Each year as the time approaches when the garden surplus must be cared for, the homemaker finds herself wondering whether there is any new and easier way to do her canning and yet have as good results as usual. According to the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, however, the same principles that have been advocated for the past four or five years are still essential for satisfactory home canning of fruits and vegetables. The most important points might be expressed in a few sentences:

"Two hours from garden to can" to insure fresh sound products.

Use the "hot pack" when possible so that the material at the center of the can will reach the necessary processing temperature more quickly Nonacid vegetables are always more satisfactory if hot packed.

Can nonacid vegetables under steam pressure because they require sterilization at a higher temperature than that of boiling water (212 degrees F.).

Before beginning any canning, it is well to send to the department for Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," and read it carefully. In addition to a clear explanation of the reasons behind the various recommendations made, the bulletin gives time tables for a number of fruits and tomatoes, which may be canned by the waterbath method, and for most common vegetables, for which the steam pressure canner should be used. The reason why the steam pressure canner is necessary for string beans, peas, corn and other nonacid vegetables is this: The bacteria on these vegetables are very resistant to heat. Though these bacteria might be destroyed by six hours of processing at the temperature of boiling water (212 degrees F.). as in the water-bath canner, in the course of this long-continued boiling the flavor and texture of the vegetapressure canner a temperature of 240 degrees Fahrenheit can be obtained quickly at ten pounds pressure. At this high temperature bacteria cannot survive long, and the canned vegetables are easily processed to insure against spoilage without overcooking at the same time. In 30 to 60 minutes can be accomplished at 240 degrees Fahrenhelt in the steam pressure canner what would take six hours of boiling at 212 degrees Fahrenheit. The pressure canner is a time saver so far as the processing of all vegetables except tomatoes, pickled beets or other very acid mixtures are ing the use of other relishes and vegetables. Variety in the menus and contrast in flavor, color, and texture are assured by changing occasionally to other combinations, says the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture. Vegetables which in themselves are pronounced in flavor are especially appropriate with a roast of lamb. The same is true of lamb chops, stuffed breast of lamb, and other lamb dishes. In a lamb stew, onion, green pepper, and turnip, all having decided flavor of their own, give zest to the meat flavor. And when roast lamb is reheated there is the fine and unusual relish obtained by making a curry sauce.

For the roast relishes like current jelly, spiced conserves and pickles, and horseradish sauce are all good, in addition to any vegetables served. English cooks sometimes have caper sauce or mint sauce, both of which are made with vinegar to give a pleasant mild acidity of flavor. American cooks seem to like their mint occasionally in the form of a greencolored jelly made from apple pectin and flavored with mint, or as mint

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT-

HILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic. a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea, When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drug store: the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

Quitter Never Wins

A small boy likes sleeveless garments on hot days as much as his sister does. Boys of any size will wear their sleeveless jerseys or bathing ouits all day long, if allowed to do so. Most children under six, how-

(Prepared by the United States Department | it is time for a sun bath he will take the upper part off.

This type of sleeveless coat or blouse was designed for the small boy by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The block-shaped trimming down the side front opening gives a tailored finish. Flat neck finishes are recommended on practically all children's clothes, so the trimming is continued as a flat facing around the neck. Three large flat buttons are placed where the boy can manage them himself. An overblouse and suit like this should be made of a fabric with enough body to be laundered without starching so there will be no scratchy seams to irritate a child's tender skin. Plain ginghams, percale and broadcloth are good selections. Boys like colors. Let them have those which are strongly masculine in quality, leaving dainty, delicate shades for the little girls. Never ridicule or ignore a child's likes and dislikes with regard to color or design of his clothes. With a little guidance be will soon develop good taste and have great enjoyment from the colors and kinds of fabrics he has chosen. The mother's part is in producing garments that are well cut and well made, if she wishes her boy to be distinctively dressed. Accurate cutting, followed by straight, fine, close stitching gives that air that accompanies beautifully tallored clothes.

Eradicate Roaches

The standard remedy for eradicating cockroaches is sodium fluoride dust sprinkled in the cracks and crevices. A dust gun or blower is the most effective method of application. The roaches come out, die in a few hours, and may then be swept up and disposed of, Sodium fluoride is polsonous to humans as well, so is handled with care.

