Brewster County Man Candidate for State Legislature

T. B. (Tom) Davis of Alpine has authorized the Times to place his name before the people as a candidate for state representative for District 87, which includes the counties of Terrell, Brewster, Kinney, Val Verde and Maverick.

Mr. Davis went to Alpine early in 1920 as an employee of the First National Bank, remaining with the bank until 1925 when he went to Brownsville as district representative for the West Coast Life Insurance Company to organize the four counties in that area. After completion of his contract with that company, he was with the Cavness Audit Co. of San Antonio in the public accounting business, specializing in county and municipal audits.

While with the bank in Alpine, in 1923 he audited Brewster County for a period covering five years. Subsequent to 1925 he was engaged in the public accounting business, having handled continuously the city of Marfa, city of Alpine, city of McCombs and city of Pleasanton, Texas; also continuously through several political changes, the counties of Brewster and Jeff Davis, and at various times, Atascosa and Karnes counties.

Work in the accounting field prior to 1916 and three years in the army, both in the United States and overseas, and since 1925 with county and municipal governments, gives him a knowledge of the application of laws covering taxation and brings within his experience many of the errors and inequalities of tax laws, he says. The duties which are placed on a representative are closely allied to tax legislation. Mr. Davis believes, and he has made a close study of the wrong kind of laws and their effects.

Mr. Davis states that he believes his 33 years of experience has prepared him for the office he seeks and that his loyalty for and consideration of the interests of the people he will represent would be of benefit to all the citizens of the district.

"It appears that much money could be saved for the state by a more economical administration of the state's business," Mr. Davis says, "and wherever possible I will work for such a saving, if elected, and will at all times do everything possible for the best interests of all the district and the state."

Sims led the "Scripture Lesson on 'The Fruit of the Spirit is Peace.'" At the conclusion of the program Mrs. Savage served a delicious ice course to the following members and guest: Mrs. Lee McCue, Mrs. Earl Pierson, Mrs. Webb Townsend, Mrs. J. W. Happle, Mrs. H. E. Ezelle, Mrs. Edward Downie, Mrs. Emma C. Gregory, Mrs. C. L. Sims, and Mrs. Ervin Grigsby.

OGLESBY'S OGLES

By Whitfield Oglesby

The Democratic Convention opens next week in Chicago. Every indication points to a history making convention. It is my belief that a standard bearer for the Democratic Party will be named in a less number of ballots than the Republicans required. It is more than even money Roosevelt will be named on the first or second ballot. As John Garner recently said, "Roosevelt is the only strong man the Democrats have." Many months back I predicted FDR would be the first President of these United States who would run for and get a third term. It is very evident now he has played his part well, even now no one (possibly with the exception of Jim Farley) knows what he will do.

There are many things in his favor for re-election to a third term. His knowledge and control of foreign affairs are his best assets. Records will support the fact that he knew events in Europe were leading to the present situation. He has always been a firm believer in a strong national defense.

Certainly the people should realize that President Roosevelt would be doing a great thing for this country by carrying on in the driver's seat for another term. During these black days of civilization it is certainly a hard task to guide the destiny of this great country.

Displaying its expected magnificent spirit of patriotism, industry is gearing its machine to provide the munitions which will enable preservation of American peace, and, if that be possible, victory in war. It has no delusions as to the task before it. It knows that although Congress is appropriating billions, it cannot reach the point of adequate production without time. It will minimize that time by every device which the fertile minds of its experts can suggest.

I really enjoyed my recent visit to Sanderson, however, I did have one disappointment; after getting a dead head on the road from Fort Stockton, the bank robbers did not show up. To Jim and Andy that is just another event, but to me it was an opportunity.

Frank, of Frank's Beauty Rest Courts, is the perfect host. He is so nice to his clients that he tries to preserve them by freezing them in those air-conditioned courts. But seriously, I did enjoy my stay with him. He has a lay-out worthy of the best.

I hope Sims alias the County Judge got that bill at Haley Drug straightened out, the one made out to "Bill." I forget the last name.

Oh yes, I must not close without thanking Ethel Harrell for that grand milk shake she bought for me.

Action Keynotes
Latest Cassidy
Adventure Epic

Action is the keynot of the latest "Hopalong" Cassidy romance, "The Showdown," which opened at the Princess Theatre today.

Action as the action fans like it—hard riding, hard fighting, hard playing, and William Boyd, who plays the redoubtable "Hopalong," proves himself a master portrayer of the silent man of the west who sees justice prevail in the process.

