THANKSGIVING

Next Thursday, November 24th is Thanksgiving day—a day set apart that all should give thanks to our Creator for the many blessings that we have had.

During the past year times have been hard and many will think that they have not much to be thankful for. Truly we have many things, and just as our forefathers met that first Thanksgiving to give thanks, even after the terrible hardships they had gone through, just so this Thanksgiving should our citizens be thankful for their blessings whether great or small.

A WORTHY CAUSE

Appearing elsewhere in this paper will be found an ad from the young folks of the various churches in the city asking for old worn out and broken toys that they may mend and repair and repaint them if necessary so that when Santa Claus comes the less fortunate children of this community will be made happy and their hearts gladdened by receiving a toy gift of some kind.

These young folks of our community, who tomorrow will be our future citizens are to be commended for this and our city should be proud of them. In this day and time it is often said that young folks have no thought of tomorrow or others that all they think of is a good time. Such is not the case and these splendid young folks of Sanderson show that this is not so.

Citizens, young folks and all, go through your home, gather up those broken and discarded toys and take them to Mrs. Nichols' home and let help these young folks carry on and see that at Christmas time every child in our community is made happy and his heart rejoice in the fact that Santa Claus did come to his home.

CHURCH OBSERVANCES TO MARK CLOSE OF BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION NOV. 24

The George Washington Bicentennial Celebration will be brought to a close on Thanksgiving Day, November 24, in the same manner in which it began on February 22—with religious services in honor of George Washington in all the churches of America.

The United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission estimates that more than 75,000 churches will participate in separate Thanksgiving Bicentennial exercises. In many cities and towns, the Bicentennial Commission reports, churches of all denominations will hold joint commemorative Thanksgiving Day exercises in honor of the Father of his Country.

The reports from the religious societies of America indicate that every church of the land will participate in this closing tribute, either by holding separate Bicentennial exercises or by joining with the other churches of their community in a combined celebration.

The records of the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission indicate that to date more than one million separate Bicentennial programs have been held in all parts of the world.

This unprecedented Celebration—the greatest tribute ever paid to a national hero—will come to an official close with observances of simplicity and respect. A united nation will show its reverence and admiration for its founder.

FOUND SANDERSON PASTOR

The Pastor of the Sanderson Methodist Church, and family were surprised Thursday to find in their absence the kitchen to be filled with eatables of all kinds.

The Stradleys have been in Sanderson now into their third year and have received 12 poundings, but nothing to compare to the one Thursday which filled the pantry, and the kitchen, as possibly three times the number of Sandersonians took part Thursday as before.

The Stradleys desire to express their deep sense of gratitude, and as the Pastor says their sole desire is to honor the Lord, with an acceptable service to the community in his name.

We believe in a larger and a better Sanderson as a result of adjusted economic conditions which we hope will come soon, and we will diligently endeavor to do our part in such building.

PRESBYTERIAL AUXILIARY OBSERVING PRAYER WEEK

The Presbyterian Auxiliary is observing this week of prayer with services and a mission study each day at the church. The first meeting on Monday was held with Mrs. Earls Pierson, Mesdames McKee, Stovell, McCall and Pierson taking part on the program.

A social followed and the hostess served refreshments.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to express my thanks to each and every one who voted for me in the general election.

Sincerely, S. C. Bodkin.

A SHORT SHORT STORY TEMPERAMENT

BY PAUL HAWK

Elsie, carrying her heavy traveling bag, looked up at the rambling, aristocratic old structure that was, she hoped, to be her new home for a long time. It was a beautiful place surrounded by big grounds, and it seemed to be a perfect setting for the sign which announced in Old English letters: Hudson Institute of Fine Arts.

She crossed the wide veranda and entered a paneled hallway. Sounds to the left told her a dancing class was being held. Muted pounds of pianos from various parts of the house came to her. She went into the office on the right.

"I'm Miss Chesterton," she announced to the woman there.
"And I'm Mrs. Wilson," said that lady. She was little and entergetic, as befitted the business manager of such a large school. "I'm glad you're here. I've already quite a large class of beginners for you. Come, I'll show you your room. You can get settled today, and tomorrow you start work."