Separate Jacket Holds Popularity By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

A vogue which has been flourishing ! since early spring and which is scheduled to carry over through midseason and into early fall, with even greater emphasis, is that of the separate jacket or short coat which gaily contrasts the dress over which it is worn. Throughout the advance fall showings the theme is being interpreted in versatile ways.

Just now jackets in bright red are quite the thing worn over white sports dresses or those of natural colored shantung. The costume in the picture is typical. This outdoor ensemble which tops a white frock with a vivid red jacket is made of a bemberg material especially woven for sports wear. The dress is very simple, to all appearances, but it asserts its chic in such style-convincing details as a fitted-at-the-hipline skirt which develops wide box pleating at the hemline, also the square-cut neckline finished with a soft-tied bow at one side. The gown has short sleeves which is realty much smarter than sleeveless. Take note of the narrow red suede belt, the red heels on the white kid pumps, the white beret with a flange made of the same fabric as the dress, and the white washable pull-on gloves, for these are all items which merge into a unit of ultra modishness.

Jackets of most every color will enliven the autumn landscape. A sprightly effect is that of the orange-color coatee worn over the dress of primrose yellow, and then there are those lovely pastel combinations such as a jacket in Patou pink with the frock of hyacinth blue. Bright navy blue with white, the navy coat cut along nautical lines, is ever so popular. Usually the white shoes boast trimming touches which repeat the gay tone of the lacket.

Those little paletots which are creating such a furore this season, being so amusingly quaint and old-fashioned are awfully smart. For these, velve coloring to the dress with which it is worn. For instance a brown and yellow print dress calls for a paletot of solid brown very een; if the poletot teen is a favorite medium, tuned in be fitted in burglet ke forms, if the sleeves be nothing more or less than shoulder-cape flaps over the arm, so much the better, for it is the povelty of the thing which counts.

THE STORY

On a pleasure trip in eastern waters, Philip Amory, English Werld war veteran, now a trader on the island of Papua, New Guinea, plunges overboard to save the life of a musical comedy actress, known as "Gin-Sling." Amory becomes interested in Pla Laurier, member of a wealthy New South Wales family. He tells her of his knowledge of a wonderful gold field on the island. "Gin-Sling" tells him Pia is engaged to Sir Richard Fanshaw His holiday ended, Am-ory arrives back at Daru. He meets an Englishman, Spicer, there on development business for a syndicate of which Fanshaw is head. Fanshaw's name recalls to Amory a long-forgotten incident in which he witnessed the escape of Fanshaw from a leper colony. He tells his friend Bassett about it and decides to inform Laurier. He goes to Thursday island to send the message. Amory hears Fanshaw dictate a message which indicates that the secret of the gold field is known. Amory meets with an accident that lays him up for three weeks. Recovered, he sails alone for Port Moresby. A storm compels him to put in at Thursday island where he finds Fanshaw.

CHAPTER VI_Contined -12-

"It doesn't matter," I thought. Eight miles is only eight miles, and I'll be there not much behind him." I picked up my little dinghy, slung it into the light-green water, and pulled out. I was getting up anchor when it occurred to me to look and see what Fanshaw might be about. What I saw puzzled me. He had got his engire going, but not thrown in the dutch. The launch was drifting a litie with the tide, but no start had . ben made. I hoisted sail, and got mder way.

When the wind had laid hands on fb and mainsail, and we were running fally, I gave the sheet a turn round is deat, and looked back. The launch, now under way, was beginning to eat up space as it was said she ate up

"Put on as much speed as you like," I thought, watching her, "I'll do itwith this wind-in forty minutes, and that's good enough." Nevertheless I could not feel quite easy; it seemed to me that Fanshaw was just the sort of man to keep a card up his sleeve. "What card could he have?" I argued with myself. "I can say enough -and I will-to put a dozen weddings off; and once put off-once let me have time-

I stopped, seized the tiller, and enatched the boat over.

"Gosh," I said to myself. "Is that your card, my man?" For he had turned the launch, and was heading her-thirty miles an hour-straight

All I had heard of Sir Richard's daring as an airman, in the war, went racing through my head. His flerce attack-his famous stunts.