The story concerns the machinations of a band of crooked gamblers and horse thieves who come into a frontier community and attempt to run it—until Cassidy catches up with them, and winds up with one of the most thrilling runaways and captures every recorded. This is performed and photographed in the best manner of Producer Harry Sherman, the gent who is responsible for lifting the Western out of the old "chase" tradition into legitimate motion picture entertainment.

The cast also includes Russell Hayden, Britt Wood, Morris Ankrum, lovely Jane Clayton and "The King's Men," cowboy singing aggregation of radio fame. The story is based on characters created by Clarence E. Mulford, topnotch writer of western action fiction.

difficulties, but her love for her husband remains a blinding emotion to which she clings against all odds. However, when Walter Pidgeon, impersonating the second romantic lead, comes into her life the picture moves swiftly and dynamically to a climax that is as punchy as it is unexpected.

For the first time in her career, the lovely Miss Bennett, looking even more alluring than usual in an impressive array of stunning gowns, does an exhibition rumba on the screen. This dancing required long hours of practice and many studio rehearsals before the star was satisfied that her performance of this highly technical terpsichorean feat was well nigh perfect. And perfect it is. And the lovely star proves again that she is not only a fine dramatic actress, and a clever comedienne, but also a past master at handling the light fantastic toes.

George Raft, who is noted for his excellent screen portrayals, clicks brilliantly as the day gentleman who is fully ambitious and finally to grips with the law. Raft has handled in a past and proves once again that actor's ability is based on experience and native talent that tell an exciting story. TIMELY TIPS

ON THE CARE OF YOUR ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR

from your electric service man

Follow the suggestions below and you will enjoy even more economical and efficient service from your always dependable and inexpensive-to-operate electric refrigerator.

OIL PER INSTRUCTIONS. If your refrigerator has an open type unit, it should be oiled regularly in accordance with manufacturer's instructions. If it has a sealed unit, it does not require oiling. In case you do not know how to oil your refrigerator, consult the dealer from whom you purchased it.

DO NOT CROWD STORAGE SPACE. Since free circulation of air inside the food cabinet is necessary to maintain proper temperatures economically, dishes and other containers should not be crowded too closely together on the shelves.

WATCH TEMPERATURE SETTING. To keep down operating cost do not set control for colder than necessary. Food compartment temperatures should not go below 38 degrees or above 48 degrees.

KEEP CONDENSER CLEAN. The condenser looks like a finned radiator. In some models it is housed with the motor and compressor; in others, it is behind a removable shield on the back of the refrigerator. Use a long bristle brush or the suction hose from your vacuum cleaner to clean off all dirt and lint. This will permit quicker condensation of the refrigerant and result in more economical operation.

DEFROST REGULARLY. When frost becomes thick on the freezing unit, it acts as an insulator, preventing efficient cooling and also resulting in extra running of the motor. Frequency of defrosting depends upon atmospheric humidity and moisture content of foods stored. A good rule is to defrost whenever the frost on the freezing unit becomes three-eighths of an inch thick.

SPECIAL NOTE TO VACATIONIST

Before you leave on your trip, be sure to turn your temperature control to the vacation setting, or the lowest setting. This will protect any food in the refrigerator and keep the operating cost at a minimum. Excess heat and lack of air circulation in a tightly closed house will cause an unused refrigerator to run as long or more than it would in normal use, so leaving it on a high setting wastes electricity.

If you plan to be gone for a considerable length of time and wish to disconnect your refrigerator, be sure to consult your dealer for instructions on proper adjustments to be made. Otherwise the refrigeration cycle may be thrown out of balance. This applies only to open units. No adjustments are necessary on sealed units.

The Story of Forty Mothers' Hard Director to direct an eight-month-old baby—or two jumps the mad house." would be the title of a book on infants in motormen, a book which Bussey is well qualified to direct. "The Story of Forty Little Mothers," starring Cantor and showing Monday at the Princess. Baby Quintanilla plays in importance only of Cantor and upon Berkeley's shoulders fell the problem of the infant.

"It was my idea," explained Berkeley, "that we should get a baby young enough to be cute but helpless. I wanted the sort of a baby that, because of its cuteness and helplessness, any one in the audience would want to adopt as Eddie Cantor does in the story.

"We found the baby, an eight-month-old twin and I found a problem that I didn't bargain for. How to get this baby to register expressions called for in the script?"

"I've never had any children of my own and I'm no expert on child psychology. But I simply had to find some method of getting different facial reactions from the baby."

