League Spelling Is a Difficult Test

By Margaret Bowman

If you were to listen in on a meeting of the Interscholastic League spellers, you would probably learn some words you never before heard. This is because the words used are chosen by the Bureau of Public School Interests as being the most difficult words of the year. Every year the state university publishes a small book containing words ordinarily misspelled. It isn't always the longest word that is the hardest to spell. These words are submitted by high schools all over Texas and none of them will be foun in an adopted spelling text. Because these words are so difficult not many high school boys and girls dare try to spell them. The spellers who are attending regularly are Maxine Clatfelter, Vaunceil Henderson, Mary Beth Banner, Emma Fay Harris, Margaret Bowman, Helen Turner, Joyce Yeates and Laurence Gutierrez.