Truly he was stunting now. He might, probably would, cut my boat in two, and spill me in a shark-haunted sea, seven and a half miles from the mainland. He might merely wreck himself in the attempt. Anyhow, he, meant to try. That was Fanshaw. And, I swear, even as I saw him drive right down on me, I found time, somehow, to think, "G-d, Richard Fanshaw, if you weren't the biggest villian unhung, what friends we two could have been!"

In the same moment, I had reached for the sporting rifle that lay loaded in its clip beside the deckhouse, flung It to my shoulder, and shot him dead. He fell from the wheel of the launch, right down into black blue water, sank and was gone.

The launch, released from control, went ahead furiously. I stayed a minute watching it; wondering whether would get to the mainland without altting anything, and what would be thought of its arrival, empty, if it did. I had little thought of myself, though was vaguely aware that my own life night some day be forfeit, to pay for he life I had that minute spilled into the Pacific ocean. It did not seem to matter very much. Nothing seemed to matter. For now I understood that killing during the red years of war had not been the same as this killing now. I felt myself for the first time in my days, blood guilty.

The man had tried to run me down. Yes-but I had not even attempted to escape, to maneuver out of his way. had shot him; not because he was trying to ram my cutter, but because was on his way to marry Pia Laurier.

With that thought came strange ref; the chill stupidity cleared away my brain. Had I not said I fould give my life for her? Had I ot done it, potentially? If anyone er came to know of the business of morning, I should hang, as sure and could not report to work. The | teed to be permanent.

as God made little apples. Good | the bar of any difference, distrust; Well and good. That seemed to wipe out the stain. I cannot explain; I can only say how I felt about it. I can only tell you that I steered the cutter, with a light enough heart, towards the back of the island, took a great sweep out to sea, and made for Port again by a round that, I calculated, would bring me into town towards afternoon.

When I came in, hoisting the yellow flag that asks for the doctor and pratique, I was left to walt some time. At last the doctor's launch came out and freed me; the customs let me go, with an easy question or two.

Scarcely had I landed, before half my acquaintance-it seemed-were about me, vieing with one another for first chance to relate the event of the day.

Sir Richard Fanshaw had taken out his launch early that morning, and had never come back, and the launch had been sighted actually coming in from Fisherman on its own, till it ran aground on a shoal. When they got to it, there wasn't a soul on board, and no trace of the bridegroom but his gold cigarcase. Fisherman and the surrounding sea had been fruitlessly searched, but the bridegroom had utterly vanished, and it had been necessary to call in the Anglican parson to meet the unlucky bride and break the news.

In the midst of the clamor, I gathered my goods and escaped, thankful to have passed the barrier that I had unconsciously feared-the question I had been awaiting, with anxiety untold-"Did you see anything, hear anything, of an accident?"

I couldn't have convinced any one with a denial of the facts I should have had to deny. But they had deceived themselves; assumed, without question in their eagerness to tell me all about it, that I could have nothing, on my part, to tell.

If I had doubted my safety, I did not doubt it now. I climbed up the long, steep stony path that led to the house where Pia might be found.

The native in a government tunic, who came to the steps, answered my inquiry with "Sinabada, she stop."

Would she see me? I scribbled my name on an envelope, and sent it in by the native. She would see me. The boy came back to say that, "Sinabada, she talk you come."

It seemed too easy, too simple. I felt almost afraid. This was Pia, slowly coming through the curtains at the end of the veranda, Graver, older, changed, I saw her. I saw, too, that the change was not-as it might have been-the work of the last few hours. Whatever had altered her was less recent than the tragic end of her bridegroom. She had, indeed, the look of one who has been half stunned by an unexpected blow, and scarcely yet recovered; but the grief, the wild despair of love parted from love in fulfillment's very hour-these were not hers. I had almost feared the meeting, been afraid of what I might feel in her presence; might, terribly, with shut lips, remember. I thought my love might have been clouded by the shadow of the day, as hers might have been dimmed by time.

I was to learn here, for the first time and the last-since it was for all time after-what love could mean. and do. There was not, between us, the chill of any "variation or shadow of change." In the flower-scented semi-dusk we met, she who should that day, have been the bride of another man, I who had that man's blood upon my hands, and it was as if the long months since we parted on the great liner, at Goode Island, had been a minute only, and as if nothing, no one, had ever come between.

