion of the county being situated south of the T. & N. O. Railway Company's right-of-way, and north of the Rio Grande river on past the Terrell county line for many miles west of said line over into Brewster county.

Our representative recently received a communication from a very wealthy oil man in the east in which he stated, "Business is bad; no other words to express it. No one is making any progress in any line, and just when it does look good the bears go on the rampage again on the stock exchange and then there is hell to pay again and no money to do it with. Just as soon as I am turned loose on Terrell county you and I will do lot of business together." This information is very encouraging at least as after every oil well is drilled to be a storm and new money can not help being brought into the country to make bankers, merchants, and business men generally rejoice and lots of other people happy.

Mrs. Lee McCue had as her guests for several days Mrs. J. A. Russell and daughter Miss Marrian, of Del Rio and Miss Irma Decker of Houston.

Harvey Sloan of Pumpville spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. McCue this week on their ranch.

Mesdames H. C. Presley, Henrietta, and Francis McDonald shopped in Sanderson Friday.

A. A. Shelton made a business trip to Del Rio the first of the week.

Mrs. Harry Sharp spent Sunday of this week at the Big Canyon ranch.

Mrs. Troxie Daugherty visited her son in Alpine the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Griffith have returned from their vacation.

Mrs. J. W. McLeod and son, John Jr., of Dryden, shopped in Sanderson Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Kessler of Thurston were in Sanderson Friday evening on business.

Miss Grace Savage of El Paso stopped over Monday with Miss Mary Ellen Bohlman.

Now We Have The New Fourth

Year by year the old-fashioned Fourth of July with spitting cannon and sizzling rocket against a blue-black sky is becoming more and more of a memory.

The Fourth of July which small boys and girls awaited as eagerly as Christmas itself, a day of top torpedo, of celluloid-collared orators, and ice cream socials, has been transformed into an Independence Day of quiet and dignity.

"But how can we teach our children what Fourth of July really means?" a mother asked not long ago, adding, "you must meet a child on his own ground—things must be explained to him in terms that he understands."

This mother, who is fortunate enough never to have been forced to the tragic task of binding up mangled little fingers shredded by "innocent fire crackers," is arguing that a child must be taught the meaning of liberty and freedom and independence by lighting a pin wheel or hurling a torpedo cane upon the pavement.

It is difficult for us who, passed childhood in the old-fashioned noisy Fourth of July decade to remember that our Roman candles and "flower pots" meant anything lofty and inspiring to us—anything but a rollicking holiday.

Safe and sane Fourths are pretty well established but the argument that some way should be found to make green the meaning of what those periwigged builders of our nation did back on July 4, 1776, is a worthy one.

The great purpose of a Fourth of July observance is not only to pay respect to the early farmers of this government but to measure the patriotism of this with that day, to determine whether this nation has been true to the faith, whether it has kept aloft the torch, whether its willingness to sacrifice for the common good deserves a place with the sacrifices of the fathers of the nation. Such speculation is in order in these times and a quiet, dignified observance, such as this city has in mind will be helpful.

ENTERTAINS.

On Friday afternoon of last week Mrs. Ed Downie entertained a number of friends on the ranch in honor of her mother, Mrs. Emma Gregory of San Antonio.

Readers Think This Over

Patronize home industry. For instance, the merchant, he will have what you want. But you say he wants too much, and you send to a mail order house, send your money with it, do not know what you are getting, and lots of times have it to return.

Did you ever stop to realize that if your home merchant had the use of your money for a week or ten days in advance, and knew that you were never to ask him for credit, that they could sell for just as cheap, and nine times out of ten twice as good articles for the money. No you do not think of this, but when you haven't the cash to send away, then is when you think of the merchant, and in all other lines as well.

There is not a business firm in our town that would not compete with any mail order house in the United States if they received cash for every penny's worth they sold so much as a week or ten days in advance. Think this over, patronize home industry.