The room was on the third floor. "I must warn you, Miss Chesterton," Mrs. Wilson told her, "that it's Mr. Carleton you'll have to please. Understand it's not to make you nervous or anything, but, although I'm business manager, he has the say about all our instructors. And he's quite temperamental. He won't stand for any disturbing noises. So, as your room is just beneath his apartment, you'll have to be careful. And he's liable to practice at any time of the day or night. You know of him of course. His programs are well received all over the country. Some day, he'll be America's leading musician. But I'm sure you'll get along all right."

Elsie found her trunk in the hall. As she went into her room, she heard strains of music from the studio above. She listened for a while, standing at the window and looking out over the garden of flowers, the velvety lawn and well-kept shrubs, toward the river in the background. What a musician that man was!

As she turned away from the wide window, she inadvertently tipped over a potted plant that some former occupant had left there. It fell to the floor with a loud crash. Instantly the music above stopped. She heard restless artist tearing his long hair in a frenzy at being interrupted in his work.

She heard a crisp voice through the ceiling. "I suppose you are Miss Chesterton?"
Elsie's face flushed. Not a very good choice to make for their denominational choice to come worship the Lord and serve Him with us. We give also special invitation to all Christian people to come to the Lord's table with us every first Sunday at the 11 a. m. hour.

B. M. Stradley, Pastor.

BAPTIST

Ira Harrison, Pastor: The pastor will occupy the pulpit at both hours Sunday. He is attending the Baptist Convention this week in Abilene but will return in time for all the services Sunday.

auspicious beginning for her. "Yes," she answered.

"I hope you will contrive not to follow your noisier practices when I'm practicing. It's quite unfortunate you should get that room below me."

"I'm sorry," said Elsie, "but I certainly didn't do it on purpose."

His voice hadn't been unkind, but if he'd say that to somebody he'd never met, what would it be later on after he got to know her? She'd be worried all the time.

Elsie walked down to the river's edge. On the way back, she stopped to admire the flowers in the garden. Rounding the corner, of a little trellised summer house, she bumped into a bareheaded, over-alled young man. His sandy hair was all awry. His hands were dirty and in one of them there was a trowel.

"I beg your pardon," he said, and stepped back to look at her.

Elsie was enough to make a young man look twice. She had long black hair coiled in a knot low on her neck. She had dreamy black eyes that fitted the solemn intonation of her name—Elsie. Her skin was of that milky whiteness that only appears startling on the perfect brunette. And while she was not fat, Elsie was very properly curved.

"What a pretty garden!" she exclaimed.

"Thank you," said the young man. Elsie looked back at him. He was rather handsome for a gardener.

"And do you help in the house too?" she asked.

The young man looked at her curiously. "I might," he said, and grinned.
"Because I've a trunk to get in my room. I'm Miss Chesterton."
"Call me Red," he said.
Red was a sympathetic person. He moved her trunk in, offered her a cigarette, and before she knew it, Elsie was confessing her hopes and fears about her job to him.

Red scoffed. "Afraid of that fellow? Don't let these temperamental ones bother you. He's just a lot of wind when he's keyed up that way. If Carleton worries you, you just let me know!"

"Even your sympathy helps," said Elsie. "You see, I've studied a lot, and I'm good, but I've never taught before."

"What's your—er—handle?" Red asked boldly. "Miss Chesterton's too long."

"All right—call me Elsie then."
The first week was very long. The pupils of Elsie had liked her, but the hour lessons all day long were trying on her nerves. And then there was the matter wondering if Mr. Carleton, whom she had still not met, would like her work. And the other matter of evenings in a city in which she had no pals.

She repeated daily to the garden since he was always there, it was only natural that she talk to the understanding Red.

"That Carleton's so sneaky," she complained to him. "Why, after a lesson the other day, I opened the door, and there he went down the dark hall. I just know he was listening in on me. I thought he was an older man though."

"Bout my age," said Red. "Did you talk to him?"