Nothing of all the explanations, all the talk, that should have been between us two, got itself said. For one moment we stood, filling our hungry pleted last summer in Glacier Naeyes with one another, and I think I and the honey of the sweetest kiss in

LOVE PIRACY "MAN" EXPOSED AS WOMAN

Wed Girl When Her Brother Backed Down.

Minneapolis, Minn.-For 24 years Eva Mary Hotaling lived as a man because she could get better jobs and earn more money. She even married a girl to save the family honor when her brother fled to avoid responsibility. And now she has been named as the "man" who stole a married woman's affections!

The suit was filed in the shape of a divorce complaint by Edward S. Halstad, prominent and well-to-do jeweler, against Mrs. Maunena Haltad, who, he charges, treated him "cruelly and inhumanly" after she met "Donald Hotaling," which is the name under which Eva Mary has gone for almost a quarter of a century.

Secret Is Bared.

Halstad's amazement when he learned that his supposed rival was a woman-a fact that reached the authorities because some one close to Mrs. Halstad babbled-may be imagined. He and his wife have been estranged for some time as a result, she said, of threats which he made against her life.

When she sued for divorce he retaliated by naming the supposed man who had been a frequent visitor at his home and whose friendliness with his wife he believed to be due to a clandestine love affair between them.

Miss Hotaling, admitting she was the "Donald" named in the jeweler's complaint, expressed regret that she had been found out and her sex re-

"I was just sixteen when I first donned male attire," she said. "It was not done as a lark, but as the result of a deliberate plan when, seeking work, I discovered that it was very hard for a girl to get a decent job at living wages.'

Saves Brother's Name.

To detectives she said that when her brother, Donald, refused to marry a girl who was in trouble through him, she took his place and led her to the altar. For seven years they lived together, she said, and not even the girl's own family knew the truth until she died in 1923.

After an investigation the authorities held that if Eva Mary chose to wear trousers and call herself Donald there was nothing that could be done about it legally and she was permitted to go about her affairs.

Baltimore.-Incensed by a superfluous letter carved upon the Poe me morial statue in a park here, Edmond Fontaine, a plant pathologist, recently carried out a recently published threat that he would clip off the plural "s" in the carved script from Poe's "Raven," "Dreaming dreams no mortals ever dared to dream before."

Thus read the inscription on the face of the monument while accepted editions of Poe's works have the word "mortal" instead of the plural form. Fontaine is under arrest.

Asserting that the erasure made the line perfect and that there was no defacement of the monument because the letter was at the end of a line. Fontaine said: "Police say I had no business to do it, which is true, but art and poetry cannot bear up under the strain of seven years' waiting to have that error corrected. Poe himself would suffer agonies over such neglect by the Baltimore public."

Be it resolved by the Legislature of Section 1. That Section 11 of Article VII of the Constitution of the State of Texas be amended so as to read as follows:

Section 11. In order to enable the Legislature to perform the duties set forth in the foregoing section, it is hereby declared all lands and other property heretofore set apart and appropriated for the establishment and maintenance of the University of Texas, together with all the proceeds of sales of the same, heretofore made or hereafter to be made, and all grants, donations and appropriations that may hereafter be made by the State of Texas, or from any other source, shall constitute and become a permanent university fund. And the same as realized and received into the Treasury of the State (together with such sums belonging to the fund, as may now be in the Treasury). shall be invested in bonds of the United States, the State of Texas, or counties of said State, or in school bonds of municipalities, or in bonds of any city of this State, or in obligations and pledges issued by the Board of Regents of the University of Texas, or secured by such obligations and pledges, for the construction of dormitories and other buildings for the use of the University of Texas, or in bonds issued under and by virtue of the Federal Farm Loan Act approved by the President of the United States, July 17, 1916, and amendments thereto; and the interest accruing thereon shall be subject to appropriation by the Legislature to accomplish the purpose declared in the foregoing section; provided, that the one-tenth of the alternate sections of the lands granted to railroads, reserved by the State, which were set apart and appropriated to the establishment of the University of Texas, by an Act of the Legislature of February 11, 1858, entitled, "An Act to establish 'the University of Texas,' shall not be included in, or constitute a part of, the permanent university fund. Sec. 2. Said proposed amendment shall be voted on by the electors of this State qualified to vote on constitutional amendments at an election to be held throughout the State on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1930.