Goat Show And Sale

In next week's issue of The Times will appear an advertisement for the Angora Goat Show and Sale which is to be held in Rocksprings, Texas, July 15, 16 and 17.

The Texas Angora Goat Raisers' Association is figuring on a big time these three dates. Everyone that has not celebrated this year try and be in Rocksprings for this occasion.

Rodeo, free barbecue, dancing, horse racing, pageant and baseball. Everybody go and have one of the best times in your life.

THE STORY

On a pleasure trip in eastern waters, Philip Amory, English world war veteran, now a trader on the island of Papua, New Guinea, plunges overboard to save the life of a musical comedy actress, known as "Gin-Sling."

CHAPTER IV—Continued

"It's not what you would call material to the evidence," I answered Basset. "But you can take it if you like."

"Very well. Do you know where her parents are?" "Could find 'em, I suppose."

"The mother does, and she'd poison me if she could," was my reply. "What if the marriage is coming off immediately?"

"It couldn't," pointed out Basset. "If he's going on this trip—but if you have any uneasiness on that point, you can go to Thursday Island and send a wireless."

"For all Australia to read!" "Cross to Cape York and get the bird line."

"I don't mind," said I thoughtfully. "If I do, you see—it may seem foolish, but I can't help fearing she might be attracted to the country. She's dead nuts on hearing about it."

"Don't forget, Black Sheep," said Basset (and I knew by the nickname, that he wanted to say much he would certainly leave unsaid; much kindness, much consideration for that which could not be helped or consoled) "Don't forget that there's such a thing as a law of libel; if you make mistakes, you may have to pay for them very dearly."

"Amory," I answered. "Nobody sick. Is your boarder in?" "He's not a boarder. We don't take boarders," was Maldstone's answer.

"If you mean the nut who blew in today, he's in bed." "Sure?"

Maldstone disappeared. "Well, now, it's a queer thing," he commented, coming back and standing, an odd, pajama'd figure, on the soaked veranda boards, which reflected his bare feet like ice.

"Well, now, the wife wouldn't like any rudeness," answered Maldstone placidly. "I suppose he's got a right to go in the house, or out of the house, as he likes. You go back to your store, Phil Amory; you'd ought to be in bed. Good-night."

"I did not go to bed. I went back to Basset's." "Basset," I said, bolting up the staircase. "That brute of a Spicer chap was underneath the house."

"You go to bed, Amory, and let other people go," he answered. "You're fanciful."

"I saw him, I tell you," was my angry response. "Running away among the mangoes. And Maldstone said he wasn't there."

"Tackle him yourself tomorrow morning," counseled Basset. "Aren't you going to let anyone on the island go to sleep? Be off, Black Sheep, or I'll arrest you."

"I can tell you this," was my parting shot, "there's no power in Papua will get me to Thursday Island now."

Nevertheless, when morning came, I began to think differently.

I went to Maldstone's as early as possible. Spicer was lounging on the veranda, in Mrs. Maldstone's special chair, with a tin of Maldstones' special cigarettes at his elbow.

"I saw him, I tell you," was my angry response. "Running away among the mangoes. And Maldstone said he wasn't there."

"Tackle him yourself tomorrow morning," counseled Basset. "Aren't you going to let anyone on the island go to sleep? Be off, Black Sheep, or I'll arrest you."

beginning to think he hadn't heard anything) "you know nothing about. I saw you, if not under the house, certainly close to the R. M.'s in the middle of last night, and when I chased you, you ran away."

"You bet I did," said Spicer with a giggle. "Thought you were the enraged husband, for a fiver."

"Basset isn't married," I told him. "The warder is," he sniggered. "Very pretty wife, too."

Now this bewildered me, for I did know Taluna, the wife of the native warder, and I had seen her, only a week before, brought up in court by her husband, in connection with a charge of "stealing" her, which he was making against another native.