"I've never even had a good look at him. He beats me!"

"Want to go to a play with me tonight?"

"Oh, I do."

The next day, Mrs. Wilson called Elsie into the office. "Mr. Carleton's not exactly pleased with your method of giving lessons, she said. "He hopes you'll be more patient and try harder."

Patient? As if she weren't. "Why doesn't he talk things over with me?" Elsie wailed.

"Now don't be too alarmed, my dear. He just doesn't like interviews and routine work. We have to humor him you know. And it does show he's interested in your work."

Elsie retreated to the garden. She sat down in the summer house, hidden from view. Her best chance, and she was failing! The tears came to her eyes.

Red came in. She couldn't see well enough to tell he wasn't at all dirty from his gardening.

"Tell me about it," he demanded. Elsie did.

"Come on, get it over." He pulled her head to his shoulder and patted her comfortingly while she cried a little. Then he turned up her wet face and kissed her lips. That remedy seemed to relieve her a little.

"I hope," Red said, cheerfully, "that Carleton keeps on picking on you. It certainly helps me! As a comforter, I'm at my best."

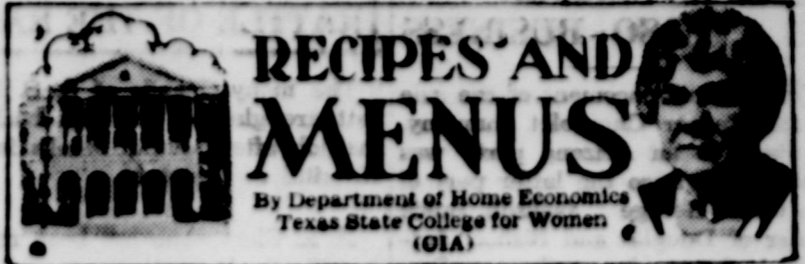

Elsie smiled through her tears. "You might try that—that remedy again."

Carleton did keep on fussing at her—but still through Mrs. Wilson. And Red was there each time with his remedy—a remedy daily acquiring more healing power. In fact, she looked forward to the remedy more than she hated Carleton's complaints.

Then one day, Red said, "Listen, I know a permanent cure for this Carleton trouble. If you take it, Carleton won't ever cuss you out any more."

Elsie looked at him questioningly. "Marry me! You know I love you."

Some time later, Elsie started for her studio and called back to him. "Til dinner then, Red."

Mrs. Wilson appeared beside her. "What did you call him?"

"Red," said Elsie defiantly, prepared for criticism about her acquaintance with a gardener.

"Imagine! And with his temperament too! Oh well, Mr. Carleton does some funny things—such as that—and putting around in the garden. All great musicians do." Elsie gasped—and finally understood.

THE END

What Must A Young Girl Know Before Marriage?

There is a true story told of an ingenious Budapest bookseller, who—faced with hard times—advertised that he had for sale a volume of information indispensable to a young girl contemplating matrimony. He said that in this book would be found—not what every young girl is told before marriage—but what she will find it indispensable to know.

Thousands sent their mail-orders. Then—complaints began to pour in. Finally an outraged man brought the bookseller into court. He stated that he had sent for one of these compendia of indispensable information . . . and that he received by mail a 19th Century Cook-book—"Lazy Little Lulu Learns Cookery." He wanted the bookseller found guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses. . . .

But the judge acquitted him, saying that he was in thoro accord with the bookseller's view that a knowledge of cooking was of primary importance to the prospective bride.

The modern newspaper could be advertised truthfully in very much the same way. The most indispensable knowledge to a young wife is knowing where and what to buy . . . how to get the most for her money. . . . how—on a limited budget—to keep her home fresh, new, attractive. . . . how to dress herself and her children, inexpensively yet in the very latest styles . . . how to serve on her table foods of the most dependable quality.

In other words—the advertising that appears in your local newspaper contains information of real value . . . NEWS! Announcements of the latest and best in the shopping world. This is indispensable information to every woman, especially to those with families. It helps them run their homes successfully. Surely that is what every woman must know.