Meeting the Needs of Millions of People

The low-priced automobile has brought greater opportunity and added hours of recreation to millions of men and women.

BECAUSE the automobile is such an important factor in the lives and prosperity of so many people, the purpose of the Ford Motor Company is something more than the mere manufacture of a motor car.

There is no service in simply setting up a machine or a plant and letting it turn out goods. The service extends into every detail of the business - design, production, the wages paid and the selling price. All are a part of the plan.

The Ford Motor Company looks upon itself as charged with making an automobile that will meet the needs of millions of people and to provide it at a low price. That is its mission. That is Its duty and its obligation to the public.

The search for better ways of doing things is never-ending. There is ceaseless, untiring effort to find new methods and new machines that will save steps and time in manufacturing. The Ford plants are, in reality, a great mechanical university, dedicated to the advancement of industry. Many manufacturers come to see and share the progress made.

The greatest progress comes by never standing still. Today's methods, however successful, can never be taken as wholly right. They represent simply the best efforts of the moment. Tomorrow must bring an improvement in the methods of the day before. Hard work usually finds the way.

Once it was thought impossible to cast gray iron by the endless chain method. All precedent was against it and every previous experiment had failed. But fair prices to the public demanded that wasteful methods be eliminated. Finally the way was found.

Abetter way of making axle shafts saved thirty-six million dollars in four years. A new method of cutting crankcases reduced the cost by $500,000 a year. The perfection of a new machine saved a similar amount on such a little thing as one bolt. Then electric welding was developed to make many bolts unnecessary and to increase structural strength.

Just a little while ago, an endless chain conveyor almost four miles long was installed at the Rouge plant. This conveyor has a daily capacity of 300,000 parts weighing more than 2,000,000 pounds. By substituting the tireless, unvarying machine for tasks formerly done by hand, it has made the day's work easier for thousands of workers and saved time and money in the manufacture of the car.

All of these things are done in the interest of the public - so that the benefits of reliable, economical transportation may be placed within the means of every one.

PAPER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE United States Supreme court is soon to have a new home in the National Capital befitting the dignity of that important branch of the federal government, but the selection of a site for this temple of justice has meant the passing of one of the most historic buildings in Washington. For 115 years there stood at the corter of Maryland avenue and First greet, N. E., in the block adjoining the Library of Congress, a building, kewn as the "Old Brick Capitol," beause at a critical period in our hisbry it housed the government of the United States. But now it is no more. It has been torn down so that upon its site may be erected the stately new home of the national judiciary.

The Old Brick Capitol came into being as the result of one of the greatest catastrophes which ever befell the republic-the burning of the Capitol and other government buildings in Washington by the British during the War of 1812. As we look back upon It now, it seems strange that our government should have been so apathetic and the citizens of Washington so indifferent to danger as they were in August, 1814, when a British fleet salled into Chesapeake bay and anchored off Fort McHenry. If they gave the matter any thought at all, it was that New York or Baltimore might be attacked, but it seemed to occur to no one that the National Capital was in any serious danger.

For one thing, they counted on Fort McHenry to keep the invaders from coming up the bay, and if the enemy should attempt a naval attack on Washington by way of the Potomac river, they seemed to believe that the antiquated cannon placed at several points below the city would hold them off. It was no tribute to the intelligence of the British leaders to believe this and, as might have been expected. the enemy did exactly what no one seems to have thought they would do. They launched a land attack from the other direction and so swift were their movements and so inadequate the preparations by the Americans for guarding against such an emergency that the red coats were almost upon the city before they were discovered.

Then there was-a great scurrying around and General Winder hastily assembled a force of some 6,000 men to halt the invaders. Five hundred of his men were sailors but the remainder were raw and undisciplined militia, and it was with this force that he faced an army of 5,000 British, mostly sailors and marines, under Admiral Cockburn and General Ross at Bladensburg. Americans to this day remember with shame the "Bladensburg races," as the newspapers of the day called the rout which followed. For although the 500 American sailors made a brave stand, the militia ran and President Madison, who was with the troops, was swept along with them In their panisky flight. In the meantime Dolly Madison, the wife of the President, was proving herself a heroine. When news of the Bladensburg disaster reached Washington, most of the government officials and hundreds of citizens fled incontinently with no thought of trying to save anything from the invaders. But Dolly seized the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States and other priceless documents, loaded them and other valuables of the government in a farm wagon and took them across the Potomac into Virgiola, where she was later joined by the President, who was forced to hide out in the woods us the enemy marched into the Capital.