"I didn't know what to think. Mrs. Maldstone came back at that moment, with a tray of glasses, interrupting—I fancied, deliberately—the conference. She offered us whisky; I took two fingers of it; Spicer took some more soda water. It added to my dislike of him. I have always held that there's as likely as not to be something wrong about either a teetotaler or a non-smoker; if not wrong, half-baked. . . . Granted, that there are exceptions. Spicer I did not take to be an exception."

I knew that Basset, who was shrewd enough, thought I had been wrong in supposing Spicer to be listening under the house. I knew, too, that he did not tell me—that a man who is overwrought, excited, and begins to fancy himself spied upon, may be in rather a bad way. Perhaps it was Mary Maldstone who gave the final stroke to my suspicions.

"Are you two done quarrelling?" she asked gaily, as I put away the tray I had taken from her hands. "And if you are, can I ask you, Phil, when you're going across again? I want you to do me an errand."

"Across," meant the trip of 120 miles, from this near point of Papua, to Australia.

"It depends," I answered her, "on Mr. Spicer."

"How, on me?" asked Spicer brusquely.

"I heard," I answered him evenly, "that you wanted a number of boys recruited. I have a good cutter and know the villages. I'd be glad to make you a price."

"If he heard me," my thought ran, "if he knows that I'm off as fast as I can go to put a spoke in Fanshaws' wheel, he'll try and keep me here; nothing simpler."

But Spicer, it seemed, did not want me to stay.

"There's no hurry," he said patronizingly. "Take your time. I shall stay here another three weeks. (I saw Mary Maldstone make a face of dismay, behind his back) "I'm waiting for the 'Papuan Chief' to bring the rest of the members of the expedition along. Of course I am leader, next to Sir Richard, and I have all the organizing in my hands. If you want to run across, don't mind me. Thursday Island—'Thirsty Island'—every one knows it." He laughed rudely, and looked at my emptied glass.

Now, I am not a drinking man, if I do once in a way shift a glass before the sun's over the yard. I felt, once again, exceedingly inclined to pick a quarrel with this Spicer; once again, remembered that I could not afford to do so, if I wished to make sure of certain things.

"Very well," I said, watching his face. "I'll start across today—anchor at Cap, and get in early tomorrow. Mrs. Maldstone, if you've any commissions, I'll be delighted to attend to them."

"Right you are," answered my hostess cheerfully, with something of her gay schoolgirl manner coming back. "Just a sec, and I'll give you my list." She went off into the store, and Spicer, who had not altered by so much as a line the expression of his large, flat countenance, took the cigarette out of his mouth to remark: "Good trip to you." It was a dismissal, somewhat in the royal manner. I held myself in from answering him as I wished, and followed Mary Maldstone.

Hotels in Thursday Island—of which there are a surprising number—are never the same, twice visited. Proprietors, managers and managers, very almost as the seasons go. The Grand Cosmopolitan, where I put up, looked much as usual, there was a desolate big dining room, with a pilot eating his lunch, slowly and contentedly, as pilots do, alone.

"I could have knocked him off the veranda, with the utmost satisfaction; I am not sure that I shouldn't have done it, in spite of Mrs. Maldstone's presence, if something had not told me to move carefully, keep a look-out for red herrings trailed across the track. "My name is Amory," I said. "What were you doing?"

He made as if to dig me in the ribs with a white, splayed forefinger; I think the look in my eyes made him draw it back, for never, without actually doing it, was I nearer to smashing in any man's face, in my life.

"Naughty, naughty," was what he said. "Ladies present."

Mrs. Maldstone—I don't know how—managed to melt away.

"Really," I said, "I have my reasons, which I dare say—" (for I was

CUPID PLAYS SOME CLEVER TRICKS

(By D. J. Walsh.)

BETH MORAN loved her job better than anything else in the whole wide world. Maybe that sounds selfish but Beth had studied, toiled, sacrificed to get that job and she meant to keep it as long as she could. Not many young women of Beth's age were earning $70 per week. She had a tiny apartment which her Aunt Mary kept spic and span. No man living could ever be to her what her job was.

