ROBERT O. BLAND LECTURES GENERAL SCIENCE CLASSES

Mr. Robert O. Bland of the U. S. Weather Bureau lectured to the science class of Sanderson High School Friday afternoon on the subject of weather and the various items directly related to the determination of and prediction of weather.

Mr. Bland gave most of his time to how relative and obsolute humidity are determined, and to the relation of high and low pressure areas over the United States at any given time. A chart was also shown the class and some instruction as to how it might be interpreted was given.

The determination of Dewpoint, and a discussion of the uses of maximum and minimum thermometures was included in

The squeeze play of the week bills. Just look at the set-up: Over there on third base is a pounder, and on first base, leaning way off, is that fat 56.000pound Scientific boy. The Truckers are at bat and the Railroaders have the ball. (They always had the ball in Texas.) So, for that reason, two strikes have already been called. The crowd is hollering for a run. The wind-up is starting, and it bagger; or will it be a solid smack to deep left to send that Scientific boy over the plate? Baseball is an exciting game. Preceded today by the Rev.