BELLE BOYD

The British made a triumphat entry of it on August 24. Entering the Executive Mansion, the British officers. according to their own account, drank the British king's health in the American President's wine and then set fire to the building. Next they visited the Capitol and Admiral Cockburn took his sent in the chair of the speaker of the house of representatives. Springing to his feet, he shouted, "Shall this harbor of Yankee Democracy be burned? All for it will say 'Aye!" Shouts of "Aye! Aye" filled the room and a few minutes later the torch was applied. Next they destroyed the treasury building, set fire to other government structures, and when they departed they left behind them a city virtually in ashes.

Washington, with its smoking ruins. was in a critical situation. Many members of congress had never been fully reconciled to moving the National Capital from old-established Philadelphia to this "backwoods village," and after the scattered legislators had reassembled, a movement was started to abandon Washington and reestablish the seat of government in Philadelphia. Then a group of leading Washington citizens got busy. They determined to provide, at their own expense, a suitable meeting place when the new congress convened.

It was this structure which for the next four years housed the government of the United States. President James Monroe took the oath of office on a platform erected on the north side of the building, the first outdoor inauguration ceremonies since Washington's in New York, and the one which established the precedent for the induction into office of later Presidents. But even more important during the four eventful years of the Old Brick Capitol's early history were the acts of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth congresses which met in it. They granted a chaster for 20 years to that bank of the United States against which Andrew Jackson waged his famous fight. They appropriated a million a year for eight years for naval construction. They authorized the President to engage John Trumbull to make his four big paintings for the new Capitol that was to be. They granted to Revolutionary veterans pensions of $20 a month to officers and $8 to privates, on "proof of need." They enacted, on April 4, 1818, the law adopting Capt. Samuel Chester Reid's design for the national flag. They ratified the treaty with Great Britain for the restriction of naval forces on the Great Lakes. They authorized the President to take possession of East and West Florida. They admitted Mississippi, Indiana and Illinois into the Union; made organized territories of Alabama and Arkansas and authorized Alabama to take steps for statehood.

Perhaps most important of all was the long debate over the request of Missouri to be admitted as a state. The request was not granted at that time. But John W. Taylor, a representative from New York, introduced an amendment to the bill for the admission of Missouri, providing that no slavery nor involuntary servitude should exist north of the line of 36 degrees 39 minutes north latitude. This he was finally prevailed upon to withdraw. But in the next congress it was taken up again by Henry Clay and was pressed to adoption as the famous Missouri compromise.

In the meantime, work was going forward on the rebuilding of the Capitol, and on December 6, 1819, just four years and two days after the Fourteenth congress assembled in the Old Brick Capitol, the Sixteenth congress assembled in the new marble Capitol, the first unit of the great structure which houses our government today. The Old Brick Capitol was turned over to the Circuit court for its use-an appropriate predecessor of the new home of the Supreme court which is to be built on its site. Later the Old Brick Capitol became a fashionable boarding house and served as a home for many notables during the next three decades. In it John C. Calhoun, statesman, senator and Vice President. lived for nearly a quarter of a century. and he died in one of the rooms on the second floor in 1841.

The Civil war brought to the Old Brick Capitol its second era of fame. Commandeered by the War department for use as a house of detention, it became known as Old Capitol Prison and held, within its walls scores of socalled "prisoners of state"-blockade runners, foreign army officers captured while serving in the Confederate forces, conscientious objectors, Union deserters and Confederate sples. Un- God, the God of Israel. doubtedly the most famous of all these was the betwitching woman spy for the men in gray-Eelle Boyd.

After the war the Old Brick Capitol was remodeled and converted into three private dwellings, which were occupied by Associate Justice Field of the Supreme court, General Dunn and Mrs. Condit-Smith. In this period it was the scene of one more event of historic interest. In one of the drawing rooms Miss Louisa Condit-Smith became the wife of Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, soldier, territorial administrater and candidate for the nomination for the Presidency.