One afternoon when Beth came home from work she found a package on the living room table. Aunt Mary said a messenger had delivered it. She removed the wrapping paper and found a plain white box. Within the plain white box was an elaborate box bearing the name of an expensive brand of confections. A card lay on top. Upon the card was scribbled these words: "Every time you eat one of these think of me." No name.

"Who sent all that candy?" demanded Aunt Mary, looking over Beth's slim shoulder.

"Haven't an idea. Help yourself, Auntie. There's plenty—three pounds."

Next morning Beth glanced from her desk to the desks of her fellow workers. Some were married, one at least engaged. Of the five remaining men it couldn't be Mr. Lowe, or Edson Moffat, or John Hess. It might be Jerome Warren. It might be Amos Wells. She hoped it was neither Warren nor Wells. Conjecture got her nowhere.

That afternoon she found another gift on the living room table. A florist's box. It contained pink roses. And this nameless message: "When you look at these think of me."

"Somebody's after you," remarked Aunt Mary.

"I wish you wouldn't say that," flared Beth. "I think the man's a nut. Or else he's ashamed to let me know who he is." But she couldn't take her eyes from the lovely roses. "No man's going to make me give up my job for the sake of having Mrs. on my tombstone."

"Of course," mused Aunt Mary. "Times have changed since my day. But I still believe it's a lot better for a girl to marry and raise a family than to be tied down to an office desk till her youth and beauty are past. I was seventeen when I married Tim. We lived together for forty years. Our children are all grown up and married. I'm free to look after you. But, my dear, I can't stay forever. I didn't come here with that understanding."

Beth bit her lip. "You don't seem to realize, Aunt Mary, that I am modern to the core. A business woman first, last and always. Aunt Mary, I've fought and all but starved to get my present position. My job has cost me too much for me to give it up—for that precious little thing called love," she ended mockingly.

The third day Beth received from her nameless pursuer a beautiful framed colored photograph of a beauty spot in the Pocono hills. "Wish you were here with me," was the message.

The fourth day, a lovely, quaint bit of jewelry.

"I picked up this amethyst for you," accompanied the gift.

The fifth day, a book of poems bound in hand-tooled leather. "Read the lines I have marked," she was bidden. Each line contained a direct appeal to her heart. She shut the book, her cheeks flaming.

It was maddeningly mysterious. She felt baffled. Next night she raced upstairs. Her heart throbbed wildly as she opened the living room door. Expectantly, eagerly her eyes sought the living room table. A large gift this time. A basket of fruit.

The seventh day she received another box of candy.

Expectancy had become such a habit with her that on the eighth day when she found nothing she nearly suffered a collapse. When she looked in her mirror she found that she was pale. Her chin wanted to quiver. "Food!" she muttered.

A week passed. A feeling of disappointment, of depression weighed upon Beth.

She looked upstairs one afternoon. Nothing to look forward to any more. On the table was a box. Beth pounced upon it. Her hands trembled, her eyes were dim as she lifted the cover and saw the red roses.

Next day three men were absent from their desks. Vacation had begun. Late that afternoon a telegram was laid before Beth. It was from him. It came from a distant point. Thereafter she received a telegram each day for ten days. Each message was distinctive. But they gave no clue to the sender. Beth kept them all in a neat bundle.

Aunt Mary was lying down the following Sunday afternoon. Beth sat reading. The telephone rang. She leaped to it. A man's voice, deep, pleasant, came to her ears.

"Beth! I just got back. Get my wires?"

"Yes!" The word was propelled from her lips by her intense surprise.