The answer was that Berkeley became Baby's official nurse. When it cried it was the director who quited it. When it laughed it was Berkeley who played with it. He made his mood fit that of the baby and the result was that even the child's mother was amazed at the little tricks and

Vassar College Marks 75th Year As Monument To Founder's Vision

VASSAR COLLEGE, first private-ly endowed women's college in the world, is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year.

Educators throughout the country are honoring the memory of its founder, Matthew Vassar, self-educated Poughkeepsie, N. Y., brewer who first made available to women educational opportunities equal to those afforded men.

Vassar had come to the United States from England as a boy, and had educated himself while clerking in a store. By the middle of the nineteenth century he was the owner of his own brewery and a leader in the community.

Charitable and industrious, he was highly regarded by his neighbors, although commonly considered a bit eccentric on the subject of higher education for women.

At the time, women's educational institutions were limited to a few seminaries and secondary schools. Matthew Vassar, however, forced the issue. Seventy-nine years ago this Summer his neighbors gathered in little groups on the streets of Poughkeepsie, solemnly shaking their heads. Vassar had donated the money and land to put his theories to the test.

The Civil War interfered with his plans, and it was not until four years later, in 1865, that "Vassar's Folly," as the townfolk called the experiment, opened its doors. The official name of the institution at that time was Vassar Female College. This was shortened two years later to Vassar College.

Today Vassar College has 61 buildings, 950 acres of campus, a distinguished alumnae, and world-wide recognition as an institution of learning. The success of Matthew Vassar's experiment soon led to the establishment of other women's colleges. There are now more than 120 in the United States.

But Vassar never knew how widely his views were to be accepted. He died suddenly in 1868, at the age of 76, while attending a meeting of the college board of trustees. In his will, he left a second endowment to carry on the work he had started.

Berkeley talked to the baby just as if he were addressing an adult in explaining scenes. While he knew that Baby did not understand a word he was saying, his tone of voice and expression elicited a facial response that was uncanny.

If he looked sad or worried, the baby did likewise. If he looked hilariously happy, so did the baby. Sometimes it required from a half to three-quarters of an hour to conjure up the required expression and hold it long enough for the camera to register it.

On one occasion Berkeley had exhausted every known method to persuade Baby to look sad. Finally he picked up and bawled it out just as if it were a temperamental star. His tone of voice and expression apparently hurt its feelings and its face took on just the puzzled, hurt expression the director wanted.

On another occasion he wanted it to put its head on one side as if deliberating a question. He cocked his own head back and forth so much that his neck ached before the baby imitated him, but finally it came through.

In order to make it clap its hands delightedly on a given cue, Berkeley first stood on his head and waved his feet in the air to make it laugh, then he jumped to his feet and clapped his hands. Fifteen minutes of that and he was dizzy, but Baby was clapping its hands continuously.

Range Conservation Hits New High on Texas Ranches

College Station.—Range conservation in Texas hit a new high under the 1939 AAA program when 22,236 ranches earned $5,822,824 of the $6,347,224 available for the work.

More work was done on nearly all of the approved range-building practices under the 1939 program, a summary released by the state AAA headquarters revealed.

Reseeding by deferred grazing was practiced on 5,397,340 acres in 1939 as compared with 4,811,614 acres the previous year.

On 154,824 acres grass was reseeded artificially, nearly three times as much as in 1938. Some 2,870 acres were sodded with grass.

Contour listing, furrowing or subsoiling was put into effect on 108,666 acres, and 27,089,557 acres were ridged on the contour to hold water on the range.

With 6,567,290 feet of spreader terraces constructed, the total for 1939 surpassed by more than half a million feet the work done in 1938. Spreader dam construction made a comparable gain of 200,000 cubic yards of dirt moved for a total of 1,538-

Drilling of water wells to supply stock water jumped 100,000 linear feet for a total of 574,486 feet in the state. In the development of seeps and springs for watering purposes 43,971 cubic feet of soil, gravel and rock were excavated.

FOR YOUR CONVENIENCE

In the present day, people place great stress on having things convenient. Many conveniences are taken as a matter of course—especially those of an intangible nature, such as the services of a modern bank.

If a merchant has no calls for an item, he no longer continues to stock it, but he is always glad to keep things for which there is a steady demand. When you buy from him, you make it possible for him to keep on hand the things you want, and thus, you add to your own convenience.

The merchandise offered by a bank is service. When you use your local bank, you add to your own convenience and benefit your community. We invite your business.