In 1921 Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont bought the building and presented it to the National Woman's party for its pational headquarters. It became a gathering place for the feminists, not only of America but of the whole world, and there was carried on the work for the freedom and equality of women. Finally the government, in seeking a site for the new Supreme court building, selected this one, instituted condemnation proceedings two razing it began.

I. How Naomy and Ruth Were Brought Together (1:1-15).

On account of famine in Bethlehem of Judah, Naomi with her husband and two sons solourned in the land of Moab. After the death of her has band, her two sons married Monbitish women. After a time her sons died also. After the death of her sons, Naomi resolved to return to her homeland, having heard that the Lord bad visited his people in giving them bread. They went to Moah to escape trouble but only got into more. This is always the case when God's people go into the world to escape difficulties. It was not until Naomi was thus chastised that she resolved to return. When the time came for her to go Ruth and Orpah accompanied her for a distance.

II. Ruth's Noble Choice (1:16-18). Greatly as Naomi loved her daughters-in-law, she would not have them go into this matter blindly. She wished them to know the seriousness of their Naomi told them that she had no more sons for whom they could wait. In that day for a woman to be unmarried was the greatest disgrace. Society differed then from now. No avenues were open by which women could earn their living.

2. Heathen gods must be renounced

Idolatrous worship could not be carried on in the land where God's people dwelt. This was delicately touched upon when Orpah went back. She went back when it was plain that there was no chance for her to get a husband. After Orpah's return Naomi put an additional test upon Ruth, that of giving up her religion. Ruth was equal to the occasion. Her mind was fully made up. She was willing to accept as her God the One who was able to produce in his subjects the nobility of character she had observed in Naomi, Ruth's determination was so definite and unfaltering that her expressions have come down to us in words which "no poetry has outrivaled and no pathos has exceeded, and which has gone through centuries with the music which will not let them be forgotten." She was determined to share Naomi's journey, her home, her lot in life, and grave in death, whatever or wherever that would be. To crown it all, she renounced her heathen gods and worshiped Jehovah, the true God.

III. Blessings Which Attended Ruth's Choice. 1. She found the true God (1:16). Instead of a heathen god who was unable to help her, she had the Living

Southern France Clings to Beloved Bullfight

There are many things which distinguish the north of France from the south. The one drinks beer or cider, the other drinks wine. The one cooks with butter, the other with oil. The one eats leeks and the other garlic. Above all, writes a correspondent of the London Sunday Observer, the Midi has never quite forgiven Paris for having passed the law which makes bullfights illegal. Not that the Midi observes the law which is openly and flagrantly defied. and the authorities dare not en force it.

Recently, six bulls were killed on a Sunday afternoon at Beziers before an enormous crowd, and at the end of the entertainment a member of the municipal council made a speech, in which he referred to the art and the poetry to be found in the display. Other bullflights have recently taken place, or are announced, at Arle., at Nimes, at Grasse and at Bordeaux. and there is even talk of one as near Paris as Compeigne.

Shift to Cities Checked

The farm-to-city shift of popula tion, which in 1926 had given Indications of reaching alarming proportions, has fallen away until during 1929 the loss to the farms was only 209,000,

It is estimated that 1,876,000 persons left farms to reside in the cit ies, but during the same period 1.257,-000 left the cities for the farms. Helping to balance the shift were the 631,000 births on the farms, with only 281,000 deaths. During the peak year of 1926 more than 2,100,000 persons left the farms for the cities.

As the result of the successful flights of airplanes with "robot" pilots in several countries, an amendment to the International air convention has been made to provide that pflotless aircraft shall not fly over any other country except its

Why Not Eliminate Some?

A new radio invention will bring more tones to the ear-tones that are now lost. Now if some one will invent something that will lose some of the tones that beat upon the eardrum, the motorcycles, sand trucks and riveters may do their darndest. -Minneapolis Journal.

Man Is "Throw-Back"

Dr. H. Barillet, a French physician, has found among his patients a "throwback" man with the split breastbone of an ape. X-rays reveal the split plainly, he says.-Los Angeles Times.