Great Writers Worked Under Odd Conditions

A new game for the students of the history of literature, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Observer, is to examine the physical conditions under which famous writers did their work. For some used to smoke dispensible. Verlaene used to smoke almost incessantly. So did Francois Coppee, and Huysmans was a great cigarette smoker. Both of these men also found the society of cats a stimulant to their inspiration, as did Theophile Gautier and Baudelaire. The story and vigorous Jean Richepin, who reproached Paul Bourget for drinking nothing but water, used to do twenty minutes of gymnastic exercise before sitting down to work, and Mistral could only write poetry after a sharp walk. Ernest Renan used to stare into the palm of his hand as if his ideas came from there. Balzac, who could eat with a gargantuan appetite when he had finished working, needed the help neither of wine nor tobacco, which he detested, although Lamartine falsely accused him of showing teeth blackened by the nicotine of cigars. Chateaubriand, when he dictated to his secretary, used to walk barefoot up and down the cold stone floor of his room.

THE VALUE OF SOUND DESIGN

New Ford engine gives outstanding acceleration, speed and power without sacrificing reliability or economy

THE good performance of the Ford car, so apparent on every highway, is due largely to the sound mechanical design of the engine.

It has outstanding acceleration, speed and power, yet that is only part of its value to you. Greater still is the fact that it brings you all these features without sacrificing either reliability or economy.

That is the reason the Ford car has given such satisfactory service to millions of motorists all over the world and has been chosen by so many large companies that keep accurate cost figures. In every detail of construction it has been carefully planned and made for the work it has to do.

The design of the compression chamber is an important factor in the efficiency of the Ford engine. It is built to allow free passage of gases through the valves and to thoroughly mix the fuel by producing turbulence within the cylinders during compression. The spark thus flashes quickly through the whole fuel charge, resulting in quieter and more effective engine performance.

 Other factors are the direct gravity gasoline feed, the specially designed carburetor, the new hot-spot manifold, aluminum pistons, chrome silicon alloy valves of larger diameter, statically and dynamically balanced crankshaft and flywheel, the simplicity of the electrical, cooling, lubrication, and fuel systems and accuracy in manufacturing.

The Passing of the Heath Hen

THE HEATH HEN

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

In 1914 there died in Cincinnati a famous native American. "Martha" was her name and her fame consisted of the fact that she was the last of her race, the sole survivor of the countless millions of passenger pigeons which once darkened the skies in their flight in the Mississippi valley. Today somewhere in the protecting scrub oak which covers the green plains of Martha's Vineyard there wanders another native American who is the successor to the unique position once held by "Martha." He bears to man-given name, for where "Martha" died in captivity he is spending his last years in the freedom of a vast reservation which was created 20 years ago to save his species from extinction. But the effort has failed for today this single heath hen, a male, on Martha's Vineyard is the last of his race.

When the earliest settlers came to New England the heath hen was the most abundant of all game birds in the East, being distributed from Cape Ann to Virginia and especially abundant in the lowlands of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Long Island. In fact, in Governor Winthrop's day this bird was so common around Boston that laborers "bound out" to employers stipulated in their agreements with their masters that it should not be served to them as their food oftener than a few times a week. But when the settlers began cutting off the forests the decline of the heath hen started. The spread of civilization and the increasing number of cats and dogs which preyed upon its young further decimated the heath hen and by a century ago they were gone from the mainland of Massachusetts, although a few lingered for another decade or two on outer Long Island and on the Jersey plains.

Eventually it was discovered that the island of Martha's Vineyard off the Massachusetts coast, was the only place where these birds could be found and even there they were engaged in what seemed a hopeless struggle against death.

In 1876 they were reported extinct and the introduction of foxes and raccoons to the island the following year made the death of the race seem certain. But somehow the heath hen re-established themselves. In the early '90s William Brewster reckoned that there might be 200 birds left on the island. The grass fire of 1904 ruined their breeding ground, and observers could find only five birds that autumn. In 1897 a hunter with a bird dog failed to start a single bird. Yet again they came back, only to suffer in another fire in 1906. Massachusetts game wardens set the heath hen population at twenty-one in 1907 and at fifty or more in 1908. Then the state took a hand and gave the birds active protection.

