LISTEN TO LUKE

Beginning in this week's edition of The Times there are more reminders to shoppers of some of the items local merchants have to offer. It would behoove every shopper to first examine the list of attractive gift displays which are offered by Sanderson business men before they go off to other towns to do their business shopping.

We have approximately three and a half weeks remaining before Christmas — plenty of time for business men to get back a special order of some gift item; and we would suggest a shopper inquiring about some particular item he might have in mind and see your local merchant cannot get here for you in time for Christmas.

Local merchants depend upon the people of Terrell County for their business and we feel sure they would like for the people of Terrell County to depend upon them as their source of supply for Christmas items, as well as merchandise sold the year 'round. On most items that will be bought at Christmas time, we feel that prices here will be very low, if any, higher than a similar product in some other town, and we know that the local merchant would appreciate your business more.

We have seen catalogues displayed in some business firms which would enable the customer to order some item that the store might not have in stock. They are these catalogues displayed that purpose and urge the use of them.

Your cooperation and patronage of your local merchant will be greatly appreciated. Watch the columns of this paper for Christmas shopping suggestions.

Deer Hunting Proves Unprofitable For Many Area Nimrods

Deer hunting proved to be not too profitable for many area hunters in the season just closed Tuesday. Many of the deer that were brought to town were not in too good shape for tasty eating and some of the animals that were brought through town were good only for the head and hide.

One odd experience happened to a local nimrod this season. He knocked a buck down and after going up to him, found he had only shot off a horn, leaving the buck addled but unhurt. The poor condition of the animal caused the hunter to let him go to possibly better grazing. The following day following a very strenuous walk, he saw a buck up on top of a mountain and shot and killed him. When he climbed the mountain to retrieve his meat he found that he had shot and killed the buck he had knocked the horn off of the day before.

Some hunters were not so fortunate even as this really luckless hunter and failed to get a shot at a buck.

But then there will be another deer season, we hope, next November, and possibly more favorable reports from all nimrods.

So far as is known there were no hunting accidents in this area, nor any game violation charges filed.

RAIN COVERS ALL OF COUNTY MONDAY

Terrell County was among the favored spots in Texas receiving rainfall this week. The local gauge registered a total of .43 inches for both Sunday and Monday nights. This is the first recorded moisture since July 10 and 11 when a total of .62 inches was recorded for the two days.

Terrell County remains in the drought stricken area since the rain of this week was insufficient to bring out much brush this late in the year. Ranchmen, however, are very jubilant over the fact that some moisture fell to help to settle the dust and wash some of the dust from the weeds and grass that may yet be on their ranges.

The weather today (Wednesday) is cloudy and close to freezing temperature.

GOOD FOR THE COUNTRY

Congressman Wilbur Mills, of Arkansas' 2nd District, addressed our Kiwanis Club last week and he put his finger on an economic problem which could cause great hardship, the problem of unemployment, which he foresees when the huge government expenditures for armaments slacken off. He is one of our best-informed Congressmen on fiscal affairs due to his long service on the House Ways and Means Committee. He frankly said he did not have a quick and easy solution to offer for the problem.

Sometime in 1954, Congressman Mills observed, a substantial portion of the nation's steel production which now is going into armaments will be available for civilian markets, and, he expects, the civilian markets will not have sufficient demand to keep the steel mills operating at full capacity as they are now doing. Thus some of the steel mills will be obliged to cut their work force. Such unemployment in the basic steel industry could be dangerous to our economy if it should spread to other areas of the business world, the Congressman reasons.

At the present time 50 per cent of the nation's record-breaking steel production is going into the armament program. Steel production has been expanding gradually as needed over the past 50 years. The rate of expansion was sharply increased during World War II. A number of companies continued normal expansion after the war. Then came the Korean war, and expansion was speeded up again.

Some of the government executives and economists have constantly demanded a bigger expansion in the steel industry than has occurred, even threatening to build government steel plants. Steel industry leaders have resisted the "splurge" type of expansion, warning that it could lead to a far greater capacity than the nation normally could use. Their advice to the government armament bosses was to cut down on the volume of steel going into civilian channels, when war production is really urgent, instead of rushing through production expansion that might soon become idle and thus pose an economic problem. It was sound advice.

We certainly could expect an economic recession of dangerous potential if the entire multi-billion defense spending were to end all at once next January, or the next. As Congressman Mills pointed out, about $6-billion of the present $80-billion Federal budget is being spent on the Korean war and about $50-billion on getting ready for any possible future war. With such vast amounts in circulation, everybody temporarily benefits. If such spending were to be suddenly cut off, commerce would be staggered and everybody would feel the result.

On the other hand, if the big government spending could be reduced gradually over a period of years the transition from a war production economy to a peacetime one shouldn't cause a drastic change in the economy. We would feel it — yes. Money wouldn't be quite so plentiful. There would likely be some temporary unemployment and business dislocations. But if government under the new administration would give solid encouragement to private enterprise, and thus establish a promising outlook for anyone who wants to go into business or expand his present business, any slack in progress would be short-lived. The economy as a whole would be more sound and more dynamic than it has been in many years.

Government in America today is spending more than 32 per cent of all the money being spent. It this is an overwhelmingly decisive force in the commerce of our country. In 1930 less than 5 per cent of all the money being spent was being spent by the federal government and only about 12 per cent by county, state and federal governments combined. In 1940 about 11 per cent of the national income was being spent by the federal government and about 20 per cent by all three levels.

In some of the periods of this nation's soundest progress government at all levels spent less than 10 per cent of the national income. That's a goal that we the people of America might well seek — whittling government down to a point where in normal times, its expenditures do not exceed 10 per cent of the national income, 10 cents out of every dollar we earn. And the time to start whittling is now. We might not reach the 10 per cent goal but every step of the way would be for the good of the country.

credit for more sense than the hunters. Nevertheless, sportsmen continue to go out and try their skill, luck, brains, or what have you and they continue to come back without the deer who is probably laughing down his briscket at the hapless hunter that thought he could meet deer in his own country and in his own element and outsmart him.

But people are like some deer we know, they don't know when to let well-enough alone. They continue to come back for more and get a little braver, and then when they do, something happens.

Our sincere wish for all our readers is for a joyous Thanksgiving with their hearts full of thanks for all the benefits, privileges and blessings they have been able to enjoy.

Let us not forget that the turkey, roasted and ready to eat, resting on a platter below hands folded in prayer, is still the true symbol of Thanksgiving, rather than a mum, pennant and football.

Plans have been made to burn a revised edition of the Bible in a Rocky Mount, N.C., Baptist church as a protest against the new edition. How silly can people become?

This column does not question a minister, nor a congregation, having the right to reject or accept a translation of the Bible. That is a matter for each and every individual to decide for himself. So far as this column knows there is no opposition to the new Bible in Sanderson, but if there were any who still would prefer the King James version they still have access to it.

Some people may think that the King James Bible is the same as the scriptures carried around by Paul and the other preachers of his day.

If you don't want the new Bible that's your business, but if you burn a copy in your church you are a long way from the teachings of any Christian Bible.