By 1916 the colony had grown to a thousand. The foxes and raccoons were exterminated; other pests were kept down. But that summer another fire swept over the heath hen reservation, and that autumn great flights of goshawks descended on the island and preyed on the survivors. In 1917 fewer than 100 heath hens were left; these increased to more than 400 in 1922, when a cold, wet season almost wiped out the colony. Perhaps fifty birds were left in 1923, possibly thirty in 1927. Despite the care of the state and of the Martha's Vineyard Rod and Gun club, despite distribution of food, cultivation of clover and sunflowers, despite the destruction of cats and rats and crows and hawks, the colony dwindled steadily.

And now there is only one left. Prof. Alfred O. Gross of Bowdoin college, who for several years had made an annual census of the heath hens on the island, returned to Boston recently and submitted his annual report. In it he said:

"During the year 1928 the number of heath hens dwindled from three to one lone bird. This bird was alive at the time of the annual census taken March 30 to April 3, 1929. Though suggestions have been made to the state department of conservation to collect and preserve this last bird for science, it has been allowed to live its normal life among the scrub oaks on the sandy plains of Martha's Vineyard island.

"The bird continued to visit the farm of James Green, West Tisbury, during the early spring of 1929, and was reported as late as May 11. After that date, as was the custom of the heath hen in the past, this individual disappeared among the dense scrub oaks to live in seclusion during the summer months. In October, after going through the ordeal of moulting, it again appeared at the Green farm to announce to the world that it was still alive.

"It was seen at irregular intervals during the winter, and since the first warm days of March it has made daily visits to the traditional 'booming' field, the old meadow along the state highway between Edgartown and West Tisbury, in a place less than a hundred yards' distance from Mr. Green's house.

Almost simultaneously with the announcement that the heath hen was traversing the last mile of its road to extinction came the news also that the supposedly extinct passenger pigeon had staged a "come-back." At least two Michigan men, Robert H. Wright, Munising publisher, and Dr. Samuel R. Landes of Traverse City, both of whom knew the passenger pigeon in the days of its abundance, declare that within recent months they have seen passenger pigeons in northern Michigan. Wright, his wife and son declare that from a distance of 10 feet they saw two adult pigeons sitting in the road near Munising, and Doctor Landes and his brother state that they saw a flock of approximately fifteen between Kokomo, Ind., and Indianapolis, while driving from Florida to Michigan.

William B. Merston of Saginaw, one of America's leading authorities on the subject, and Prof. Norman A. Wood of the University of Michigan say there is not the remotest chance for the survival of a single passenger pigeon. Reports have long been received of the pigeon's presence in various localities, but investigation has proved the observers mistaken. Usually the pseudo "passenger pigeon" was found to be a mourning dove, or the band-tailed pigeon from the West.

The extermination of the passenger pigeon was accomplished even more swiftly than that of the heath hen. The state of Michigan was their principal nesting grounds and their rookeries in the northern part of that state covered dozens of square miles with as many as a hundred nests, each occupied by one or two squabs, in a single tree. The farmers considered them a pest and the slaughter of the birds which began in the sixties reached its high tide in the seventies, when the commercial possibilities of the birds were realized.

No one took steps to regulate the slaughter, for the supply was considered unlimited. No matter how many thousands or even millions were killed, the enormous flocks still streamed out of the South in April. They still darkened the sun—broke the branches from trees by their weight. Their rookeries still filled the woods. Then shortly after 1880 the pigeons suddenly disappeared.

Pigeons were observed near Cadillac in 1888, but disappeared a month after their arrival. They were traced northward as far as Oden, Emmet county, and are presumed to have crossed the straits of Mackinac into the Upper Peninsula or Ontario. After 1888 no large flocks were seen any where, and the appearance of a single bird was considered worthy of mention in scientific journals.

Another American bird which is now extinct—and has been for nearly a hundred years—is the great auk. It was different from any other American bird, in that it could not fly, although it had great powers of swimming and diving. Its native habitat was the coast and islands of the North Atlantic and from the first arrival of white men on the shores of the New World they preyed upon these birds, seeking out their eggs for food and killing the birds for their feathers. The slaughter of the defenseless birds went on for more than two centuries when it was suddenly discovered that the great auk was all but exterminated. The last specimens, a male and a female, were killed on Fire Island off the south-western coast of Iceland in the North Atlantic on June 3, 1844, by the crew of a sloop which visited the island for a cargo of meat and feathers of other sea-fowl which inhabited the place. Today either mounted specimens or eggs of the great auk command huge sums whenever, which is a rare occurrence, they are offered for sale. It is estimated that there are about 70 eggs in existence today while the number of skins or mounted specimens does not exceed eighty.

The great auk and the passenger pigeon are extinct. The heath hen is nearing extinction. And not far behind it on the road to oblivion, in spite of all the efforts that have been made to preserve them, are other species. Notable among these are the majestic trumpeter swan, which is today a rarity even in zoos, and the snowy egret, which is all but extinct because its dorsal plumage in the breeding season furnishes the much sought algrette for the ornamentation of women's hats. And so widespread has been the destruction of our national bird, the bald eagle, that only recently a bill was introduced into congress forbidding the killing of an eagle, except when it is caught attacking live stock, in an effort to save it from the fate which has already overtaken some of our birds and is threatening so many others.

Improved Uniform International Sunday School Lesson

By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago (© 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for July 6

ABRAHAM, A PIONEER OF FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-3; 13:1-12; 14:14-16; 17:1-8; Heb. 11:8-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Pleasing God by Obedience.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Abraham, the Pioneer.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Pioneering in an Unknown Country.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Man Who Found Friendship with God.

I. Abraham's Call (12:1).
Abraham's ancestors were idolatrous. God came unto him in Ur of the Chaldees and said unto him,

1. "Get thee out of thy country."
It was necessary for him to break the strong attachments which bound him.

2. Get thee out "from thy kindred."
He was not only to leave behind him his native land, but his relatives as well. His kindred being idolaters, he must separate himself from them.

3. "Into a land that I will show thee."
He was not told what or where the land was.

4. God's Covenant with Abraham (12:2, 3; 17:1-8).

1. What God promised to Abraham.

(1) To make him the father of a great posterity (v. 2). This has been literally fulfilled. (2) To make his name great (v. 2). No name in all history equals that of Abraham in its honorable influence. It is revered among Jews, Mohammedans and Christians. They all acknowledge him as father. (3) A blessing to others (vv. 2, 3). He was not only to become great and share God's blessings, but to be a blessing to others.

2. The land given unto him (17:8).
Although Abraham was a pilgrim, he was permitted to sojourn in the land. The land itself was given to his seed, Israel—God's chosen and most favored nation. The nation to which he came nearest and gave most, in order that it might pass on his goodness to the other nations of the world, was given the most strategic position in the earth.

While the Hebrews have failed in the fulfillment of their divinely appointed task and the world is in chaos because of it, they shall go back to their old land and fulfill their divinely appointed task.

III. Abraham's Generous Treatment of Lot (13:1-12; 14:3-16).

While Abraham sojourned in Egypt, having gone there because of the famine in Canaan, he grew rich in worldly goods. Because of his deception of the king, he was thrust out of Egypt when the truth became known.

1. Abraham and Lot separate (v. 5-12).

Seeing that their temporal relations would engender strife and provoke quarrelling, and knowing the disastrous effect upon the heathen round about, Abraham gave Lot his choice. Though Lot owed everything to Abraham, his selfish heart moved him to grasp for the best, and his decision ultimately brought him to grief. He prospered for awhile, but eventually not only his goods, but he himself and his family were taken away by the confederate kings who came against Sodom.

2. Abraham delivers Lot (14:14-16).

Though Lot's trouble was the fruit of his own sowing, Abraham's magnanimity of soul moved him to take up arms and deliver Lot from the oppressor. While Lot suffered from the selfish choice, Abraham prospered.

IV. Abraham's Faith (Heb. 11:8-10).

1. Its source (v. 8).

The word of God. Faith takes God at His word.

2. Its practice (vv. 9, 10).
Abraham never settled down, even in the land of promise. He was a true pilgrim. He was content to pass through the land because his eyes were fixed on "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

V. Abraham Tested (Heb. 11:17-19).

1. At the command of God he offered up Isaac (v. 17).

He went out from the country in obedience to God. He laid down his son on the altar in obedience to God.

2. The promise of blessing was wrapped up in Isaac (v. 18).

The promise involved this particular child, not just any descendant.

3. The supreme venture (v. 19).

He so completely trusted God that he went all the way. He believed that God would raise up Isaac from the dead in order to make good His promise.

One of His Heroes

To go on cheerfully with a petty round of little duties, little avocations, to smile for the joy of others when the heart is aching . . . who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Doctor Farrar.

Asking God's Guidance

There is nothing so small but that we honor God by asking his guidance in it, or insult Him by taking it into our own hands.—John Ruskin.

Little Danger Now to Hunters of "Big Game"

Wild beasts are not one-hundredth so dangerous as they are reputed, writes John W. Vandercook in the Forum. All capable judges not obsessed by their own importance and by a desire for indiscriminate killing agree to that. The two greatest of all wild animal photographers—Maj. Arthur Dugmore and Martin Johnson—ridicule the notion of the spontaneous ferocity of big game animals.

"In the course of an ordinary African journey, and I care not where one's route lies or how remotely one penetrates, I profoundly believe there is no more danger from animals than there is from being hit by a stray meteor," says one noted wild animal hunter.

Every big game hunter, and there are invariably several in a party, is equipped with a multiple shot, modern rifle, which aims true at upward of half a mile and delivers such a terrific impact that the bullet will upset most animals, no matter where it hits. And always near at hand is to be found an efficient native gun bearer equipped with and capable of using a duplicate weapon. Much shooting, in fact, is now done from the idiotic security of an automobile's back seat. Some expensive Englishmen have even announced that there is "sport" to be had from an airplane.

America's Gold Producer

Ontario can still boast America's richest gold producer in its rightly famous Hollinger mine inasmuch as that mine has yielded, up to the end of 1928, gold to the value of $145,000,000. The production of so much gold has entailed the mining and the milling of 17,000,000 tons of ore. The Hollinger's present subsurface workings, if placed end to end, would reach from New York to Albany and a little beyond, a distance of nearly 150 miles, and its underground railroad system has a length of more than 91 miles.

Saved Baby Squirrels

Soot had filled an unused chimney at Dover-Foxcroft, Maine, to within 17 feet of the top, and that situation together with a rope induced gray squirrels to set up housekeeping therein. When an automobile killed mother squirrel a kind-hearted man used a flashlight to investigate the old, unused chimney and discovered five babies. Rescued and fed with a medicine dropper, they are now a part of Dr. W. A. Purinton's family circle, and are expected to grow up and live happily ever after.—Indianapolis News.

Very Neat, My Friend

The novice at trout fishing had hooked a very small trout and had wound it in until it was rammed against the end of the rod.
Pupil—What do I do now?
Instructor—Climb up the rod and stab it.—Patton's Monthly.

Why A Newspaper Is Like A Woman

Because they are thinner now than they used to be.
Because they have bold faced types.
Because they are easy to read.
Because they are well worth looking over.
Because back numbers are not much in demand.
Because they are not afraid to speak their minds.
Because they have a great deal of influence.
Because if they know anything they usually tell it.
Because every man should have one of his own, and not chase after his neighbor's.—Mineral Wells Index.

Mrs. Chester Smith and children of Dryden spent the last week in Lubbock, Texas, visiting relatives.
